Netmen Drop UConn In YanCon Tourney Prep

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Highlighted by four three-set matches, the UMass tennis team knocked off UConn 6-3, in the closest match of the Redmen's season.

Yesterday afternoon's home contest began easily enough, with John Bloom continuing his hot streak, wiping out his opponent 6-2, 6-3. Then Jim Bornheim gave UMass its second point as Coach Kosakowski commented, "It was a good win for Jim, giving him two straight wins after the Rhode Island match."

Next on the agenda was fifth singles, the first of the many three set matches. Fred Braley rebounded strongly from a 6-4 first set defeat, then swept by Tiberio 6-2, 6-1. Alan Goldberg, back from picking potatoes for the National Guard, came up short in the second long match, as he took the first of three, only to lose 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Robert Webman gave the Redmen a key fourth point, dropping his foe 6-4, 4-6, 6-4. It was Webman's first big win, and a very important one.

As the singles concluded, Brass was downed in a tight three-setter 6-3, 5-7, 12-10, and UMass held a 4-2 lead that easily could have turned the other way around.

"For a while it looked like we would be down 4-2 before we began the doubles but fortunately Webman and Braley pulled their two long ones out," said Kosakowski.

Then the same beautiful story was Bloom and Coffin, as the undefeated second doubles team romped to victory 6-1, 6-0. Bloom and Coffin had decided their second straight match, and yesterday they were as powerful as ever. After second doubles had sewed it all up, Goldberg and Braley, at first doubles added a little something to the Redmen's win, capturing their match, 6-3, 8-6.

Kosakowski said, "It was a tough match, a little tougher than I was expecting, especially on hard court, a surface that UConn is not used to."

With the Huskies falling, UMass pushed its home mark to 5-0, as the hard courts near Bartlett seem to provide that little extra which spurs them to victory. Overall the Redmen are 6-2, and 1-1 in Conference play. The netmen are only one match away from their big weekend in Orono, Maine.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

A recent survey of new Michigan prison inmates, by psychologist Maurcie Keyser, showed a predominance under the zodiacal sign of Aquarius, followed by Capricorn and Taurus. At the other end of the scale the least number of new inmates was Aries, Dr. Keyser's initial survey covered only 2,000 prisoners. * * *

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may have to pay more for services than anticipated. Take this into consideration when planning budget! Family member should be made aware of requirements. Be diplomatic but frank.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your emotions may be clouding judgment. Applies especially where member of opposite sex is concerned. An agreement could be broken. Be ready, alert and mature.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Practical issues can be favorably settled. Key is willingness to live up to obligations. Handle responsibility. Not wise to delegate duties. Do what must be done in person.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You attract persons to you with their problems. Finish rather than begin projects. Be sympathetic to Aries individual, but don't get caught up in financial whirl.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't mix business with friendship. If you do, expect to pay a price. You gain most through new contacts. One who takes you for granted is due to make serious mistake.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some who should know better make foolish accusations. Maintain balance. Check records. Protect yourself in clinches. What appears adverse will boomerang in your favor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You gain only if you permit others to make their own mistakes. Means hold your fire. Some decisions require more time, study. One who should be an ally is confused. Act accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You enjoy a good scrap. You may get one during this period. Key is to maintain sense of proportion. Accent is on ability to agree to disagree. You gain needed information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21): Make concessions. Don't insist, force or cajole. Key is to have dialogue with one who holds opposing view. Express yourself, do so in intelligent, mature manner. No threats.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stress harmony in dealing with family members. Domestic area is highlighted. Your work, chores, the way you relate to associate-these also are emphasized. Tread lightly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Gain co-operation of mate, partner. Separate fact from illusion. Overcome tendency to be victim of wishful thinking. Young person makes unusual request. Take time to make careful decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check agreements, contracts. Don't give up something of value for nothing in return. Some may be poised to take advantage of any careless actions. Know this; respond accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have original ideas. Some take pleasure in challenging you, but you also enjoy meeting challenges. You are attractive to opposite sex. You will be doing more travelling than usual. Once you take a stand, you stick to course. You have many principles. You live up to them. You're not easiest person to get along with, but few can deny that you are a fascinating individual.

Tracksters Rout UConn, 85-69

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Led by junior Ron Harris and freshman Doug O'Connell who both turned in double victory performances, the UMass track team swept to a convincing 85-69 victory over previously undefeated UConn yesterday at the UMass Olympic track. The victory, before a crowd of some 300 people, snapped a Huskie dual meet win streak of some 40-off victories and sets the stage for a showdown between these two squads at the Conference championships.

The performances of Harris and O'Connell cannot be underestimated. Harris won the 100 and 220 yard dashes, and was a member of the winning 440 relay team. O'Connell had impressive victories in the mile and 2 mile. The Irosh's performance sparked the other distance men as he led a one-two-three finish in the two-mile and a one-two finish in the mile.

The performances of Harris and O'Connell seemed to offset the brilliant show put on by UConn's Ron Evans. Evans, a sophomore, won four events while piling up a total of 23 points.

The victory was especially satisfying for Coach O'Brien and the team as one of their major goals at the beginning of the season was to defeat UConn.

The throwers and the jumpers have carried the burden in scoring points since the beginning of the season. It was different yesterday as the runners provided the necessary scoring punch. The Redmen runners dominated the scoring as they totaled 65 of the team's 85 points, and allowed the opposition only 12 of a possible 77 points.

At one point in the meet the Redmen trailed the Huskies 38-39. This quickly changed as Harris led a sweep in the 100 to provide UMass with a 47-39 lead. The Redmen never surrendered the lead again, and finished with a solid 26 point victory.

The hurdlers and sprinters continued to excel as they took 33 out of a possible 36 points from the Huskies. The Redmen accomplished this feat with sweeps in the 100, 120 hurdles and the 440 intermediate hurdles.

Dave Evans brought the fans to life in the 880 as he roared back in the last quarter to overtake and soundly defeat UConn's Jim Verdon. Eddie Arcaro and Jim Graves also recorded victories in the shotput and 120 hurdles, respectively.

Ed Shaughnessy showed why UMass has a winning track team. Shaughnessy, even though suffering from a badly sprained ankle, felt that he owed the team something and competed in the meet. He responded with a victory in the triple jump, and second place in the high jump. It is this type of team spirit that has led to the tracksters' success.

Redman Nine At Dartmouth

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Preparation for this coming weekend will be the main objective when the UMass and Dartmouth baseball teams square off this afternoon at Hanover at 3 p.m.

Both teams have important weekend series coming up in their respective leagues with the Redmen hosting Maine on Friday and Saturday and the Indians hosting Harvard on Saturday and Sunday.

For this reason coach Bergquist and probably the Dartmouth coach will be concentrating on readying their teams while trying to win a ball game.

Two years ago UMass was the District One representative to the College World Series in Omaha, last year Dartmouth earned this honor and if both clubs are to get another crack at a repeat performance they have to win their leagues which at the moment presents problems for both squads.

First of all Dartmouth is 12-8 on the season and in fourth place in the strong Eastern League of which Harvard is the leader. The Indians have lost four games in the league which is surprising as they were expected to be at the top on the strength of one of the best pitching staffs in the nation spearheaded by Pete Broberg and Pete Janes.

On the mound this afternoon for Dartmouth will be Bill Saumseigle who is the number four Indian hurler, and if things are rolling along in the favor of the Indians the Redmen will most likely see Broberg or Janes for a couple of innings work to prepare for Harvard.

On its southern trip, Dartmouth tore the cover off the ball and had an astranomical team batting average, but since coming back the Indians' bats have not caused too many pitchers to shudder.

The top gun for the Indians is Frank Manninario, an all-District One choice last year and well on his way this year to repeating this honor.

For the Redmen, coach Bergquist plans to go with freshman Chip Baye for the first two innings, period. From there he will go with John Olsen, Lou Colabello or Tom Austin in any order. These pitchers have to be ready for Maine with the Redmen in hot pursuit of UConn.

Jack Bernardo and Tom White are ready due to their mound work against Boston University and in a long series like the Redmen played just a couple of weeks ago against Vermont the emphasis is on pitching.

Tom McDermott will handle the chores behind the plate. Dan Esposito, Jack Conroy, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau round out the infield with Brian Martin and Charlie Manley in the outfield with one position as yet to be decided upon.

BASELINE BANTOR—Palau leads the Redmen in hitting with a .405 mark...Manley is at .351, followed by McDermott at .314 and Conroy at .313...The team batting average has soared to .272 in the past few weeks...The pitching e.r.a. has risen a little to 1.04 but who can squawk about that.

Football Draft Held Today

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

The telephones are all set up, and today, in the offices of general managers John Hulecki and Dennis Keating, they'll be ringing virtually non-stop during the long-awaited UMass intrasquad football draft. That's right, a football draft. Just keep in mind the weather we've been having lately and then decide whether it's logical to hold a football draft in April.

Actually, the draft is part of the Bernie Dallas Day proceedings at Alumni Stadium, Saturday, May 1, a memorial day to a former Redman great who was killed in an automobile accident three years ago. The day, which also signifies the conclusion of spring football practice under new Head Coach Dick MacPherson, will include a pro clinic and autograph session with former UMass gridders now in the professional football ranks, and will be capped off by an intrasquad game at Alumni Stadium.

Included in the list of pros that will be here are Greg Landry, Detroit Lions; Milt Morin, Cleveland Browns; Ed Toner, New England Patriots; and Phil Vandersea, Green Bay Packers.

Getting back to the draft, the UMass squad has been divided between co-captains Hulecki and Keating who will be the acting general managers for their particular team.

Bill DeFlavio has been named personnel director for the Hulecki team, and Dick Cummings will be the team's head scout. For the Keating team, Bob Donlin will head player personnel, and Dennis Collins has been named head scout.

The head coach for Hulecki's team will be Jim Regan of the Springfield Daily News, while the head mentor of the Keating squad will be Al Whitmarsh of the Worcester Telegram. Whitmarsh, incidentally, is a last-minute replacement for Joe Concannon of the Boston Globe who ran into some draft problems early – he got called up by the National Guard.

After a quite long soul-searching session, Hulecki, DeFlavio, Cummings, and Coach Regan decided to forget about drafting by positions according to the team's needs, and will instead go for the biggest-name player available. "To hell with the positions," Regan said, "we need someone around whom we can build a team, someone that will pack the stands every week."

When asked how their team would handle this crucial draft, Keating said, "Donlin's and Collins's reports were so complicated that we decided to go after the biggest guys." Coach Whitmarsh had this to say, "Football? I thought it was going to be a baseball draft. I had my blank line-up card all ready, too..."

With two such divergent approaches to the draft, it will be interesting to see how it and the actual game turn out.

Stickers Top Adelphi In Rough Battle

By HOWIE BLOOM

Eighteen penalties were called, including three for unsportsmanlike conduct, as the UMass lacrosse team outfought Adelphi yesterday, 11-9. With the Gorillas and the Panthers playing like they both belonged back in the jungle, the Redmen won their second in a row in what started out as a lacrosse game and nearly turned into a rumble.

UMass dominated play in the first period, as it unleashed 13 shots on the visitor's goalie. The first to count was propelled by Redman John Nagle early in the quarter, with Charlie Hardy taking a pass behind the Adelphi net and feeding it right out front to the tall junior, who shot it home.

After the Panthers tied it up at 7:21, Andy Haugen to Terry Wallace, Paul Ritch put away his first of the game on a beautiful play at the left of the crease, unassisted.

The first power play goal of the day gave the home team a two goal lead. Fifteen seconds after an Adelphi player was sent off the field for a one minute stay in the penalty box, Lou Marinacci picked off an errant pass to boost the Redman's total to 3, the assist being credited to Steve Hershcopf.

With the Adelphians taking more shots at the Redmen players than at the Gorillas' goal, Dana Stone faked two Panthers out of their skins to score and the period ended with the Redmen leading 4-1. The second quarter began with the Adelphi coach mumbling about his inferior midfielders, but when it came to an end he was smiling again as the Long Islanders had cut the Gorillas' lead to two goals, 5-3.

The half ended with UMass being outshone on the field and in the ring, but the first 31 seconds of the third period found the Panthers taking a cat nap as the home team finally won a face-off and came straight downfield to complete a nifty pass play from Marinacci to Paul Ritch at 00:25. Six seconds later, it was Redmen 7, Adelphi 3 when Marinacci got the ball again off of a faceoff, raced down the right side of the field, and passed to Hardy behind the net, with the team scoring leader chucking it up the middle to Nagle, who finished the play.

At 4:27 of the period Phil Sheridan made one of the finest plays by a Redman lacrosser this season. Cradling the ball in his stick, Sheridan raced downfield, ran around in in back of the net, and from an almost impossible angle put it away unassisted.

Adelphi scored two minutes later to narrow the Redman lead to four.

Frowns turned to smiles with three minutes left in the period, as Chuck Arnone passed to Dan Mayer in front of the Redman net, who, after he had dropped one pass turned a bad play into a good one by pushing the ball past UMass goalie Bruce Crawford.

After a little more than a third of the final period had been played, the visitors had tied the score, 8-8, on three unassisted goals, by Dan Mayer, Dennis Naighton, and Andy Haugen, respectively.

Cries of anguish went up from the UMass bench as Adelphi kept the ball locked up in the Gorillas' half of the field, and after a Panther shot hit the post, UMass called timeout.

Timeouts work wonders for some teams, and UMass proved it's one of them as the home team fast breaked downfield after the minute was up and scored, Nagle from Hardy. Two minutes later the two of them combined again, and the score was 10-8.

The Panthers scored their ninth goal of the game at 13:14 of the period, and the home team braced itself for a Harvard-like finish.

Nagle had scored too many goals to let them go for nought, though, and at 14:47 he pulled in a pass from Paul Wickman and shot it by the Panther goalie for the fifth time in the game to ice the victory for the Redmen, 11-9.

Courage, Determination Needed To Fight Draft

As a draft counselor, I'm constantly confronted by young men who are trying to find an easy way out of the draft. Ways exist, but there is a real moral hassle caused by using that approach to help people "solve" their draft problems.

I am totally opposed to the military and every other system which uses violence. As a direct corallary to this, I am also irrevocably opposed to the draft. This is in part because the draft provides cannon fodder (my brothers) to the military. More importantly, it does a constant, more subtle violence to nearly everyone of draft age. It forces people to lie to and about themselves. It destroys their freedom of choice by setting up an option which is undesirable to most and intolerable to many. Thus, it channels people into courses they might not even consider otherwise.

So what is the problem? Simply that I don't want to continue helping the draft teach people not to confront themselves. This means that I rebel against helping people find an easy out. Instead, I prefer to help them find their way through the system in a way which preserves their personal integrity.

This means work. It's more work for me, and it's more work for the individual involved. But the real point that makes the extra work worth-while is political. As people come directly to grips with the systematic machinations which are working them over, they understand first the ones they are confronting, and, through them, many of the others which are controlling their lives. They also learn that the system can be beaten in a direct confrontation.

Thus, they learn more about themselves as individuals and more about the system as an oppressor. Each individual who finds the courage and the energy to confront the draft as an oppressive system weakens that system's ability to oppress others. Each individual who works through the hassles of applying for a conscientious objector's status weakens the ability of his board to ignore CO's, legitimizes the CO position for others, and bears personal, solitary witness to our government that war is wrong, and that he will not, under any circumstances, be forced or persuaded to lend support to it. The CO, more than any others, is responding to the plea for individual refusal to participate in war's policy--killing's voiced in Buffy Saint-Marie's UNIVERSAL SOLDIER.

People who find an easy out stop allowing themselves to feel the oppressiveness of the draft, and as a result leave their brothers standing alone. If, on the other hand, they confront the system and demand that it deal with them as human beings with individual lives to lead, the battle they face makes them aware that others are in the same boat and need the same help that they received.

Basically, I want to see myself out of a job as soon as possible. I am not concerned particularly with getting you out of the draft for the sake of getting you out of the draft. I am concerned with helping you free yourself from the draft so that you can begin to confront other systems with your humanity.

I am concerned with helping you free yourself from the draft so that you can help others free themselves, so you can help end the draft, so you can help end the war, and so you can help abolish the army.

That's my basic concern as a human being, and my bias as a draft counselor. Your responses to this, and your problems as registrants in the Selective Service System also concern me. I'd like to know what you think.

WARNING! Selective Service regulations change frequently. This material is intended to be used only as a guide to suggest various alternatives to the draft to you. To be sure that you qualify for a given deferment, or to get advice on what to do about your draft problem, consult a draft counselor.

Do not, under any circumstances, request advice from your local board or from a draft board clerk. The information they give is frequently wrong or misleading; at times your conversation might actually prejudice your chances of getting or keeping a deferment.

Registering For The Draft

According to law, every male is required to present himself at his friendly local draft board within five days after his 18th birthday. If possible, this should be the draft board responsible for the area in which he maintains his legal home address--usually the home of his parents. If he is out of the area and unable to get back in order to register, he should report to the nearest board. They will take the necessary information and send it to the proper board.

If you happen to be out of the country on your 18th birthday, you are still obligated to register. In order to do this you should visit the nearest U.S. consulate and obtain the required forms.

Failure to register is a violation of Selective Service law and carries a maximum sentence of up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. There are many ways you can get caught if you don't register, and you should consider these if you are planning to resist. The most likely is through High School graduation lists, which most draft boards collect and use to check their files. Employers frequently request your draft status before hiring you, and may check with your board to confirm the information you have given them. If your name isn't listed, there will be questions raised. Of course, if you get busted and don't have your draft card, the police may get curious.

At some boards, the clerk may give you a Classification Questionnaire (SSS Form 100) to fill out when you come in to register. By law, you have ten days to fill this form out and return it to the board. You have the right to take it home with you. Insist on this right. Do not let the clerk fill it out for you or force you to fill it out in the draft office. The answers to the questions on this form will strongly influence the board's decisions on any deferments you request later on so you should read them carefully and spend some time thinking about your answers. If at all possible, see a competent draft counselor before answering the questions, and discuss the questions with him.

Most of the questions on the Form 100 are related to possible deferments. Of particular importance are the questions dealing with Conscientious Objection, medical history, and dependents.

If you are opposed to participation in war in any form for reasons of moral, ethical, philosophical, or religious beliefs and training, sign the statement for Conscientious Objectors. (NOTE: The statement still refers only to religious beliefs, but the courts have expanded the definition of religion to include moral, ethical and philosophical beliefs as well, so don't let the wording throw you off.) If you sign this statement, the board will probably send you a CO form in the very near future, so get hold of the Handbook for Conscientious Objectors quickly and start preparing your answers.

If you have had any history of medical problems at all (i.e., ever seen a doctor, had an accident, been hospitalized, had an operation, etc.) at least mention it in the questions relating to your physical condition. It is not required that you include doctor's letters at this time, but if you can, do so. This will help start building a case history in your file of possible disqualifying conditions.

If you are contributing to the support of anyone, mention it in the appropriate questions. This can help start to build a case for a possible hardship deferment.

The important thing to remember is that your answers to these questions will be used by the board to determine your classification. In this case, everything you say, provided you say the right things, will be held in your favor.

* * * *

The board with which you register will be your board for the rest of your life. You do not change boards when you move. In some cases, if you no longer live in the area covered by your board, your papers will be forwarded to a closer board for processing. In this case, your papers will be returned to your local board for decisions. There is no way in which you can change boards.

If you register while you are living out of the country, you will be temporarily assigned to Board 100 in Washington, D.C. However, as soon as you return to the U.S., your file will be permanently transferred to the local board covering the area where you are residing.

What Are Your Options?

NON-REGISTRATION—Legally, you should register with the SSS within five days after your eighteenth birthday. Failure to do so carries a maximum sentence of 5 years, but in practice you are usually given the alternative of registering late. The advantage, of course, is that the SS does not have your name. Consider, however, that most schools automatically report your academic status to your local board, and if the board finds that you're not registered it could be a hassle. The complications are similar if you get busted for anything. Generally, non-registration is not a viable alternative for people moving within middle class institutions.

RESISTANCE—This includes resigning from the SSS by returning your draft card, refusing to report for induction, ripping off or trashing local and state boards, and similar methods of non-cooperation and interference. You should expect to get busted and sentences can range up to 5 years, so you should have a clear idea of exactly what you hope to accomplish, whether the resistance method you choose will achieve your goal, and whether it's worth trading time in jail for EMIGRATION—Canada and other countries have been reasonably friendly to American political refugees seeking escape from the draft or the armed forces. The moral, emotional, and financial questions raised by emigration are very complex, and we will devote considerable space to this in the future. However, one simple fact is that emigrating before you must report for induction is not a crime, and it leaves you free to return openly to the States to visit friends and family.

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Draft Counselor's Corner provides information about alternatives

STUDENT—At best a temporary deferment. As long as you are regularly enrolled as a full-time student and making satisfactory progress, you qualify for a I–S(H) for high school students or a II–S for college students deferment. You may retain this deferment until you either graduate, withdraw, or fall behind in your studies. Generally speaking, graduate students are no longer eligible for II–S deferments.

MEDICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL—There are two deferment classifications, I–Y and IV–F. The IV–F is a nearly permanent classification meaning that you are not qualified for any service. It is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain a IV–F. The I–Y means qualified for service only in time of war or national emergency. It is usually given subject to a six-month or annual review. Many people with medical histories which do not interfere with their daily lives qualify for I–Y because the rigors of military training and duty may aggravate the condition. If you think you may qualify for a I–Y consult your doctor and a qualified draft counselor. Many people have been able to "arrange" physical or psychological reasons for disqualification. This works, but it's not a good idea to rely on such outs without adequate preparation.

HARDSHIP—If being drafted would cause extreme economic, physical, or emotional hardship on dependents or other members of your family, you may qualify for a III–A. The fact that this deferment is not requested more frequently than it is points up the blatant racism of the SS in practice. I would guess that a large majority of correctly draftees qualify for III–A deferments. Draft boards, required by law to place a registrant in the lowest classification for which he qualifies, never follow proper procedure in determining hardship when it is indicated on the classification questionnaire.

SOLE SURVIVING SON—If you are the sole surviving son in your family, and your father or one of your brothers died as a

Follow The Right Steps For Deferment

I just finished counseling someone who has orders to report for induction tomorrow morning. Actually, I did not counsel as much as I sympathized. At this late date, most of his options are closed, and he will probably need a lawyer. This is tragic, because he has two or three valid deferments open to him, and if he had sought counseling earlier, he would have had relatively few problems.

There is a moral to this that is too frequently ignored, especially by students. The best time to start working on deferments is before they become necessary. The draft will not go away if you ignore it, and student deferments do not last forever.

A few words are therefore in order concerning the general steps one should follow in seeking a deferment.

First, see a qualified draft counselor. He or she will be able to give you directions best suited to your specific circumstances. This should be done as soon as you become aware that you might qualify for a deferment. Do not wait!

Many people with II—S student deferments are reluctant to request other deferments because they are afraid they will lose their student status. This is not true. The draft board must place you in the lowest-eligibility classification for which you qualify. If you have a II—S and feel that you are a conscientious objector, apply now. The board will not even act on it until your II—S expires, but having it on file will be further evidence of your sincerity.

Next, gather appropriate documentation to support your claim. For example, if you are seeking a medical deferment for migraine headaches get letters from any doctors who have treated you explaining your case fully. Be sure the doctor states that your ailment will be aggravated by military training, or that it will prevent you from adequately performing your duties. If you are seeking a hardship deferment, letters from clergymen, doctors, social workers, and others familiar with the case should be sought.

In all cases, have the letters sent to you so that you can forward them to the board. In this way, you can read the letters first to be certain that they are supportive of your claim.

Third, start a file of all correspondence you have with your board. Keep all letters you receive from the board with the envelopes in which they came. Place carbon copies or photocopies of all letters you send to the board. Send all mail to the board by certified mail, return receipt requested. They must sign for the letter, and you get a receipt to prove they got it. Staple the receipt to your copy, and place in your file.

Fourth, request the appropriate form to apply for your deferment. When it comes, answer the questions on a separate sheet of paper. Then consult your draft counselor about your answers before actually filling out the form. Be sure to carefully observe the time limit set for returning the form. It is measured from the date the board mailed it, not from the date you receive it.

Finally, send the form and the supporting letters you have compiled back to the board.

From this point on, the process will vary depending upon the deferment you are requesting and the particulars of your case. Frequently, the board will decide that it needs more information and will call you in for a personal appearance. If this should happen, consult your draft counselor again before making your appearance.

Remember, the Selective Service regulations provide deferments so that the system of obtaining cannon fodder will be more humane. If you qualify for a deferment, you have a legal right to it, and, perhaps, a moral obligation to seek it. If you're into a resistance bag, that's cool, but consider the possibility of trying to get your deferments first, and then resisting.

One final point. Many people qualify for more than one deferment. If you fall into this category, apply for all of them for which you can make a legitimate claim. The law says that you should notify your board of all changes in your circumstances which might effect your classification; requesting deferments is the way to do this.

Maybe You Should Get A I-Y Deferment

Probably the most commonly used and recognized deferment is the I-Y medical/psychological deferment. An understanding of what this deferment is and how to properly request it will make things considerably easier for those using this alternative.

The I-Y is given to those deemed unfit for military service except in time of declared war or national emergency. It is used both as a temporary deferment for those with short-term medical problems and as a semi-permanent classification for those with more serious difficulties.

The I-Y covers a wide range of infirmities. It is important to remember that the military regularly places people in situations which make extreme demands on their physical and emotional capabilities. This is the key to the medical deferment. If you have a problem which MAY be aggravated by extreme physical exertion or climatic conditions, or which could, at times, render you unable to perform your duties, then in all likelihood you qualify for a I-Y.

Let's consider some examples:

You have braces on your teeth. This isn't really a handicap unless you get too close to a girl who also wears braces. In a combat situation, however, the braces could possibly pull loose. The dangling pieces of metal could obviously become a distraction, and quite possibly a hazard.

You have a large scar as a result of an operation. You can go through your daily routine without any problems. But what happens if you have to face the rigorous daily routine of boot camp? If the scar tissue is weak, there's a possibility it might separate. This would obviously incapacitate you, and may make the army liable to be sued. They don't particularly want to be placed in such a situation.

You are allergic to insect bites. In most cases, you are able to avoid situations where you might be stung. And in any event, proper medication is probably not too far away. But in the jungles of Southeast Asia, for example, there seem to be more attracted to than repelled by most insect repellants. An insect bite could incapacitate or even kill you. Thus, if you have never had a serious reaction to any kind of insect bite or sting, and it required medical attention, you may be eligible for a I-Y.

Other things which may exclude you are severe allergies, any attack or asthma since your 12th birthday, migraines, high blood pressure, trick knees, elbows, shoulders, or other joints, very flat feet, some back problems, etc.

The list is nearly endless. Suffice it to say that many things which are merely annoyances, or less, in civilian life can become a matter of literal life or death in many military situations. If your health is going to be a real hassle for the army, the army doesn't want you. You can protest this all you want, but the draft laws clearly state that they cannot draft you if you have any of the ailments on the Surgeon General's list of deferable conditions (the list is available in the Draft Office in the Student Union). If your draft board makes a mistake and tries to draft you, you have the right to appeal. However, if you prepare carefully, it is likely that you will need to use the appeal process.

If you feel that you have medical or emotional problems, either current or old, consult a draft counselor. He or she will be able to give you advice suited to your particular situation. The following will provide a general guide, however. The most important deferments, is proper documentation. You should have letters from every doctor who has ever treated you for the ailment or condition for which you are seeking the deferment. The letters should state in both medical and lay terms the nature of the problem, how often the doctor has seen you, what treatment has been prescribed, and the prognosis for recovery. If at all possible, the letter should also state the doctor's belief that military training or duty either will or could possibly cause an aggravation or recurrence of the condition, and/or that the condition will or could possible interfere with your performance of duty.

If your doctor is a super-patriot and is reluctant to help prevent you from being forced into a situation where you might have to kill somebody, do not remind him that his Hippocratic Oath requires him to act to save lives. This might annoy him and complicate the matter unnecessarily. Instead, tell him that the draft board requested that you obtain letters pertaining to your physical condition to help them reach a decision in classifying you. This is not an untruth. In the order to report for a physical, you are told to bring such letters with you. You might also remind him that it costs the government a tremendous amount of money on men who will have to be discharged for medical reasons. They also will not want to pay you any disability pensions which you would be entitled to if you were damaged in any way while you were in the service.

Other documentation, such as X-rays, etc. should also be obtained if pertinent. You should keep copies of all documentation, of course.

Finally, you will probably have to report for a physical examination. Bring two copies of your documentation with you (but be sure that you still have the original at home in case both of these sets are misplaced.) When you are asked to turn in any doctor's letters give them one set and keep the other for safekeeping in case the first is accidentally mislaid in the circular file or elsewhere.

Too many people fail to take proper advantage of the deferment possibilities offered by the SSS. There is a tremendous range of physical disabilities which could gain you an opportunity to not kill people in Vietnam.

The physical demands which may be made on you by the military far exceed those made on you by normal, or even strenuous, civilian life. Basic training puts unusual stress on weak muscles, healed bone fractures, old operation scars, etc. Duty assignments can expose you to climatic conditions which might aggravate respiratory diseases or skin ailments. Strict military diets could expose you continually to foods which cause allegic reactions.

The list is mearly endless. The point to remember is that what might be simply a minor inconvenience-or no bother at all-could become a major disability to the military. They do not want to have to worry about giving you special duty assignments to cater to your allergies, or about your recurrent headaches, or dizzy spells keeping you out of the action at a crucial time, or a possible flareup of an old case of asthma, or similar problems. Above all else they don't want to have to pay you disability for an old injury or disease which military training or duty causes to return.

Documentation Key To Medical Deferments

I'll give you some idea of how to go use your ailments properly; i.e., to be sure that you succeed in convincing the AFEES (Armed Forces Entrance & Examining Station) personnel that you should be found unfit to kill people in order to preserve your nation's honor.

The key to the game is called documentation. The doctors, aides, and other official types at AFEES are harried, hassled, and frequently, hostile. These three b's are important because they frequently cause your examiners to miss fairly obvious deferable conditons. Therefore, it is to your definite advantage to have a letter from your doctor stating that your leg was amputated three years ago, and that the chances that it will grow back are minimal. He should also state that in his expert medical opinion he believes that your one-legged condition might possibly interfere with your performance of duty. Do not count on AFEES to either notice your condition or draw any conclusions themselves.

This is said only partly in jest. I know of one case where a young man who had one leg three inches shorter than the other and who was required to wear a brace passed his physical, was inducted into the Army, put through basic, sent for a year to Vietnam, and was finally given an honorable discharge. He did not want to go, but he had no idea of his rights to appeal AFEES findings. Simply, incredible things can and do happen, so it is best to take nothing for granted.

Okay. You're convinced that it's a good idea to have some documentation with you. Now, what form should it take?

The most obvious is a letter from your doctor -- or doctors, if more than one has treated you. The letter should state your condition in both medical and lay terminology. This is so you don't insult the rare educated AFEES doctors and don't go over the heads of the rest. The letter should also give the prognosis, state the treatment prescribed, and go on to the most important part. If there is any chance at all, no matter how remote, that the condition could either be aggravated by or interfere with basic training or the performance of duty, the doctor should so declare. The Army does not want people who are going to be on the sick rosters or who will have to be given a medical discharge, so it will try to turn you down if they have any indication that you might be one of these types.

You have your doctor's letters. The next step is to get additional documentation. Were x-rays taken to diagnose or confirm your condition? Get copies. Were you sent to a specialist? Get a letter from him. Were you hospitalized? Get a copy of the hospital report. Did you go to a clinic, an allergist, a shrink? Get letters.

If your condition is borderline, additional substantiation from people who know you might help. Do you sleepwalk, for instance? Your doctor probably won't be able to tell the AFEES anything about it, but your girlfriend, wife, roommate, or mother (or all of the above) might. Get a letter.

KEEP COPIES OF EVERYTHING! Keep one copy on file at home. Mail one copy to your board for inclusion in your file. Send it Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested. When the receipt comes back, staple it to your copy. This is proof that the board received the documentation.

When you go for your physical, take two copies of everything with you. Give them one copy at the beginning when they request doctors' letters; save the other set in case they misplace, eat, or otherwise lose the original.

Your letters serve the simple purpose of shouting in their ears, "Hey! Wait a minute. This guy might have something wrong with him.....Take a closer look." As AFEES personnel seem, traditionally to be somewhat hard-of-hearing, they will not hear you if you try to tell them youself. You must have the letters.

Remind your doctor, if he seems unwilling to write a letter, that it is his patriotic duty to help save the Army thousands of dollars in outfitting and training someone who will not meet up to their standards. By pointing out your condition to the army before they have inducted you, he is saving the American taxpayer money. He should get a medal from his local VFW.

For the past year, he has been writing the Draft Counselor's Corner column twice a week for the Mass. Daily Collegian. He also writes the weekly Culturnatives column dealing with cultural alternatives.

Many Are Blind To Their Own Hardships

Lately, I've had several people see me for counseling who qualify for hardship deferments, but who did not realize it. Students have been taught to consider themselves among the more privileged in our society, and therefore have a hard time viewing their economic situations realistically. But students often do qualify for such deferments.

Basically, the Hardship deferment is available to anybody who is contributing to the support of another person providing that two other conditions are met. First, the support must be such that its removal will cause a significant disruption in the life of the dependent. Second, it is also essential that no other person is able to fill the gap left if the supporter is drafted.

This can be more easily understood if I give a couple of examples. A man is married and has one young child. His wife is not working because she is taking care of the child. For some reason, neither his parents nor hers are able to (or willing) to contribute to her support. Thus, he is the sole source of income to the family.

If he is drafted, the family allotment check provided by the military would be insufficient to meet the expense of food, rent, clothes, medical needs, etc., for his wife and child. This is a classic case of hardship, and either he or his wife can request that he be given a III—A deferment.

In another instance, a man's father is out of work due to an injury, and he is sending money to his parents. This money, combined with workman's compensation, just barely meets his family's living expenses. They have no other children who can contribute, and no other sources of income. This, too is a financial hardship case, and either he or one of his parents can request a III—A deferment for him.

Any dependent can request this deferment for the registrant, or he can request it himself. A dependent is anyone to whom he might be contributing financial support. This can be any member (s) of his immediate family, but it can also be illegitimate children, fiance, girl friend, room-mate, friend, or the little old lady (or man) upstairs. The only qualification is that real financial support is being given, and that this can, in some way, be documented.

As with other requests for deferments, it is usually best to seek the advice and assistance of a draft counselor before requesting a hardship deferment in order to maintain his mother in her twenty-odd room mansion. (Or is the system really so corrupt that he got it because he was dating Linda (or was it Lucy?). There are two other hardship conditions which may qualify a registrant for a III—A deferment. These are emotional and physical dependencies.

If anyone is either emotionally or physically dependent upon you to the point that your absence would constitute a severe hardship, you may well qualify for this classification. These conditions are sometimes hard to document, but let's look at the general categories to give you an idea of the approach.

Let's say, for example, that your father is dead and your mother is an invalid. She is not bedridden, but her doctor has confined her to the house and forbidden her to do any hard work. If she is dependent upon you to do the housework or shopping or to take her to the doctor for checkups, you may have a hardship situation.

To document this case, you would first need to get a letter from her doctor stating that he has restricted her to the house, describing her condition. You should next get a letter from her stating her condition, that you have been performing certain chores for her, and that she would be unable to find (or, perhaps, pay) anyone else to do the work. Additional letters from people who are familiar with the circumstances (such as relatives, clergymen, family friends, social workers, etc.) would help strengthen the case.

Of course, if there are others who could do the work in your place, this would not constitute a hardship situation. It is important to note here that the dependent does not need to be a relative. If anyone is physically dependent upon you in any way for any reason, see a qualified draft counselor to discuss the situation. You may qualify for the III—A hardship deferment.

The emotional dependency is probably a slightly more common one. If your being drafted would cause somebody extreme emotional upset, you may qualify. A cautionary note: This does not mean that if your girl will cry when you get your notice, you don't have to go. The key word in this case is "extreme." Usually, this means that a nervous breakdown or some psychosomatic illness is likely to develop if you are forced to leave.

Again, this is not limited to members of the family. Documentation is necesary, however, and must establish two things. First, it must demonstrate that there is a true dependency relationship. Then you must prove that some extreme emotional reaction is likely to occur.

This is obviously easier to do if the individual has had some history of emotional problems and has been treated by a psychiatrist and/or hospitalized in the past.

If you feel that you may qualify for such a deferment, see a draft counselor. Both of these categories are tricky to document, and you should have competent advice.

Basics On The Lottery

Nobody, including the Selective Service system, seems to be very clear about the lottery system, but there are a few basic points to be made which will lead to at least an elemeptary understanding of what it's all about.

All males receive their lottery number during the calendar year in which they turn 19. In other words, if you were born in 1951, your lottery number was drawn in 1970; if you were born in 1952, you will get your lottery number in 1971, and so on. Everyone born before 1951 received their number in the drawing held in December 1969. The number you draw remains with you for the rest of your life, regardless of when you serve your eligibility year.

Currently, draft boards send our induction calls by a quota system, with a maximum limit placed on what lottery number can be included in the call. This may soon change to a system whereby a national call is issued according to lottery numbers. In other words, a call for a given month might draft everyone whose number is below 75, instead of the present method in which a board is instructed to call up to 25 men, provided they don't draft anybody with a number over 75. The difference is that the new system, if it is passed, will standardize the upper limit of the lottery number called.

The most difficult concept to understand is what constitutes one's eligibility year, and what happens afterwards.

Your eligibility year is the year in which you may be drafted. The earliest this can happen is the year you have your 20th birthday (the year after you receive your lottery number.) However, you must have either a I—A, a I—A—O, or a I—O classification to be included in the eligibility pool.

If you have any deferments, you are not eligible to be drafted, and will not be included in the pool. However you need only to be eligible on Dec. 31 to be included in the eligibility pool for a given year. Regardless of your lottery number, if you do not have a deferment on Dec. 31 and you are 20 or more years old, you have served your eligibility year.

So what happens now? That depends on your lottery number. If your number was reached by your board and you did not have a deferment at the time which you later lost, you are in a special circumstance which I will attempt to explain below. If your number was not reached at all, you served your prime eligibility year and on January 1 will be put in the 2nd priority pool. The only way you can be drafted from this group is if everyone in the new prime group is drafted. In that case, the board would go back a year and pick up where they left off. (Thus, you become less and less eligible as each year after your prime year goes by.)

If you are deferred during the year you turn 20, your prime eligibility year will be the first year in which you lose your deferment. You will retain your original lottery number, however.

Now for the special case described above. Say for example that your lottery number is 100. You have a deferment until the middle of November, when you lose it. By this time, your board is calling people with numbers up to 225. Due to procedural regulations and red tape, as well as standard inefficiency, January 1 rolls around without your board issuing you an induction order. You are NOT home free. You are put into a special Extended Priority Group. You are more eligible to be drafted than people in the new prime eligibility pool. (This is true for at least the first quarter of the year. Whether you continue in the EPG beyond the first quarter depends on your involvement with appeals. See a draft counselor, and pray.)

If all this is confusing, you probably understand it. If you need advice about your standing on the lottery, and you're unable to fit your situation easily into one of the situations described above, see a competent draft counselor. Don't guess, and don't trust a draft board clerk or member to know any more than you do. It's your life baby. Protect it.

Sole Surviving Son

There is one automatic deferment which many people know nothing about, the deferment for a sole surviving son. Anyone who meets the legal definition for this classification is automatically entitled to it, and usually meets no resistance from his draft board.

Simply, a sole surviving son is a registrant who has no living brothers, and who has some relative (immediate family) who has either been killed in a war or who has died of some war-related injury or disease.

To ease any possible confusion here, let's consider a few examples.

You are an only child, or your other siblings are all sisters. Your father was killed in action in the Korean Conflict (really a war, but it's bad PR to call it that.) You qualify for this deferment. If you have a living brother, you don't.

Both your parents are living, but your only brother was killed in Vietnam--blood brother, that is--the army does not believe that all men are brothers. You qualify.

Your sister (or mother) was in the WACs and died as a result of a plane crash while transferring to a new unit. If you have no living brothers, you quality.

Your father was injured in WW II, and the injuries left him in a weakened condition which eventually contributed to his death fifteen years later. Again, if you have no living brothers, you qualify.

Your brother died as the result of an automobile crash on base. He was on duty at the time. If you have no living brothers, you qualify.

Your only brother was killed in an accident while on leave. Your father is still living. You do not qualify. Your father died of a heart attack which was unrelated to any military injuries. You do not quality. Your father died of some war-related injury. You do qualify.

The picture should be clear. The qualifying factors are: 1. You may have no living brothers, and 2. Either your father, your mother, or a brother or sister must have died as a result of military-related injuries. The death need not be as a direct result of war, nor need to be immediate. If the death-causing injuries can be directly related to the military, you qualify for this deferment.

The documentation for this deferment would consist of a copy of the Death Certificate, a statement from the Veteran's Administration (preferably) or from a doctor testifying that the cause of death was related to a military injury or disease, and a statement certifying that you are the only surviving son in the family.

As with all other correspondence with your draft board, copies of the documents should be sent to the board by Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested, and the receipt should be stapled to your copy when it comes back. If you have any questions about this classification, you should consult a qualified draft counselor.

If You Choose Resistance

There are a lot of people into draft resistance these days. It's generally a heavy trip, but I have nothing but admiration for those who make an informed, well thought-out decision to resist. But I feel that it is essential that those considering resistance understand all of the ramifications of such a choice.

The first reason for caution is the legal penalties. Failure to comply with Selective Service regulations carries a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment and $10,000 fine. Although fines are rarely levied and the average sentence is about 3 1/2 years, you should probably make your decision based on the maximum possible penalty.

If you are considering resistance, it is probably a good idea to talk to some people who have already gone the resistance route so you can get some first-hand information about what goes down. If your trip is to go underground, some advice on what can get you busted or otherwise blow you, before you commit yourself, can help immeasurably.

Jail remains a very real possibility for resisters, and there are sources of information about what that trip is like. Jail is never a comfortable place to be, but if your head is really together about why you're there, it might be a little easier to take. (That's conjecture, by the way. So far, I've managed to avoid it). Two good books on the jail experience for draft resisters are available. One is We Won't Go by Alice Lynd. It's a compilation of writings by resisters in jail who feel they made the right choice in acting on their convictions and refusing to cooperate with a system they view as being immoral, coercive, and dehumanizing. The other is In The Service of Their Country. Written by a psychoanalyst who interviewed resisters in prison, the book shows more of what a bummer jail can be. The resisters seem less sure that they did the right thing, and considerably more uncomfortable with their jail experience. The difference seems to be in the reasons for resistance, the depth of thought that went into the decision, and the expected results of the action.

I would strongly urge that those considering some form of non-cooperation read both books.

My own feeling is that resistance as a way of avoiding the draft, with no other rationale, is a poor method to use. In the first place, the risks and discomfort are too high. Being underground places strong restrictions on your lifestyle for a period longer than the restrictions placed by the Army or the less real restrictions placed by alternative service. A jail sentence can keep you from ever getting some kind of jobs. Close friends and family may be watched by the Feds. All in all, it's a hassle.

Break Out!

We are manipulated by nearly everything with which we come in contact. The educational system teaches us to put our thoughts into terms and theories which fit and preferences of our teacher. Our jobs will tell us how to dress and cut our hair, what to buy, where to live, and what kind of car to drive. The draft tries to channel us into certain occupations. The list is endless.

For most of us, the first chance we have to taste anything like freedom and to demand that the systems deal with us as individuals instead of numbers, is the draft. We have it in our power to demand that the machine come to a full stop and listen to what we have to say. If we are opposed to war, we can say so directly to some of the warmakers. We can demand that they listen to and respond to our feelings. We can tie them up at the local level, the state level, and in the courts. We can make them deal with our real physical problems, our emotional dependencies, our financial hardships.

At no time is it necessary to depart from the truth about ourselves in order to get what we want. They have to deal with us. Stop. Me. No numbers. No IBM cards. No long assembly lines. Me. Not an average. Not an expediency. Not a compromise. Me. Not a cop-out. Not a hustle. No games. Stop, you motherfuckers. This is ME. And you've got to take the time to deal with it. I've bent, folded, stapled, AND mutilated your program card, and you've got to pull it and read--really read--the attached living human being.

Think about it. It might feel good to try dealing with an institution that way instead of letting it call your shots for you. You've been taught all your life to manipulate, evade, conform, do it the easy way. Now you can jump off that wagon, pick your own path, and force the system to move over for you.

Granted, it's just a little step, but what a great feeling. And if you do it once, maybe you can do it again. If you start expecting it, you start demanding it. That's the first step to breaking out of the rat-race.

In The Nation And The World

Ho Chi Minh Trail Bombed

Cong Press 'Cheap Offensive'

SAIGON (AP) — Enemy forces pressed what U.S. officials call "a cheap offensive" through a fourth day Tuesday. U.S. B52 jet bombers struck new blows at the Ho Chi Minh Trail and its outlets to try to stem the flow of supplies into South Vietnam.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong gunners launched small shelling attacks against allied airfields and other bases running almost the length of South Vietnam.

For the most part, the economy bombardments-only a few men and few rockets used for each-caused minor damage and handful of casualties.

The rocket, however, scored a direct hit on a fuel storage tank at the sprawling U.S. air base at Da Nang, 375 miles northeast of Saigon. 35,000 gallons of jet fuel stored in the tank and the fire spread to an aviation fuel tank and threatened a half-dozen others.

Among U.S. installations hit were Cam Ranh Air Base, 190 miles northeast of Saigon, and Camp Eagle, headquarters of the U.S. 101st Airborne Division near Hue in the north. A spokesman said some Americans were wounded at Cam Ranh Bay but only light damage was caused at Cmp Eagle.

The enemy is expected to keep up the shelling attacks through this week, partly to take advantage of moonless nights by firing in early morning darkness.

The shellings' major military effects appear to be terror and harassment.

The bombardments also give North Vietnam a cheap way to show it can hit when and where it wants. Hanoi also apparently hopes to encourage anti-war sentiment here and in the United States.

U.S. B52 bombers in two waves rained explosives on outlets of the Ho Chi Minh Trail in the northwestern corner of South Vietnam.

The raids along the Laos border, 16 and 17 miles northwest of Khe Sanh, were carried out as other B52s pounded the Ho Chi Minh Trail in southern Laos.

The B52 assault on the trail started the middle of last October and is the longest and heaviest aerial campaign of the Indochina war.

Elsewhere, only small and scattered ground fighting was reported.

Draft Cutbacks Announced Lowest In Seven Years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced Tuesday a cutback in the draft call for May and indicated total 1971 inductions will be the lowest in seven years.

Laird told a news conference the actions are possible "because of the progress we have made" in Vietnamizing the war and withdrawing U.S. troops.

The defense secretary in effect dropped the May call from 15,000 by combining it with June and setting a two-month quota totallying 20,000.

This, he indicated, means that about 10,000 youths will be called up in May and another 10,000 in June.

This will be a sharp drop from the 17,000-a-month draft quotas in the January-April period, totalling 68,000 men.

Projecting ahead for the rest of this year, Laird said, "I would estimate the draft calls would not exceed the 10,000 figure for any month."

He hinted the calls may fall below that average and that the final draft figure for 1971 might be around 142,000. That would be some 21,500 below last year and the lowest total since the 112,500 in 1964, the year before the United States got deeply into the Vietnam War.

Laird's news conference was unannounced in advance and came amid fresh antiwar demonstrations in the capital, suggesting it might have been intended to take some of the bite out of those demonstrations.

On other subjects, Laird said:

—The Russians are "going ahead with a sophisticated ABM system." The Soviets have resumed construction of their antimissile defenses in the Moscow area, he said, expanding the system beyond four sites with 64 defensive missile launchers toward an eight-site shield with 128 defensive missiles designed to guard the Soviet capital area from U.S. long-range missiles.

—"There is some evidence that they the Russians have gone forward" with installing multiple warheads on their SS9 missiles, but "I can't state positively" whether they can be aimed independently at separate targets or whether they are earlier generation multiple warheads which are fired shotgun fashion without separate aiming.

—He can't tell yet for certain whether a new Soviet missile deployment, spotted within recent months, is "a brand new missile or a modified SS9."

—If the Russians continued to move ahead in their missile development without progress in the Strategic Arms Limitation negotiations "I would not hesitate to go to Congress to ask for additional funds" to offset the Russian moves with additional U.S. nuclear weaponry.

Rogers Backs China Entry Into U.N.

LONDON (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers has pledged U.S. backing for a constructive role by Red China in Asia. He indicated the United States will decide within about four weeks on how to handle the issue of Chinese representation in the United Nations.

The secretary told the opening session of a two-day conference of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization Tuesday that his government welcomes Peking's overture for a new relationship.

Later, in private, he discussed the China question with Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home of Britain, a country that recognized the Peking government in 1950.

Rogers gave Douglas-Home to understand Washington will make up its mind finally on the matter of Chinese representation in the United Nations within the next four weeks or so, informants said.

The issue for years has been a source of disagreement between London and Washington.

Britain wants Peking to take over China's seat from Nationalist China even though in the past it has backed American demands for a two-third General Assembly margin on the question.

The Nixon administration has displayed readiness to support Peking's entry provided Nationalist Chinese on Formosa remain a member of the world body.

This "Two-China policy," urged again Monday by a presidential commission under Henry Cabot Lodge, is unacceptable to the Chinese Communist and the Nationalist Chinese.

China's new diplomatic posture dominated the exchanges within SEATO.

The alliance was formed by eight nations 17 years ago as a shield against the real or imagined threats and thrusts from Peking. Since then things have changed.

France, no longer frightened of the Chinese, is boycotting the meeting. Pakistan, friendly to Peking, is being represented only by an observer.

Rogers, as if to reassure his listeners that the Nixon administration is not exactly starryeyed about China's Ping-Pong diplomacy, Rogers served notice the U.S. commitment to SEATO and its members will go on. This a commitment to defend any member that becomes the victim of aggression.

Vets Tell Congress Of Routine Atrocities

WASHINGTON (AP)—Volunteer witnesses told an informal congressional panel Tuesday that while serving as military interrogators they routinely used electrical telephone hookups and helicopter drops to torture and kill Vietnamese prisoners.

One Army intelligence specialist said the pistol slaying of his Chinese interpreter was defended by a superior who said, "She was just a slope anyway," meaning she was an Asiatic.

The unsworn testimony of five Vietnam veterans was offered before an unofficial war crimes inquiry headed by Rep. Ronald Dellums, D—Calif. which has no official standing and no subpoena power.

They said Americans who dealt with prisoners or Vietnamese civilians were encouraged to use any degree of torture just so intelligence information resulted.

Michael Uhl, a former lieutenant who supervised teams of questioners said the unspoken rule was, "I don't care how you get the information, just so you get it."

Uhl said he served with the American Division in 1968 when he witnessed Vietnamese civilians wired up to electrical field telephones.

In one case, he said, the "crank was turned for so long," that a woman under interrogation menstruated profusely.

Another witness, Kenneth B. Osborn, 25, said he was trained at Ft. Holabird, Md., as a spy handler.

In Vietnam in the spring of 1968, Osborn said he twice traveled on U.S. Marine helicopters when Vietnamese were dropped to their deaths to frighten other suspects aboard into telling all they knew about enemy activities.

Osborn, an enlisted man who posed as a civilian in Vietnam, said his female Chinese interpreter drew the wrath of an Army captain a member of the 525th Military Intelligence Group.

He said the captain shot her in the neck and left the girl in his back yard, saying, he believed she knew too much about American intelligence activities.

"She was just slope anyway," Osborne quoted the captain as saying. "What difference did it make anyway."

A staff spokesman said it has not been decided whether the panel will prepare a formal congressional report.

Dellums said he has tried unsuccessfully to get regular committees like Armed Services to probe alleged Indochina war atrocities.

Antiwar Sit-in In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP)—An estimated 150 antiwar demonstrators blocked the doors of Selective Service headquarters here Tuesday, preventing about a dozen workers from returning after lunch.

Some employees, however, climbed over the demonstrators to enter the building and were not stopped.

Court Decision Raises CO Queries

By now, you've probably heard about the Supreme Court decision saying that there can be no "selective" conscientious objectors. This does not in any way change previous policies with regard to the I-0 and I-A-0 classifications. The case in question was seeking to expand the working definition of conscientious objection, and the court simply (but unfortunately) refused to accept that someone can be morally opposed to a particular war without being opposed to participation in all wars.

In essence, anybody who was a CO before this ruling still qualifies. To reassure those of you who were considering applying for a CO, let me briefly explain the qualifications for the classification.

A Conscientious Objector is defined by law as a man who is opposed to participation in war in any form by reason of sincerely held religious beliefs and training. Some definitions are in order here.

The Supreme Court ruled last summer in the Welsh decision that the terms "religious training and belief" include moral, ethical, and philosophical beliefs, so long as they are not purely personal, and providing the beliefs have come about as a result of training similar in rigor to traditional religious training, and that they occupy a place in the person's life similar to that of traditional religious beliefs.

Training may be formal education, such as that you receive from parents, or experimential, such as that you get from reading, movies which may have influenced you, or significant things you have seen or done.

A belief is sincerely held if it operates as a major guiding factor in your life. In other words, if you believe that you should do unto others as you would have them do unto you, and try to live your life in this manner, then that is a sincerely held belief which could easily form the basis for a successful CO claim. Obviously, only you can decide what operates as a major guiding force in your life. If you don't know, isn't it time you thought about it? If you apply for a CO, you will almost inevitably have to confront this issue in yourself. It can be more constructive than a sensitivity group.

"Participation" is a key word. The law does not require that you be opposed to wars; it says that you must be opposed to participation in wars. That means that your beliefs require that you do not join in the fun and frolic of killing your fellow human beings or destroying land or killing trees or whatever it is that you are opposed to that makes you a CO.

Another tricky phrase is "war in any form". This means any war of which you can conceive. The board cannot require you to say what you would do in a hypothetical or historical situation. World War II can never happen again, so it is irrelevant to speculate on what you might have done in that war. You can never know what you would have done for sure, and you don't have to. If you cannot seriously conceive of the U.S. being invaded, you do not have to speculate on what you would do if such a situation occurs. You need object only to wars with which you feel you might be confronted.

If you either know or think that you are a CO, consult a draft counselor before you notify your board. The counselor will advise you of the best ways to proceed to seek the 1-0 or 1-A-0 classification.

A CO Need Only Prefer Not To Kill

You do not--repeat, do not--have to be a pacifist or a believer in nonviolence in order to be a conscientious objector.

If, given a choice, you would prefer not to kill people or be put in a situation where you might have to kill in self-defense, you are probably a CO. That is the simplest initial determining factor. All else is amplification and clarification.

You may be a CO even if you would kill in self-defense. What you would have to demonstrate is that you prefer not to kill, and would take steps to avoid going to places where there is a strong likelikhood that you might be attached in such a way that killing would be the only possible means of defense.

For example, if you knew that you would have to shoot your way through the tunnel to get into Southwest (assuming for the moment that anyone would want to get to Southwest), you would probably try to find some other route. This would probably be true even if you had brushed your teeth with Colgate that morning and still had the protection of Gardol's invisible shield, therefore not being in any direct personal danger. The idea is that you don't have overwhelming urge to kill fellow human beings.

Call Vietnam the tunnel to Southwest. After all, we've been hearing about the light at the end of it for about seven years. You know that if you go there people will be shooting at you. (There is, according to secret documents captured from the Pentagon, a war going on there, and rumor has it that people shoot at people during wars.) Thus, it is quite possible that you might be called upon to kill a so-called enemy in self defense-if you allow yourself to be sent there in the first place.

Okay. You don't want to go there because human beings are shooting at other human beings. (Unlike the deer season, which only lasts a week, the U.S. has helped create a constant open season on humanity in Nam.) Part of why could be that you don't want to have to kill somebody to stop him from killing you, and not being in a place where that somebody can kill you seems like a sensible idea.

If this rationale seems even fairly logical, and you really think that there might be some value to human life other than its use as a bullet-stopper, you are on your way to being a CO. Visit a draft counselor and rap a little, or go to the Draft Counseling Services' group CO counseling in 811 Campus Center any Monday or Tuesday from 1:30 to 4:30. Christmas is coming. What better time to think about peace on earth through goodwill to all men. Dig it.

Think CO

If you are opposed to the war against Vietnam, or opposed to the draft, or opposed to killing or opposed to war in general, you should consider the possibility that you may qualify for classification as Conscientious Objector. This is especially true if you have no other legal alternative to serving in the armed forces, but should be considered even if you qualify for some other deferment.

The only way to tell for sure that you are or are not a CO is to consult a qualified draft counselor. It is not true that you must be a pacifist, a Quaker, a regular church-goer, or sure that you would not have fought in World War II to be a Conscientious Objector. So don't simply assume that you are not a CO and stop thinking about it. Talk to a draft counselor. Excellent advice may be obtained from Mrs. Frances Crowe of Northampton, one of the best counselors in New England. Her phone number is 584-8975. Or you can visit Draft Counseling Services on this campus in 418E on the second floor of the Student Union. Or stop in at the group CO counseling sessions in 805 CC on Monday and Thursday afternoons.

I feel that it is important for a Conscientious Objector seek recognition of his status even if he is entitled to other deferments. The other deferments may be obtained at a later date, and there are both personal and political points to be made by seeking a 1—O.

The political points are simple. First, you are declaring yourself and making a statement about your personal beliefs. You are directly confronting the members of your local board with moral questions about what they are doing. (The effectiveness of this illustrated by the fact that draft board member resignations have increased over the past two or three years in direct proportion to the increase in CO applications. It seems obvious that these men are being faced with moral decisions which they had not previously considered. This puts a great deal of internal pressure on the system.)

Each request for CO status legitimizes the position in the eyes of the board. Four years ago a Conscientious Objector was a freak--a board dealt with only a handful each year. Now, boards must process several applications at each monthly meeting. This has helped move the board to view the CO as the genuine classification it is. Since a major determining factor for a 1—O is sincerity, a request for a 1—O from somebody who already has some other "out" carries a great deal of weight with board members. Thus, if you are out of the draft because of a high lottery number but request a 1—O anyway, it may make it easier for the guy behind you, who has no other outs at all to get recognition as a CO.

The final political plus is that having received a 1—O, you almost automatically become a missionary. Too many people never try for a 1—O because they think it's impossible to get. When you get into a rap about the draft and mention that you have a 1—O, it will show others that it is possible to obtain and maybe encourage them to seek it themselves, thus putting more pressure on the draft and starting a whole new cycle.

The personal plusses may be even more important. For most people, it requires a great deal of introspective thought to answer the questions on the CO form. This usually means that for the first time you are really considering what your values are, where you got them, how they affect you, and where they are leading you. It's a trip into self-understanding. Almost everyone I've seen go through the CO process comes out with greater selfawareness and confidence, because he has forced himself to question who he is, where he's going, and why, and for the first time has some semi-solid answers for himself.

So think about it. It takes time and effort, and can be one of the most frustrating experiences you've ever had. But the advantages, even if I am guilty of romanticizing them a bit, are real. Can you dig it?

Some CO's Take Noncombatant Duty

Some Conscientious Objectors are willing to enter the military on the grounds that they do not have to train with or carry arms. They feel able to accept noncombatant military duty. Frequently, they are assigned to the medical corps, but they could be assigned to jobs such as KP, motor pools, desk jobs, etc. Those COs willing to do noncombatant service are classified 1-A-O.

The criteria for this classification are basically the same as the criteria for the 1—O. You must still be opposed to participation in war for reasons of moral, ethical, or religious beliefs and training. The primary difference is that you do not consider noncombatant jobs to be part of the war activities.

Obviously, this is usually a purely subjective decision. In theory, boards should use the same standards for each classification. In practice, though, it is usually easier to get a 1—A—O because boards are less reluctant to hand them out. The true determining factor is which classification you request.

Boards are not supposed to offer the 1—A—O as a compromise to a registrant seeking a 1—O. If you qualify for one you qualify for the other as well.

There are some important questions that you should consider if you are thinking of seeking this classification. First, you should read the material on Conscientious Objection in general. Then determine how you relate your feelings about war and killing to some of the following issues:

Do you view the military as a unit" If you do, it may be difficult for you to isolate your noncombatant job from the overall mission of the military. Decide if it would bother you to be cutting orders to send someone else to Vietnam. Would working in a stockroom sending material to a combat area be significantly different from using that material in a combat area, according to your morality? Do you feel that working in a military kitchen enables the army to send somebody else into combat in your place? How do you relate to this?

The Army Field Manual for the Medical Corps states that the purpose of the Corps is to help further the mission of the military. Do you want to help further that mission? Part of the function of the medics is to help bolster the morale of the troops (by reassuring them that if they are wounded they will receive good medical attention) so that they will fight better. In some cases, particularly in combat situations, a medic may be ordered to treat the less seriously wounded first, letting others wait, so that they can get back into the battle. You have to decide how you would relate to these situations either when you are confronted with them or beforehand.

The advantages of this position are strongest, I think, for those who are trying to work out some kind of a compromise between a feeling that war is wrong and a sense that if others must risk their lives, then they must do so as well. Noncombatants are considered to be members of the military, are entitled to all GI benefits, and receive an honorable discharge if they keep out of trouble.

Canada May Not Be The Answer

The border to Canada is currently pretty open to U.S. tourists, draft avoiders and evaders, and deserters. (Deserters are men who have resigned from the Armed Forces before their contracts have expired). Thus, it is physically an easy matter to move there. However, this has created a large population of immigrants--people without jobs, without direction, without any definite future.

This has created a number of problems for the Canadian government. Grass is hard to get in Canada, so many are into speed, coke, smack, and other drugs. Thus, the crime rate is extremely high in the "American ghettoes" of Canada as the jobless try to rip off enough money to support their habits. This is slowly creating a tide of pressure against young Americans in Canada. The danger of this is that if the border tightens up, the first to suffer will probably be those who most desperately need to get in-the deserters and others who have the MPs and FBI on their tails.

There is also a serious unemployment problem in Canada. Simply, this means that there are no jobs. If you go to Canada, you will be a foreigner. Job preference in Canada is the same as here -- natives first, outsiders last. Finding work will be an incredible hassle. No work means that finding food, clothes, and a place to crash will be an even more incredible hassle. And every job or crash pad you take up takes one away from a brother who may be there as an absolute last resort.

Most U.S. immigrants go through a period of severe cultural shock in Canada. The concept of being a foreigner, an outsider, is impossible to conceptualize or prepare yourself for. Most go into a state of depression and inactivity which lasts for more than six months. This is a nearly universal happening for newcomers to Canada. As a result, the suicide rate among American expatriates is extremely high.

The problems are reaching such staggering proportions that anti-war groups in Canada which were set up to counsel young Americans who were coming to Canada to get out of the draft are now actively encouraging people to stay away except as a last resort. They resent their time being taken up by people who are on romantic flights from reality when there are desperate brothers who need help. They resent their funds and homes being used by people who could be working to oppose the draft until the shit really starts to come down when some brothers are already being buried in the shitslide.

So dig on it, people. Do you have to go to Canada, or is it simply an easy out? Are you making it harder for someone whose only other alternatives are jail or Nam, and he has to make his choice last week? The Revolution is all about humanity, man. Which side are you on?

INSTRUCTIONS

A registrant who claims to be a conscientious objector shall offer information in substantiation of his claim on this special form which, when filed, shall become a part of his Classification Questionnaire (SSS Form 100).

Section 6(j) of the Military Selective Service Act of 1967 provides: "Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the Armed Forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. As used in this subsection, the term 'religious training and belief' does not include essentially political, sociological, or philosophical views, or a merely personal moral code. Any person claiming exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the Armed Forces under this title, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of such induction, be ordered by his local board, subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe, to perform for a period equal to the period prescribed in section 4(b) such civilian work contributing to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest as the local board pursuant to Presidential regulations may deem appropriate and any such person who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any such order from his local board shall be deemed, for the purposes of section 12 of this title, to have knowingly failed or neglected to perform a duty required of him under this title."

Series I.—CLAIM FOR EXEMPTION

INSTRUCTIONS.—The registrant should sign his name to either statement A or B in this series. If he cannot sign either one, he must indicate why.

A I am, by reason of my religious training and belief, conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. I, therefore, claim exemption from combatant training and service in the Armed Forces, but am prepared to serve in a noncombatant capacity, if called. (Registrants granted this status are classified 1-A-O.)

Series II.—RELIGIOUS TRAINING AND BELIEF

INSTRUCTIONS.—If more space is needed use extra sheets of paper.

1. Describe the nature of your belief which is the basis of your claim and state why you consider it to be based on religious training and belief.

2. Explain how, when and from whom or from what source you received the religious training and acquired the religious belief which is the basis of your claim. (Include here, where applicable, such information as religion of parents and other members of family; childhood religious training; religious and general education; experiences at school and college; organizational memberships and affiliations; books and other readings which influenced you; association with clergymen, teachers, advisers or other individuals which affected you; and any other material which will help give the local board the fullest possible picture of how your beliefs developed.)

3. To what extent does your religious training and belief restrict you from ministering to the sick and injured, either civilian or military, or from serving in the Armed Forces as a noncombatant without weapons?

TROOP WITHDRAWAL DRAFT CALLS—Chart shows the number of US troops in South Vietnam at the beginning of January, 1969, and the total troop strength expected there by May 1, 1971, a goal set in the last troop withdrawal program by President Nixon. Bottom of chart shows total men drafted by month, for same period, including 15,000 men for month of May, 1971.

GRAPH SHOWS for each month the average of that month's "assigned draft numbers." The expected average for a given month is 183.5. It was also expected that six months would have averages above 183.5 and that six months would have averages below 183.5. The surprising factor is that the six months with means higher than 183.5 all are grouped together. This graph is the result of a study done by some MIT students after the first lottery.

Woman Senators Caucus

Senate Officers Announce Fast

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The newly elected Student Senate officers were sworn into office last night at a meeting which included the officers' announcement that they will be fasting during the May Day protests next week. The Senate also passed legislation support to do the following: a University strike on May 5, change referendum voting procedures, and urge the Administration to adopt a 13-week semester calendar for next fall. The meeting also included a 10-minute walkout by all female Senators in protest of societal treatment of women.

Immediately upon being sworn into office by outgoing President Glenn Elters, President Lee Sandwen announced that he and the three other officers have agreed to fast for five days May 1-5, as a moral commitment to show where they stand in opposition to the war in Vietnam.

Sandwen called the fast "an act of both conscience and leadership. We must continue to symbolically or physically oppose the genocide waged in our name." Administrative Vice President Larry Ladd added: "Our complacency is our crime. A Senate officer has a responsibility to see beyond structures, bylaws, and endless elocution. To me, this is a personal witness for the fundamental human values which this nation violates systematically."

Treasurer Richard Verrochi explained the choice of a fast as the means of protest: "Our brothers and sisters in Vietnam are suffering from hunger and deprivation. Perhaps if we experience some semblance of the suffering in Vietnam, we can come to realize even more the pain which the United States has inflicted in Asia."

15 Senators have pledged to join in the fast. Participants pledge to take liquids, only, during the five day fast. The officers hope to get campus-wide support in the protest.

Also in line with the May protests, the Senate declared May 5 a day of mourning for the six students who died last May at Kent State University and Jackson State College at demonstrations during the student strike. The Senate also urged the entire University to participate in a strike against all normal business on May 5. This would be part of a nationwide strike on that day in support of total and immediate withdrawal from Indochina, of a minimum guaranteed annual income of $6500, and of the release of all political prisoners.

Student referendum votes will now be run in dormitories instead of the Student Union, as the result of a bylaw change made by the Senate last night. The Senate made one other significant change in referendum procedures by setting a minimum percentage of the student population which must vote on any referendum for the vote to be binding on the Senate.

The bylaws will now read that if less than 25% of the student body votes to overturn Senate legislation, the legislation is overturned, but the Senate can pass the legislation again right away if it wants, with only a slight change in it. The bylaws had made a referendum vote binding on the Senate for two years afterwards. Another change was made so that even if more than 25% of the student body votes, the decision will be binding on the Senate only until the next annual general Senate election is held.

Former President Elters who urged that these changes be made, foresees no trouble in getting 25% of the student body to vote, now that referenda are to be held in dormitories. (Commuters will still vote in a central location on campus.)

These referendum changes go into effect immediately. The first referendum to be held under them will be next Thursday, May 6. Its two questions ask whether Senate officers should be paid, and if next year's should be paid by the following rate: President $125/month, and the two Vice Presidents and Treasureer $100/month.

The Senate voted overwhelmingly to urge the Administration to implement the new academic calendar recently passed by the Faculty Senate in the year 71-72, one year earlier than the faculty recommended. This calendar's major innovation is a 13-week Fall semester which begins the first week of September, with exams ending before Christmas. This would make intersession a month-long break.

The woman Senators totally disrupted last night's meeting for 10 minutes when they walked out to caucus in the hallway outside the Senate chambers. Senator Patty Asack, leader of the walkout, explained that the women's action was caused by a feeling that "We never know what's happening in the Senate." She said that the woman Senators are not now serving responsibly, but that they intend to caucus and work together to start building up their participation to a more responsible level.

Senator Asack placed the blame for the women's inadequacy in the way that they are brought up in a society which expects submission of its females. She said that this upbringing breeds fear to speak up at Senate meetings because they have no self-confidence and are always afraid of being "shot down" by their male counterparts. She said that the girls seem to always vote the way the males tell them to because they have always been taught to follow the men's leadership.

The situation was brought to a head last night when the women observed that no females were elected to office last week and that none would probably be appointed to the chairmanship of a standing committee. The women plan to caucus in the future to build up solidarity among themselves. Senator Asack says that they intend to build up more power and to increase their say so that they can become more responsible.

Committee Seeks Support Of Cairo, Illinois Blacks

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

The Committee for Peace in Cairo, Illinois, called for 5-College support of the residents of Cairo in their boycott of the city's white merchants and fight against alleged economic exploitation and suppression at a meeting last night in the Black Cultural in Mills House.

Several members of the 5-College Committee for Peace in Cairo who attended a conference in Carbondale and Cairo, Ill. told the audience of approximately 30 that a national conspiracy of local, state, and Federal government action was tying the black people of the area to work at menial jobs for low wages through the welfare system, and the "whitehat" vigilante groups had met any black attempts to open businesses or gain better jobs with counter-demonstrations, violence, and bombings.

They said that Cairo is in the middle of an economic crisis stemming largely from a black boycott of white owned businesses in the city. The town, which had a population of 24,000 in 1940, shrank to 12,000 in 1969 and to a current 6,000; and leads the nation in substandard housing and has one of the highest unemployment rates in the country, they added.

The current conflict started, they reported, when younger blacks started to desegregate the town's schools and swimming pools. This led to resistance from "local rascist elements", which intensified after the black boycott started and included "machine-gun cross fire of a black housing project for 151 nights." When the blacks called for police protection, the speakers charged the police attacked the people.

They also reported that many companies which had branches in the city and hired black people, such as Sears Roebuck and the Singer Co. were fire-bombed and driven out of town. Black owned businesses such as grocery stores and car washes were also "bricked and firebombed."

Finally, the residents organized to form the Black United Front, which the speakers said includes at least half of the city's black population, to resist in an organized way the elements seeking to retain the status quo and suppress the black population. The successful boycott of the area white merchants was the result of the action.

The "spiritual uplifting" and unity of the people of Cairo impressed the group, which said that Cairo "is a model for what every black and poor community in the nation can do if it unifies and gets to work," and called for local support in the form of food, clothing, medical supplies, and money to help the community continue it's action.

The committee in the local area is composed of five groups: Research, to get more facts about the situation, Publicity, to distribute these facts and make known a situation that they felt the media has ignored. Activities to coordinate all their actions, Long Range Planning, to organize another trip to Cairo, and Soliciting, to gather the supplies to send to Cairo.

The Committee for Peace is Cairo, will continue to exist,they said, until their four goals of national publicity, increased community control in Cairo, federal aid, and a Congressional investigation of the situation are met.

"We don't care where we get our support," they concluded. "The people in Cairo are standing up against a rascist society, and they need our help and we need your help."

At yesterday's meeting, the steering committee of the SMC voted to endorse the struggle of the Black United Front of Cairo, Illinois.

The reasons for the endorsement were explained by an SMC spokesman: "By supporting the Black United Front, the SMC is showing solidarity with the Movement under repression.

"The Black United Front is, among other things, an anti-war organization, one of the original sponsors of the April 24 demonstration in Washington and a member of the National Peace Action Coalition.

"This doesn't change the fundamental one-issue anti-war approach of the Mobe, but we find it very important that all segments of the Movement unite in the support of any sections under repression."

Administration Meets Orchard Hill Community

By JIM GOLDMAN
MDC Staff

Stating than an Orchard Hill modular classroom-office facility was a number one priority, Jack Littlefield, Director of Planning, yesterday assured a group of Orchard Hill student's and faculty members that the $250,000 building was part of a $1.8 million capital expenditure request in next year's budget.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo, the Vice-Chancellors, and other members of the administration and faculty discussed the demand submitted by Orchard Hill two weeks ago with representatives of the Orchard Hill community.

Littlefield told the group that the proposed 7300 square foot building would consist of air-conditioned, carpeted classrooms and offices. When asked about the previously proposed multi-purpose cafeteria, Littlefield replied that type of building would cost over $2 million.

Greater housing autonomy, increased authority of the Master's office over area coordinators, heads of residence, and counselors were also offered.

Vice-Chancellor Champion suggested that Orchard Hill assume responsibility for the standard 95 percent occupancy rate. He also said the OH could contribute $1200 per room for those rooms permanently taken out of service when the occupancy rate falls below 95 percent.

Provost Gluckstern in response to requests for additional TA allotments for OH, stated that 3 more TA positions will be made available. He also requested a list of OH faculty residents and preceptors from Dr. Barron and stated that he would use his personal influence to reduce their teaching loads.

Dr. Barron requested that the Orchard Hill area coordinators, heads of residences, and counselors report directly to the Master's office instead of the Student Affairs Office. Bromery maintained that he would have "no hang-ups about this as long as the Master reports to the Student Affairs Office."

Dave Schoff, Associate Provost, earlier in the meeting expressed reservations about Orchard Hill courses filing core requirement distribution and the necessity of OH interdisciplinary majors. He suggested that OH students in the interdisciplinary program be sponsored by members of the Orchard Hill faculty.

Next Tuesday, May 4 at 10:00 p.m., the Provost and Vice-Chancellors will attend an Orchard Hill area meeting in Eugene Field lounge to further discuss these proposals.

Novack To Discuss Reform Tonight

George Novack, one of the outstanding socialist scholars in the United States, and one of the few American socialists listed in Who's Who, will be speaking at UMass tonight at 8:00. The discussion, in room 174 of the campus center is titled "Reform and Revolution in American History."

Over the past three decades Mr. Novack has collaborated with Leon Trotsky, C. Wright Mills, and Ernest Mandel. In 1964 he edited with Isaac Deutscher a collection of Trotsky's writings, The Age of Permanent Revolution.

Currently he is a contributing editor to Intercontinental Press, a biweekly socialist international news magazine which is translated into several different languages for distribution all over the world; and an editor of International Socialist Review, a monthly Marxist magazine.

Born in Boston in 1905 and educated at Harvard, since the Scottsboro Case in 1932 he has been actively engaged in the defense of civil liberties and labor's rights. In 1937 he was a prime mover in organizing the International Commission of Inquiry into the Moscow Trials headed by the philosopher John Dewey.

He has contributed many articles to numberous periodicals and lectured at leading universities throughout the United States, Canada, and Mexico on questions of Marxist theory, philosophy, and politics. Several of his books include Introduction to the Logic of Marxism, Origins of Materialism, and Existentialism vs. Marxism.

Novack's most recent book, published last month, is on the history of democracy, and discussion he will give tonight will be in large part taken from the book.

The discussion is sponsored by the Militant Forum Series of the Young Socialist Alliance.

Darity: Population Policy Needed

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

Dr. William Darity, Professor of Public Health and head of the Public Health Department of UMass., expressed the need for a national population policy to control our population to an audience of about fifty persons in the Campus Center Auditorium last night. The program was sponsored by Gamma Sigma Sigma Sorority.

Darity cited several possibilities in his speech on "Birth Control and Family Planning" for negative sanctions to be imposed upon those who bred large families, such as tax deductions and public education for only the first two children in a family. He also suggested raising the legal marriage age.

Darity stated that he does not completely agree with the Zero Population Growth Program, as people may be "carried away" by the idea that a stable population will solve our social problems. He noted that the ZPG program appropriately appeals to white, middle-class families, as this group comprises eighty percent of the national population. He felt that many problems of our society can and must be solved "before ZPG is reached".

Condemning the state of health care in the United States, Darity claimed that the U.S. was "the most backward nation in the West" in this field, ranking sixteenth in the world in the infant mortality rate and seventeenth in the male life expectancy rate. He favored socialized medicine and a national health insurance plan, which he claimed would benefit all income groups in the nation.

Citing the fact that eighty percent of those women seeking abortions are married women, Darity favored legalized abortions "for all segments of the population...as they desire." Abortion should be treated as a health matter, and be performed under proper medical conditions, he said.

In regards to methods of family planning, Darity stated that "The Pill is no longer the safe pill," as it can result in serious side effects. However, it is the most effective method of birth control if used correctly, he said. Other methods Darity cited were abortions as a "stop-gap" method, and the intra uterine device. While sterilization is becoming more widely accepted, Darity pointed out that most men who have been sterilized have already had four or five children; therefore, it is not very effective as a family planning measure.

Darity regarded sex education taught by well qualified persons as necessary, and felt that family planning was a legitimate part of sex education. This should begin "as soon as the child starts asking questions", he said. He felt that courses should be co-educational and stress the importance of relationships with other people, as well as biological facts. Rather than a "moralizing" attitude, Darity favored presentation of facts and open discussions in sex education courses.

Concerning the question of religion and family planning, Darity pointed out that "no religion in the world does not sanction some form of birth control". The Catholic Church does not oppose birth control, but disapproves only of certain methods of family planning, he said.

Darity then addressed himself to the question of family planning and black genocide, stating that there is some basis for fear of a genocidal conspiracy against blacks in the U.S. He mentioned the punitive sterilization laws for welfare mothers, which were in force in thrity-seven states in the year 1970, as evidence from a study in which he participated in Hartford. Darity found a "strong feeling of suspicion" of family planning as genocidal, especially among young black males, and stressed the need for addressing ourselves to this problem.

A question and answer period followed Dr. Darity's lecture.

Panel Explores Pressure Groups

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

The representation and taxation of the enfranchised majority was discussed last night at the fourth and final "Panel Discussion on Practical Politics", moderated by Maurice Donahue, former President of the Mass. Senate, and Walsh-Saltonstall professor of practical politics in the UMass Government Department.

The topic was slated as "The Role of Pressure Groups on Beacon Hill."

Panelist Edward Sullivan, business agent and secretary-treasurer of the building Service Union, Local 254, explained the role of pressure groups in the obtaining of labor legislation. He stated that there are two kinds of labor legislation. The first kind he described as "highly emotional", "for the injured, and the unemployed, and for education." The second kind involved labor relations and union rights, and was more difficult to secure. "Pro-labor does not necessarily mean pro-union."

Dean C. Cushing, executive vice president of Mass Merchants, Inc., referred about the same citizenry in their role as consumers. He stressed his own role of retailing as "unique", and "the guardian of the public's purse strings."

Joseph P. Hagerty, Jr., Esq., manager of American Mutual Insurance Alliance, geared his own comments to the same sector, as he stressed the importance of educating the public about auto insurance: "There is no way that Massachusetts can live in a vacuum." In his comments Hagerty stressed the necessity for "evolutionary reform in the insurance field." He charged that Mass. auto insurance payments as being "disproportionate" against the claims. "If it's not good for the public, it's not good for the industry", he stated.

Thomas Joyce, Esq., Banks and Utilities, in turn explained what he considered as the function of lobbies as "to go up and put their best foot forward, to present the best point of view." In relating this to the legislatives' constituencies, he stated"It is important to the people of Mass. to get both sides of the story. Massachusetts cannot prosper until it can get the youth. The business communities work together to get things. This is what a pressure group really means."

Walter Muther, Esq., legislative counsel of the Associated Industries of Mass., reenforced this: "I don't believe that lobbyists can do a good job without serving two masters. They serve their clients as well as the legislators". He described this as "putting a coalition together."

During the question-answer period, the two proposed State tax bills were brought up. Cushing termed the elimination of the machine tax as "ill-timed We will need more money. We can look forward to a general sales tax."

Sullivan, to a suggestion of off-track betting as a source of revenue instead of an additional consumer tax, answered that the same people would be paying. "You can't tax money from anybody but people."

Muther agreed but added. "Eventually people may pay, but who pays first, and how does he get it back is important."

When asked about the "pressure groups being pressured" into contributing to campaign funds, etc., Hagerty answered "We are not in the habit of buying legislation. Legislation will rise or fall on its own."

Donahue then thanked all those who had participated in the Panel Discussions, saying that he hoped that they had been "enlightening."

Visitor Accomodations Sought

Tables will be set up in dining commons this week to recruit people to provide accomodations for people coming to UMass for the Pan-African Conference May 7th and 9th.

Up to this point there has been "exceedingly poor" response according to a spokesman for the conference. He said brothers and sisters of the Black community had been asked to volunteer via letters, but few responded.

The spokesman said it is hoped that people will help to accomodate these visitors.

Wilson Tells Of Christ Experience

"Don't raise children on don'ts because don'ts make donuts," Ernie Wilson told a group of about a hundred students at last evening's Campus Crusade for Christ meeting.

Dr. Wilson, introduced to the audience as a person who has done a great deal in life, spoke to the group on what the coming of Christ into his life did for him.

Wilson, who lived near the Panama Canal, always dreamed of coming to the United States to live. His dream came true and he immigrated to New York to become a Boxer. The friend of many famous boxers including Cassius Clay told the attentive audience "Jesus made me a new man" After quitting the boxing racket, he became involved in the Jazz scene playing with Louis Armstrong.

He then related to the group as to how the Depression changed his life. Well off while others were desperately poor, he decided to cast away his money and give it to those who had so little during the depression.

"If you want to get really stoned, see Jesus," said Dr. Wilson who has spent most of his life preaching in the institutions of the world without salary.

In closing, he told the group that the answer to his problems in life was Jesus.

Demonstrators Arrested, Tactics Criticized

WASHINGTON—INTERUPT HEARING—Antiwar demonstrators interupt the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing yesterday. They were told to make a formal request if they wanted to testify. The hearing was on war powers. (AP Wirephoto)

WASHINGTON (AP)—About 200 antiwar demonstrators were arrested after they blocked the main entrance of draft headquarters Wednesday, as congressional critics of the Indochina war said such tactics will hurt their cause.

Five activists tried unsuccessfully to persuade the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, long in the forefront of congressional war criticism, to launch a filibuster to block other legislation until the war is ended.

Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., the committee chairman, questioned the political judgment of civil disobedience activities. "It will set back and seriously hinder the efforts of those who are trying within the structure to end the war," he said.

Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., a candidate for his party's presidential nomination in 1972, called blocking of buildings self-defeating and told reporters "The effect of such ill-advised tactics is to play into the hands of the President."

The House Internal Security Committee voted to investigate what it called charges of Communist leadership in two peace groups, the National Peace Action Coalition and the Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice.

The committee said these two groups are the chief sponsors of current protest demonstrations against U.S. policies in Southeast Asia.

The committee also announced an inquiry into reports of "subversive activities directed toward the armed forces."

The headquarters of the Selective Service System was the center of protest efforts for the second straight day as antiwar activities built slowly towards the massive civil disobedience threatened next week when demonstrators plan to try to disrupt the government by blocking roads leading into Washington.

Demonstrators also handed out leaflets outside the Internal Revenue Service and continued to visit congressmen and senators.

At draft headquarters, the young demonstrators lay face down in front of the main entrance, forming what they termed "a carpet of bodies" to symbolize war dead and telling arriving employes they could enter only by walking over them.

Police Chief Jerry V. Wilson had warned against trying to interfere with employes and at about 7:30 a.m. the police began making arrests.

Within the next hour the 200 had been carried off in police buses. Most were charged on misdemeanor counts of obstructing a public building.

Action in the antiwar movement outside Washington is bringing unexpected pressure to bear on congressmen.

Calls and letters are coming from the homefolks, prodded for the most part by Common Cause, the self-styled citizens' lobby headed by former Welfare Secretary John W. Gardner.

An aide to one of the congressmen sponsoring an end-the-war declaration had this to say about the surprise among some members of the House:

"Some of them have been calling us and saying 'Help! What have we done?' They say they have been getting letters and calls asking them to sign our statement and want to know what it's all about."

Sergeant Claims Witnessing Of Vietnamese Slayings

WASHINGTON (AP)—A former Army staff sergeant from Lt. William Calley's old outfit said Wednesday he witnessed the massacre of about 30 Vietnamese women and children a year after the murders at My Lai.

Danny S. Notley, 23, whose discharge papers show he served in Vietnam with the American Division's 11th Brigade, said members of his squad shot the villagers to death after a much-admired soldier from his unit was killed by a land mine nearby.

Notley gave his unsworn testimony to an unofficial, self-constituted congressional committee which is hearing volunteers' accounts of alleged war crimes. The panel has no subpoena powers and hasn't decided whether to submit its much-publicized record to Congress.

"This was the first time I've been able to talk about it," Notley said. "I didn't even tell my wife about it until last night."

The panel, chaired by Rep. Donald V. Dellums, D—Calif., has for three days listened to former American servicemen give what they said were eyewitness accounts of indiscriminate killings of South Vietnamese and of beatings, torture and murder that they sometimes participated in themselves.

Notley said the murders he saw were committed in the village of Truong Khanh II, Quang Ngai province, on or about April 18, 1969, 2 1/2 months after he arrived in the country.

He said his platoon was conducting a sweep through the area, and had taken several casualties while rooting uniformed North Vietnamese from a hospital complex.

Finally, he said, one of the most popular men in his unit stepped on a land mine and was killed.

Notely said his lieutenant assumed someone from a nearby village a "vil" in GI slang-had set the mine.

"The lieutenant said, 'There's a vil over there and there's people in it and they're responsible...I want some kills,'" Notley said.

Another squad went in but found it deserted Notley said. He said the village was then shelled with white-phosphorous incendiary rounds, after which the lieutenant sent in Notley's squad plus a few volunteers, a total of eight or ten men.

Once in the village the squad spotted a group of about 10 women and children, he said. "I didn't see any men."

Yesterday afternoon the MDC News Office was visited by this delegation from the newly formed Children's Liberation demanding that Ann Stadnicki write a news story concerning their rapidly growing organization. Children's Lib Seeks End To Adult Put-Downs

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

It was bound to happen. It started with the National Liberation Front, then it was Women's Lib and then Men's Lib. The only logical step was Children's Lib.

"Because we don't like to be put down" Mike Forget, and Eric and Nina Mankin, all students at Marks Meadows Elementary School have initiated the new movement.

Mike, an 11 year old fifth grader said in an MDC interview yesterday that it all started with Free University.

"We were all going to Free U. as part of microteaching at the School of Ed.," according to Mike. "If you get an idea that Clearinghouse (located at Free U.) likes, they give you a ditto so you can make posters. We made 25 posters from the ditto and that's how we started."

He said the three cohorts came up with the idea of Childrens Lib after what he called "being brutalized by a teacher."

"Teachers wreck our schedules for things like an operetta," seven year old Nina, a second grader, complained. She continued, saying that one teacher ignores kids who aren't in the show, actually "treats them like dirt".

Her brother Eric said the reason kids get walked all over is because they are little, both in size and years. Eric, an 11 year old sixth grader, is the major spokesmen for the group. He says: When you're 18 you resent being called a kid. Why should you resent being called something that is very nice? Everyone was once a kid, you know!"

Eric says, "People will learn the value of school if it is voluntary". He added that he would go, because already the Integrated Day Workshop that the three organizers participate in operates on a similar principle.

An other issue on the Children's Lib platform is a Childrens Liberation Center. The purpose of such a center would be to provide a place for children to play with each other, "like a day care center but without adults" and to have discussions. Eric said that three of the kids had "a very interesting discussion with the Gay Liberation people" this week.

The major problem Children's Lib has faced so far has been that other groups have been stealing their tables from in front of the Hatch.

"We had a problem even getting a table," Mike said. We had to get 'an adult' to sponsor us. Now we have about 30 supporters, many from UMass and quite a few from Marks Meadows."

The table, once it was assigned, was "stolen" by the Vets for Peace, then returned, then taken again by another group, Nina explained.

She said they had been promised another one for today, though.

Children's Lib will operate from Free University Monday through Friday from three to four PM (after school). The reason for this is that Free U is the only place the group can go without money.

"We don't want to ask people for money," one of the kids said.

Maybe this is really a new movement.

State Senate Defeats Tuition Increase Bill

BOSTON—The Massachusetts Senate Tuesday again defeated overwhelmingly an effort to raise tuition rates in state colleges and universities.

The Senate crushed by 34-1, a bill sponsored by Sen. David H. Locke, R—Wellesley, Senate minority whip, to raise tuition in the state institutions from the current $200 a year to $600.

Locke filed a similar measure last year when he was a freshman senator, and it was then overwhelmingly defeated.

In defending his bill, Lock said last year there were 18,000 applications for enrollment at the University of Massachusetts with only 3000 freshman openings, so that "five out of every six applicants had to be turned down."

He said many of the successful applicants were financially able to pay higher tuitions, pointing out that high-income students represented 23 per cent of the student population at three Boston-area private institutions, while the high-income students at UMass represented 23.8 per cent of the enrollment.

He gave statistics indicating a larger high-income enrollment at UMass than the low-income enrollment.

Sen. Mary L. Fonseca, D—Fall River, chairman of the Joint Education Committee, told senators, however, that her committee had received many letters from persons opposed to raising tuition levels.

"In view of the economic conditions, my committee feels that any increase in tuitions at this time would be unwise," she explained.

Sen. Fred Lamson, R—Malden, said Locke's statistics proved that the majority of UMass students "are from the great middle class, and here once again we want to sock the great middle income class right between the eyes."

Locke was joined by only one other senator in supporting his measure, Sen. John F. Aylmer, R—Centerville, but Aylmer's vote was not tallied because it was put in a parliamentary "pair" with that of an absent senator voting against the bill.

Moratorium Committee Plans Strike

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

The UMass Strike Committee changed its name to the UMass Moratorium Committee in action last night at a meeting of fourteen in the Campus Center.

On-campus events scheduled for May 5 include workshops, wearing black armbands, donation cups placed on campus, and periodic ringing of chapel bells. Off-campus events include a 6:00 A.M. distribution of leaflets at factories, an afternoon distribution of leaflets at the Hadley shopping center, and an evening candlelight ceremony on Amherst Common.

In an open letter to the faculty, professors will be asked to cancel their classes and give up their classrooms for workshops. The committee said that through their RSO organization they will try to reserve all the meeting rooms in the Campus Center.

When asked about the content of the workshops, Claire Moriarty, chairing the meeting, said that the topics will be left open. "Anyone: student, non-student, or faculty member can start one, she said.

Appreciation was voiced for the Valley Peace Center which has volunteered to ask the local stores to close from the hours of noon to 2:00 P.M.

I Don't Understand

Today is "Springday": Long Live the Student Strike!

Stretched comfortably behind his paper strewn desk, one of those professor-types, with the balding top and wrinkling front gave a dreamy laugh at his own idea of how similar the Springday festivities would be to the Student Strike, at least from the University's point of view.

You might even call Springday the moderate student's own form of political action. The same way that last year, most of the students around the campus forced themselves to be political activists until the grading policy was set and finals cancelled.

Springday is a kind of institutionalized civil disobedience. Nobody has to think about getting it going. The right people serve the proper functions and the rest of UMass can go around with out thinking. But, that is the nature of an institution; it only requires a sincere form of mindlessness.

A strike around this campus does tend to institutionalize itself, with the right people playing the right parts, and everyone else attending workshops. (Workshops are to activists, what beer is to Springday freaks.)

There are many institutions around this world of ours, most of them some form of political action, all harnessed and controlled. You lost what is most important about an idea or purpose when everyone gets caught up in organizing it.

Of course there are those who really believe in the idea of strikes. They really resent anyone who isn't personally committed to their ideas. The arch-friend of the striker is the type of person who will probably be at Springday today, drinking beer.

The University will not crumble under the force of Springday or the Student Strike, though. There are just some institutions which have durability. UMass even manages to survive the daily "strike" from classes practiced by more people than would really enjoy a massive strike.

Indeed, we are all faced with the dilemna of saving the greatest "strike" of them all, this University.

(Maybe a class is to a student, what a workshop is to a Springday freak.)

Appeal To Reason

By JIM MORAN
MDC Staff

Last week John Kerry, in an appeal for reason to the United States Senate, made it very clear what has been frustrating young vets since this damn war in Viet Nam began.

Unlike Spiro Agnew he did not have to resort to $5 words to impress and then ultimately confuse his listeners. Eloquent and artistic he is. Unlike Agnew, though, he is also right.

In Kerry's description of the vets' anguish, both at home and as soldiers in Viet Nam he was able to penetrate even the hard hearts of Senators like Stu Symington, but unfortunately hard hearts are quite the opposite of hard heads.

After Kerry made his appeal to reason, those poor unfortunate who had to fight off the Germans in the woods and forts of Virginia during World War II donned their be-badged garrison caps and went to do battle with him. I'm referring to the American Legion. If they hope to top Kerry, they had better find a topic stronger than 'Freedom in Viet Nam'.

Kerry and his like are surely the superior to the Legion when it comes to comments about this war.

In the words of Boston Globe columnist George Frazier "the things about Kerry-what sets him and his colleagues of last weekend apart-is that they paid their dues."

Congresswoman Louise Day Hicks succeeded in setting back Women's Lib by 10 years when she allowed herself to be propagandized by the government in her recent trip to Viet Nam.

Old Louise must have been graciously whirled about Viet Name at a dizzying pace, because when she got back everything she had to say was...dizzy.

Congresswoman Hicks says she got some new insight from the VIP briefing in Saigon, "...the disgrace of this war is not in our being in Vietnam, but rather in those who oppose our boys while they are there."

Mrs. Hicks neglected to include those "boys" who are protesting the war in Viet Nam itself.

Mrs. Hicks must have been slightly high herself when she swallowed the "American boys lean on drugs because they haven't been able to depend on support of the people back home" line.

If the Congresswoman from South Boston could pull her head out of the clouds and talk with a few vets from her own district...better still if she could sneak down to Washington St. in Boston and see some of "the boys" shooting up she might not swallow the line fed to her so easily in Viet Nam.

Neal Mulligan has made it into the Student Senate. It's going to be an interesting year for us with Mulligan in there to keep our reps on their toes. It might even be the end of that constant line of crap that comes out of their meetings.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9...

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
MDC Staff

Numbers are important to all of us these days, especially here at UMass. Wherever you go, whatever you do, you're numbered. There's just no getting around it.

As soon as you enter the university, they hit you. First it's simply a student identification number. Next they nail you with course numbers and, when you've about mastered that much, they toss on the old section number. Aside from all this required stuff there are room numbers, locker numbers, mail box combinations, meal ticket numbers, classroom numbers and a million other integers that lead you down the road to infinity.

But, as is the case in most everything, UMass is only a microcosm of the world outside.

The minute you enter society, you are virtually barraged with uncountable sums of digits without which it is impossible to function. If you want to drive, you must have a registration number, to talk, you need a telephone number and, if you want someone to converse with, you need two of them. Perhaps you simply wish to relax and watch TV. No chance.

In most ways they've got you coming and going. If you enter the military they number you, but now they do it even if you don't. It used to be you had to go to prison to get a number, but in recent times the FBI appears to be extending that privilege to almost everyone. They've even got you if you just want to work.

They're used to be a loophole however, one small portion of life that could be acquired without using an integer, digit, or any such nuisance. Technology has changed even that though. Did you ever attempt to get something to eat around here?

All of this might seem nonsensical but, in light of some recent political occurences, it leads to some interesting questions.

As with about everything else, students are rebelling, and rightfully so, against the increased computerization of the college experience. For if nothing else, the numbers bog the already overcrowded minds of most of us as well as adding to the confusion and coldness of this adventure in learning.

One would expect, then, and not without justification, that students would themselves attempt to get away from this "integeration", at least in the causes which they support. Such, however has not been the case.

Have you read the papers lately? The tabloids are full of Chicago 7's, Harrisburg 13's, Catonsville 9's and, in case you missed it, the latest member of this elite corps is our own Grayson 7. UMass is on the map.

Doesn't it seem odd that numbers have been adopted by the "counter culture" to label the politically oppressed whom they support? The obvious response would be that by giving these groups numbers, it provides a sense of solidarity for those involved.

All of which goes to show one thing. No matter how much we complain about what is going on in our society and how often we deride the present structure and emphatically state that changes will be made, it would not be unwise to retain a bit of skepticism. For in our parents' efforts to remake us in their own image, they have already achieved some success. We are already playing the old numbers racket.

It's For You, Martha

WASHINGTON--Atty. Gen. John Mitchell believes the Justice Department should have the right to tap people's lines without a court order. He maintains it is the responsibility of the executive branch of government to listen in on domestic dissidents in the same manner that they listen in on foreign elements.

"I don't see how we can separate the two," Mitchell said, "but if it were possible, I would say that experience has shown greater danger from the so-called domestic variety."

Now anyone in this country has to agree that Mitchell has a point. The real problem is, "What domestic dissidents should the attorney general be permitted to listen in on without a court order?"

In trying to find the answer to this problem, I talked to an expert in the field of constitutional phone tapping.

Dr. Hiram Cogsweller, a professor of philosophical eavesdropping at the J. Edgar Hoover Community College of Law and Order said, "Anyone who attacks the fundamental institutions of this country should be tapped."

"I imagine that would include people who have called for the abolishment of the Supreme Court?"

"It certainly does."

"And accused the court of being nine old men who didn't know what they were doing?"

"That was exactly the type of person the attorney general had in mind."

"And called up senator's wives and threatened them if their husbands didn't vote for Judge Carswell for the Supreme Court?"

"Yes, that would rate a phone tap."

"And told the editor of a newspaper in Arkansas that a United States senator should be crucified?"

"We want to know everything we can about that sort of person."

"And is out to get Mrs. Nixon's press secretary fired?"

"You're painting the perfect picture of a domestic subversive," Cogsweller said.

"And is followed night and day by an FBI man?"

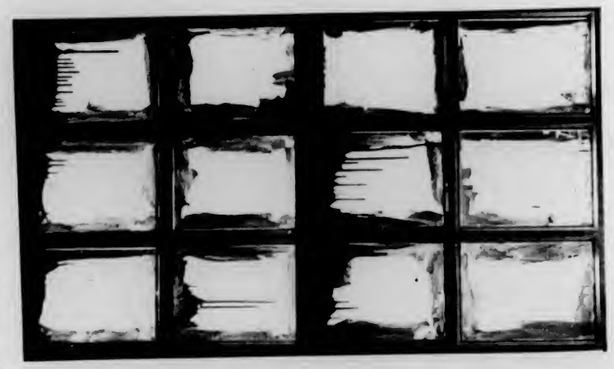
"It's a part of the pattern," he agreed. "A person like that could destroy this country from within."

"Suppose this person was married to a high government official. Wouldn't it be dangerous for the country if we didn't tap her line?"

"If the person you describe is married to a high government official, then the attorney general would not be doing his job if he didn't listen in on every one of her phone calls. This is a security risk case of the highest order."

"Suppose this person, to keep her husband from knowing about her telephone calls, made them from the bathroom?"

"Domestic subversives tend to do that sort of thing," Cogsweller agreed. "The attorney general would be in his rights to tap the bathroom phone as well."



"What if she wanted to send all the students in the country to Russia?"

"We would have to know what she has in mind. The security of the nation could be at stake."

"Suppose she hates Washington and all it stands for?"

"There is no question that this person is dangerous. This is what Atty Gen. Mitchell was driving at. How can he be responsible for the domestic tranquility of this nation when someone like that is running around doing the things you describe? By the way, can I have her name; I'd like to report her right away."

"I'm not a stool pigeon," I said indignantly. "Besides, you wouldn't believe me if I told you."

Letters To The Editor

Not What He's Cracked Up To Be

To the Editor:

I sat in the Cage eagerly awaiting the arrival of Muhammed Ali, expecting a very stimulating speech. I have great admiration for this man because he has dared to publicize some very controversial opinions he holds. I can readily understand the standing ovation offered when he approached the stage. Such respect is, I feel, quite appropriate.

His first few words impressed me for their naturalness, candor, and unpretentiousness. I was moved by his endorsement of the Cairo campaign, and by his introduction of the speakers from Cairo, who were, by the way, very forceful and effective. What really distressed me, however, was the message and delivery of Ali's speech.

Ali spoke about man and his function in life. He spoke with obvious personal commitment to his message and with the fervor of a preacher. I was at first impressed that he had chosen as his theme a topic which concerns me deeply right now. Nevertheless, the logic of his speech was circular; he repeated his message numerous times using the same vocabulary, effectively hitting us over the head with his message, namely, that happiness and fulfillment are not achieved unless man knows his purpose in life. Furthermore, he made many assumptions, implicit and explicit, about his audience. This offended me especially because many of the assumptions did not apply to me. For example, he asserted that probably only one out of one hundred of the people in the audience had ever carefully considered the question of his purpose in life. Now such an assumption leaves him very vulnerable, especially because in a college community there are undoubtedly many more than one per cent who are frequently hasseled by such thoughts. I was also disturbed by Ali's sexist jokes. We were told, for example, that even after obtaining the woman of one's dreams, a man wouldn't be satisfied; he'd get another one just like he'd buy a new car. Then, Ali asserted, he'd still be unfulfilled since people are all presumably plagued by more spiritual, unconscious needs. I was even more disappointed by the audience's enthusiastic response to such remarks.

I had expected their sense of humors to be more tasteful and sophisticated. Their response in general led me to believe that their idolizing instincts had completely obliterated their sense of intellectual discrimination.

I do not object to mingling metaphysics with humor; it was the quality of the humor that bothered me.

I left the Cage regretting that I'd come, and wondering if there were others who felt the way I did but didn't dare express it.

Out With The Boys

To the Editor:

I was very disturbed upon hearing that the Grayson Seven was brought to General Court for conducting a "Bar" in their dormitory.

I've been on campus for two years now and I've been to many beer bashes and bars, all run on University property and with the consent of Heads of Residences and other officials whose job it is to help enforce University regulations. Advertisements in the Collegian and signs displayed all over campus have been used to notify the campus community of events where alcoholic beverages can be procured.

I don't feel that the seven defendents of Grayson should be tried in court for conducting a bar when this type of thing occurs all over campus with no objection from the Administration. In the testimony given Tuesday night, Mr. Boys who brought charges against the guys, admitted attending functions where "alcoholic activity" was taking place. I feel that he and other administrators on campus are to blame for the Grayson Seven getting all the blame for their conducting of an illegal operation.

By not enforcing University regulations they seem to give approval to this type of thing. How should students be expected to follow the rules in the rules book given them when the rules aren't enforced by those in charge?

See No Evil

To the Editor:

As a member of this university, I am shocked by the judicial action the administration has taken against a few students who allegedly operated an "illegal" bar in Grayson House.

The question at hand is - Why all of a sudden this big concern about liquor on campus? I refuse to believe that the administration does not know that there is liquor on this campus. It seems funny that many social functions on this campus involving students also involve selling liquor to these students, many of whom are minors. The administration, as far as I know, has never brought any action against the members of Hills House, Cance House, McKimmie House, Kennedy Tower, etc., all whom are guilty of selling liquor to minors. The administration also, I am sure, knows about the beer blasts sponsored by Orchard Hill which are held in Worcester Dining Commons and also that they too are guilty of selling liquor to minors. I wonder why action is all of a sudden taken against these students from Grayson.

But what makes me angry and frustrated is that these people who have taken action against the Grayson bar are also the people who have patronized the bar. Nick Boys who brought up the action has been known to frequent Grayson Bar. Other members of the administration and faculty have been seen in the various bars on the Hill, specifically Jack Littlefield, Dr. Barron, Master of Orchard Hill, and Luther Allen, faculty resident of Webster House.

It is my firm conviction that the administration should be charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors instead of these students. In the past, the administration has not taken any action but only due to outside pressure are they now doing something about "alcoholic activities." These students may have realized the state laws concerning alcohol but they also realized that the university conveniently ignored these rules too. By the administration's silence in dealings with alcohol, they actually unofficially sanctioned these "alcoholic activities" and now that there is trouble they are using these seven students from Grayson as their scapegoats.

This is another classic case where the administration preaches one thing and practices something else. It is my belief that these students are taking the blame for some gross negligence on the part of the administration. Once again this university shows that the administration is filled with people who would rather save their jobs and reputations rather than admit they made a mistake. I ask, when will it all end and when will students stop being blamed for the administration's mistakes.

Flicker Out

To the Editor:

I know this letter expresses the views of the five members on my corridor who attended the movies in Mahar with me on Monday night. I have a feeling that the majority of people who were in the auditorium are also in support of this letter.

With all the W.C. Fields flicks that have been shown on this campus this year and last, avid fans await eagerly the showing of something different. Monday night "The Barber," "The Golf Specialist," and "The Pharmacist" were to be shown in Mahar. Word has spread that the first two films are really good--classic Fields.

All of those enthusiasts who went to Mahar were treated not to those films advertised but to a collection of segments cut from half a dozen of Fields' movies. My friends and I had all seen those other movies in their entirety. We walked down the Hill and paid our fifty cents to see movies we had not viewed before.

To extend the showing to over an hour, the sharp projection crew projected the segment "The Great McGonigle" twice on the screen before us. Thank you sponsors for the fine night's entertainment, and be aware that in the future we shall ask you before purchase what will be shown.

Who Stole My Bike?

To the Editor:

That's a pretty dumb question. But, who did? Somebody stole my bicycle on Friday night. Friday night or early Saturday afternoon. Why did you do it? Do you realize that I have not been the same since that bicycle was ripped off? That was a bad deed. Return it to me.

Ed Roche

P.S. To those of you readers who have lost their bicycles in the past, keep an eye out for a Schwinn Varsity ten-speed, which was recently adapted to run on fifteen speeds. It is presently blue with a red tape on the handlebars, with a book rack on the rear. Help me find my bicycle, and I'll help you find yours.

Abject Confusion

To the Editor:

It is impossible to consider the so-called "Dada/Surrealist Festival" as anything other than a thoroughly reprehensible undertaking in the service of the most abject confusion; impossible to greet it with anything less than the fullest disdain & defiance.

Student-Faculty Cooperation?

To the Editor:

You will be receiving a request from the "Teacher/Course Evaluation" of the Student Senate to participate in their evaluation this Spring. I urge you not to participate in this, because it would duplicate the evaluation to be conducted by our own department.

At its meeting of April 20, our department Council adopted with one change the proposal on evaluation of undergraduate teaching that was approved by a two-to-one vote of our faculty. (The change is that student written comments on an individual instructor go only to that instructor.) Prof. Sicks has been appointed to administer the undergraduate questionnaires for this Spring.

The Council adopted a revised proposal or evaluation of graduate teaching--see the Council minutes to appear.

Do What You Can

To the Editor:

Again this year, Earth Week came and went with relatively little fanfare. To be sure there was another important cause to support last week and it is hard to actively commit yourself to too much. But preserving our environment need not be restricted to one week's worth of thought.

I am usually bad with causes. I support them in theory but don't know what I can do. If you're like me, I hope you'll appreciate the list that some classmates and I came up with. You don't have to do everything. But if you do something from this list that you never did before, you are going in the right direction. The following is a list of some things that everyone can do to help preserve the environment:

--buy in larger quantities
--don't take paper bags to hold purchases
--go shopping with paper bags you already have
--turn water off while brushing teeth; use it to rinse mouth
--use less electricity
--buy durable products
--give old clothes away
--use old clothes as rags
--don't waste food
--don't buy paper products
--send back junk mail
--walk instead of ride
--pick up litter when you see it
--don't buy colored tissues or toilet paper
--plant trees and flowers
--complain against excess packaging
--use returnable bottles
--don't litter
--don't pick flowers; leave them for others to enjoy
--hang up your laundry on nice days
--get rid of a second car
--buy a four or six cylinder car instead of an eight
--share magazine subscriptions
--feed birds in winter
--change oil every 2500 miles
--don't buy snowmobiles
--push a manual lawn mower
--put lift-off lid back into can instead of on ground

The list is incomplete and biased. Do what you can. Every little bit helps.

A Lot To Be Said For Grass

To the Editor:

Quite often I have read about and heard complaints from students concerning the Campus Center, that $15 million dollar monstrosity called the Awful Waffle by many Umies who aren't extremely fond of it.

I too have a complaint to register but not the type of complaint heard from people on campus who are concerned about the building not being student oriented. My complaint concerns the external part of this monstrosity.

Every day I pass by the ugly edifice on the way to and from classes. The surrounding area is barren except for a few trees placed strategically so that visitors to Campus will see them and be impressed. The ground has been extremely damaged by the compaction of heavy equipment so that even a good crop of weeds is unable to grow.

With all the money spent on building this thing, why can't the University invest a little money to improve the outside appearance? Green grass and a few trees may do a little bit of good to soften the cold drab look of this unwanted monstrosity.

Earth Song Tonight In Union

A total-involvement experimental drama called EARTH SONG will be at UMass tonight. The show will be in the Commonwealth Room in the Student Union building at 8:00 p.m.

The performance involves each member of the audience in questioning man's survival as a joyful being on Spaceship Earth. Through a series of dramatic episodes and original songs, the Earth Family Theater Troupe mirrors the underlying feelings and dilemmas of contemporary America - violence, youth-parent polarisation, population, "super-patriotism," alienation.

Although Martha and Paul Boesings are professional actors, Earth Family is not only a theater troupe but an expanded family of seven adults and three children. They are evolving a life-style that relates their convictions about human nature and its potential for growth in a group of people engaged in a common effort. All are invited to participate in EARTH SONG. There is no charge: C.E.Q. sponsored.

Colloquium Shows Doctoral Research

The Spring Graduate Colloquium of the School of Education will be today and tomorrow from 1 to 5 p.m. each day. Meetings, which are open to the public, will be in the Campus Center.

The colloquium will provide a showcase of significant research now under way or recently completed by doctoral candidates in education. Forty speakers will each make 20-minute presentations of their works and after each presentation visitors and fellow educators will discuss the issues presented.

Purpose of the colloquium is to acquaint faculty and students of the School and of other UMass departments, the Five-College Community about the nature of research activities in the School of Education.

Armenians To Devulge Pialf Secrets

Armenian students on campus will meet to devulge the secrets of making Pialf, tonight at 7:30 in Machmer W-22.

While waiting for the rice to simmer we will discuss community reation to the 24-hour relay vigil held around the Campus Pond. Also diagnosis of the Washington and New York demonstration at the Turkish Embassy and Councilate and analysis of the Armenian political situation.

Future plans for a 24 hour relay run around Washington monument; the possibility of an open AYF Olympics, Armenian Literary Magazine and next semester's accredited Armenian Language course will all be possible topics at the gathering.

S. U. BALLROOM 7 & 9:30

You can afford it while you're still young enough to enjoy it.

Having the want is one thing. Having the wherewithal is another. The trouble with being young is that all too often you have the one without the other.

But the 1971 MG Midget is something else again. Here is a true sports car for under $2500*—the lowest price you can pay for the real thing.

In this case the real thing includes a race-winning 1275 c.c. engine. Racing-type rack-and-pinion steering (2.33 turns lock to lock) for cool, crisp driving. Heavy-duty suspension for superb road-hugging. Disc brakes up front for straight-line non-fade stops. Twin reclining bucket seats. And full sports car instrumentation with an electric tach.

Which only goes to show that, even though MG has been engineering sports cars for over 40 years, there's no generation gap. For the name of your nearest Austin-MG dealer and information about overseas delivery, dial (800) 631-1971 except in New Jersey where the number is (800) 962-2803. Calls are toll-free, of course.

*Manufacturer's suggested retail price. Does not include transportation charges, dealer preparation, state and local taxes, if any. British Leyland Motors Inc., Leonia, N.J. 07605.

Dizzy Gillespie Quintet Appears Here Tonight

The Dizzy Gillespie Quintet will appear in two concerts on the UMass Amherst campus, April 29 and 30. Each concert, under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council, will be at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

player Dizzy Gillespie will be Joining illustrious trumpet Mike Longo on piano; Sam Jones on bass; Rudy Collins on drums; Sonny Henry on guitar; and Potato Valdez on conga drums.

As a composer, bandleader, and trumpet virtuoso, Gillespie has had great influence on the musical scene for more than three decades. A native of Laurinburg, S.C., he had a thorough musical education before migrating to New York City. As a youngster he was soloist in bands led by such stars as Earl Hines and Cab Calloway, and in his early twenties he formed his own band.

Gillespie was an important figure in the birth of "bop", which brought new time signatures and new melodic and harmonic complexities to jazz. With his goatee, dark glasses, and hip humor, he became a virtual symbol of this important musical development.

Long a popular recording artist as well as performer, Dizzy Gillespie recently opened a new vista for himself and his Quintet when they appeared at New York's famed rock ballroom, Fillmore East.

Reserved tickets for the concerts are $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2 for other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff and $3 for the general public. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone (413) 545-0202. Mail orders for tickets will be accepted. Please make checks payable to University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council, and enclose a stamped, self-addressed return envelope.

Pre-School Program Announced

A pre-school program for 3, 4, and 5 year olds will be instituted this summer.

The program will be a materials centered approach based on the theories of Jean Piaget--designed to allow the child to explore and learn about himself and his environment--consonant with his level of development. In addition to the materials of the classroom, the out-of-doors will be used as an extension of the schoolroom (who can stay inside during the summer?).

The Little Red School House, Amherst College, will serve as the campus from June 28-August 20 (eight weeks), 9:00 a.m.-11:30 a.m., Monday-Friday. $120.00/for the entire session will be charged. Enrollment is limited to twenty children, 4, 5 and a limited number of 3 year olds.

For further information concerning the program please call 545-1528 during the day (545-1556 if no answer), or 256-6192 after 5:00 p.m. and on week-ends, Robert C. Granger-Doctoral Student in Early Childhood Education, UMass., and David E. Day-Director, Early Childhood Education Program, UMass.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Gemini actor Robert Cummings is keen on astrology and an expert in his own right. He gives credit to his knowledge of astrology for much of his success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Before making decisions affecting domestic environment, check with mate or one close to you. You may not have all available information. Get cooperation from one who is knowledgeable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A relative may act in eccentric manner. Don't get involved in foolish scheme. Be an interested observer, but refuse to throw good money after bad; stress practicality. You will understand.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have urge to throw caution to winds. If extravagant, you may be sorry. Realize this and guide actions accordingly. Finish project. Avoid premature starts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Deal with associate in more of an independent manner. Cycle is high, but financial woes of close associate could affect you. Don't be sidetracked from basic goal. Exercise power of will.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid expending money, energy on wild goose chase. Take time to get thoughts, facts in order. Heed inner voice. Your intuitive intellect serves now as reliable guide.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friend who encourages you to spend, may have ulterior motive. Do your own thinking. Protect assets. Don't waste time, energy on one who is selfish. Message will be increasingly clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Unorthodox approach is best. Be willing to take a chance on inner feelings. One in authority will provide backing. Be confident, aware of apparent minor details. Young person will aid.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Where you were restricted you now have greater freedom of thought, action. Emphasis is on travel, higher education, willingness to learn. Some lessons come hard. Be prepared.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What was an obstacle vanishes. Way is cleared for meaningful progress. Avoid needless fear. Taurus individual can aid. Don't permit pride to stand in way of advancement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lie low; do more listening than talking. You cannot buy your way into favor. Permit others to assert themselves. Be perceptive. Note actions of one who is secretive. You will learn.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stick to familiar patterns. Going too far afield now would be an error. Be practical. Applies especially in dealing with members of opposite sex. Differentiate between love, delusion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ingratiate yourself with one who is concerned with law, medicine. Show appreciation for help received in recent past. Emotions fly high; control creative forces. Look for real changes.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, possess dramatic ability. You can interpret feelings, roles. You can sway people. You are happiest when teaching, explaining, enlightening others. You are due for change in domestic environment.

Three Prizes Available For English Essays

The English Department has announced that a total of three prizes will be awarded for undergraduate essays this year: the Betty Steinbugler Prize in English; for the best essay submitted in an English course by a female undergraduate; an equivalent prize for a male undergraduate; and a prize for the best senior Honors essay.

All essays which are to be considered for these prizes must be in the hands of the department's Honors Committee by Friday, May 7th. Papers should be left in 160 Bartlett; and they may be picked up there any time after noon, May 21, after the winners have been selected. All papers written for English courses during 1970-1971 are eligible, including those written last Spring but not submitted in last year's competition.

Cosby Expected Here In Fall

WASHINGTON--If he has his way, comedian Bill Cosby won't be giving up show business when he takes on a new career - teaching - next tall.

The comedian reportedly is trying to interest the television networks in airing a "serious talk show" he would host from the UMass campus where he plans to teach next September.

UMass Preps For Maine

Quick Jump Paces Redmen Over Indians

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

HANOVER, N.H.—Jumping on Dartmouth starter Bill Saumseigle for four quick runs in the first inning and five more in the fourth, the UMass baseball team went on to topple the Indians, 10-4, at rain-swept Dartmouth Baseball Field here yesterday.

The win for the streaking Redmen was their seventh in a row and twelfth of the season against only four setbacks while the loss was the ninth for the Indians against a dozen wins.

This was to be a day of preparation for head coach Dick Bergquist for this weekend's series with Maine and as it turned out the coach was very pleased with the performances of his teams hitting and the effective relief pitching of Lou Colabello, John Olsen and Tom Austin.

Charley Manley, who had another great day at the plate with three hits, got the Redmen moving right off the bat in the first with a sharp single to left. Jack Conroy reached on an error and Manley was thrown out at the plate after Brian Martin had singled.

Mark Palau doubled to deep left scoring two runs and Dan Esposito tripled to left center to score Palau and in return was sent home on an error off the bat of Eddie McMahon, to account for the four first inning scores.

Redman starter Chip Baye was ineffective in his two-inning stint as he was plagued with wildness resulting in two Indian tallies in the second.

But in the fourth UMass broke the game open sending twelve men to the plate for five runs and a fat 9-2 lead which they rode the rest of the way to victory.

Colabello took over for Baye in the third inning and in the next four innings pitched his most effective ball of the year limiting the Indians to four hits and two runs, one on a home run and the other on a misjudged fly ball to right field.

Olsen pitched innings seven and eight and continued his outstanding role as the top fireman on the Redman staff. He struck out two, walked none and gave up three singles in his workout.

Austin cleaned up in the ninth without any difficulty registering two strikeouts while throwing a live fast ball which was noticably pleasing to Bergquist in his post game analysis.

Martin, Esposito, Palau and McMahon each had two hits to go along with Manley's three as the Redmen piled up thirteen hits and continued to show an offensive punch that was not expected before the season began.

For Dartmouth Wayne Young was the hitting star with two hits including the long homer off Colabello. Frank Mannarino, the top Indian hitter and one of the best in the region was held in good check by the Redman pitching. He had only a single to show for his afternoon's performance.

While Saumseigle was ineffective, Dartmouth reliever John Freitos was just the opposite as he shut the door on the Redmen over the last five innings giving only three hits and a lone run when his right fielder slipped running after an apparent single which turned into a three-bagger and a run.

The objective for the Redmen to prepare was reached Bergquist feels his team is as ready as can be for the Black Bears, who are here for a single game on Friday and a double header on Saturday at Earl E. Lorden Field.

HOME AGAIN—Charley Manley, scoring against Boston University, continued his hitting streak yesterday against Dartmouth with three hits and also added two stolen bases to his record total. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

Nobody Had A Coin....

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

In a room filled with dense smoke, the incessant ringing of telephones, and the mumbling of head coaches, scouts and general managers in conference, the long-awaited UMass intrasquad football draft was held yesterday in a lockeroom outside Alumni Stadium.

It was obvious right away that this draft, a prelude to the intrasquad game at Alumni Stadium on Saturday, May 1, at 3 p.m., was going to be somewhat unique when it did not start with the customary flip of the coin. Instead, Head Coach Dick McPherson said, "We've decided that John Hulecki's team will pick first." Okay, maybe nobody had a coin.

Then it was decided that players would be drafted by position, in other words, if an offensive halfback were picked then all the offensive halfbacks would be picked before moving on to a new position, also a bit strange.

The actual drafting took about an hour, and when the smoke had cleared somewhat the mumbling had stopped, a few of the draftees were given the opportunity to express their feelings on being drafted.

Ron Marino, of Dennis Keating's team had this to say, "I hearby come to terms with the team staffed by Keating, Donlin, and Collins. I stipulate one clause, however — that I be allowed to play defensive tackle."

Bill Hanlan was next, "I have come to terms with the Hulecki team with these clauses agreed to in the contract — no spots, no push-ups, and few G's."

"I have signed with the Keating team," said Tom Price. His clause — no up-downs.

Paul Metallo was the last to speak, "I have agreed to sign with the Keating team under one condition, no ropes."

The two head coaches, Jim Regan of the Hulecki team, and Al Whitmarsh, the Keating team's mentor, then got up to answer reporters' questions.

In reply to a question about his basic strategy going into the game, Regan replied, "I will definitely have 11 men on the field. I was planning on fielding 10 players, but Dick McPherson informed me that it was supposed to be 11. As far as my game strategy, I will definitely use no quick-kicks. You want something more informative than that? Well, to tell you the truth, gentlemen, I'm on my way to cover the Amherst-AIC baseball game. It is April, you know. See you Saturday." Regan then left with a big smile on his face. One just knew that he was hiding something from the press.

Al Whitmarsh was next. "I really can't tell you much, gentlemen. They just got me out of bed yesterday to ask me to be a coach. I don't know anything about the team or anything else, so I figure I'll do a good job. One thing I can tell you — Regan is in trouble, tell him to prepare for anything."

The rookie coach continued, "I hope the University provides me with a parka if it's cold. If they don't, I'll sit in the warm press box and direct my team by phone."

In conclusion, Whitmarsh said, "I'm really looking forward to this opportunity. I always thought I knew more than the coaches anyway. I only hope that when the "real" coaches take over in the second half, they don't blow my big half-time lead."

When the press left the room, it was very apparent that each reporter was looking forward anxiously to the big game on Saturday. That intangible ingredient, a fierce rivalry, that adds spice to any sporting event was there. After all, what statements! "No quick-kicks." "Prepare for anything." With these kind of controversial comments PRECEEDING the game, one can imagine what the actual game will be like.

Both head coaches said that they would release their final rosters sometime today...the suspense is mounting

Stickers Face F-D

By JOHN MacGILLVRAY
MDC Staff

The UMass lacrosse team, playing under a demanding schedule, will be going for its third straight victory of the week this afternoon against a strong Farleigh Dickinson team. The game will begin at 3 P.M. at home.

Farleigh Dickinson, fresh off impressive wins over Duke, North Carolina, and Union, is a strong, well-balanced team. It was the middle-Atlantic champs two years in a row. Almost every one of its players come from that lacrosse hot bed, Long Island. The main strength of Farleigh Dickinson is its close attack of Dawson (no. 53) and Krease (no. 16). Between them they hold just about every scoring record at the school.

Because F—D uses only their first two midfields, UMass may try to double up on them. Garber's Gorillas will also try to run against F—D in hopes of tiring them out. The team will depend on tri-captain Al Ruggiano and defenseman John Walsh to keep Dawson and Krease from scoring.

Coach Richard Garber terms Farleigh Dickinson a very experienced team and says that "UMass will have to exercise ball control if it is to win."

All-American and tri-captain John Gannon has been hampered by a bad knee and may be forced to sit out the game.

This will be another big game for UMass in their quest for a berth in the NCAA playoffs at the end of the season.

Netmen Go Skiing

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Despite the absence of spring as we drift into May, few people still have snow on their minds. But there are nine people on campus that will be thinking white stuff, as the UMass netmen travel up up and away to Orono, Maine for the conference championships.

One stop will be made on the way, that in Durham, New Hampshire, where the Redmen will get their final warmup against the Wildcats at 1 p.m. this afternoon.

Then to Orono where Coach Kosakowski said, "The biggest problem will be whether or not we play. Win, lose or draw we don't mind going, but the chances of playing it don't seem very good."

With the talk of snow some of the netmen are thinking of bringing up their skis to Maine. "It's possible we could have a skiing meet because some of my players are competent skiers," joked Kosakowski, "and I'm a pretty good man on the hill myself."

But if championships do get underway the Redmen will have every intention of dethroning Rhode Island, to whom they lost in match play this season 6-3.

"There is only one place in the Yankee Conference," said the netmen's mentor," and we're not going up to Maine just for the ride."

This afternoon's warmup against New Hampshire will help Kosakowski determine his lineup for the weekend. At the time of this writing the the singles and doubles slots were still up in the air and by 4 p.m. today Kosakowski will have a much better idea as to how to play his men.

Today's contest will feature one of three foes that UMass will have its hands full with. New Hampshire dropped a 5-4 match to UConn, the team that UMass knocked off just two days ago. But the Wildcats can be fierce, especially on their home courts, and they'll provide the Redmen with an excellent chance to sharpen up for Friday, when the championships begin.

Eight men will be making the northern trip in persons of Alan Goldberg, Robert Webman, John Bloom, Chris Coffin, Steve Ferber, Mark Brass, Fred Braley, and Jim Bornheim. All eight will be playing in what is perhaps the most evenly balanced Yankee Conference championships to date.

More Course Descriptions

SOCIOLOGY 275
Social Problems
Professor John Hewitt

Organization of Course: The course will be primarily a lecture course, but questions during lectures or in writing beforehand will be treated very seriously and, if plentiful, could form a basis for a significant portion of lectures.

Aim of Course: The aim of this course is two-fold. First, it is a survey of major current social problems, and is, as such, an effort to convey information about their possible causes and potential solutions. Second, it is concerned with the question of what major social problems can tell us about the society itself: Why are some social conditions treated as problems and not others? Why are some forms of behavior regarded as deviant?

Readings: The major text for the course will be Robert K. Merton and Robert A. Nisbet, Contemporary Social Problems, 3rd. edition, a very recently revised edition of a standard survey of social problems. In addition, a variety of other readings will be chosen, both from the sociological literature in various areas and from materials critical of American society, including works by Matza, Scheff, Slater, Reich, Goodman, Friendenberg, Etzioni, and others.

Requirements: There will be at least two and possibly three objective quizzes during the semester, plus a take-home final examination distributed substantially in advance of the end of the semester. Provision will be made for additional credit for optional assignments done by those who are so inclined.

Pre-requisites: Sociology 101. Students who have had a great deal of advanced work in sociology should be reminded that this is a survey course.

SOCIOLOGY 275
Social Problems
R. G. Stokes

Organization of Course: Lecture with discussion.

Aim of Course: Presentation of: (a) A sociological perspective on current social issues, including poverty, the urban environment, power distribution and alienation; (b) Nature and origins of deviant life-styles.

Readings: Test of readings, plus five monographs.

Requirements: Two examinations, plus one project (i.e. research paper or oral report to the class.)

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

SOCIOLOGY 278
Criminology
Dr E. D. Driver

Organization of Course: Primarily lecture but with opportunity for discussion during each class meeting.

Aim of Course: A description and evaluation of the field of criminal law, the causes of crime and delinquency, the court system, prisons, and programs of crime prevention.

Readings: E. H. Sutherland and D. R. Cressey, Principles of Criminology.

Requirements: Mid-term and final examinations, and five reports based on field trips to the courts, reformatory, prison, and jail.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

SOCIOLOGY 278
Criminology
Roland Chilton

Organization of Course: Primarily lecture (opportunity for and encouragement of questions and comments).

Aim of Course: To introduce students to the Sociology of Crime and Deliquency through an examination of the system of justice, an assessment of crime statistics, a review of theories of crime and evidence which supports or questions them an examination of the notion of causality, and discussions of such topics as organized crime, corporate crime and the appropriateness of criminal sanctions for specific offenses (overcriminalization). Text by Schur book of edited readings yet to be selected. Suggested - Report of the Presidents commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice entitled The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society.

Requirements: Two mid-term examinations and a final examination (primarily short answer essay, some "objective" items.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

SOCIOLOGY 285
Complex Organizations
Prof. Curt Tausky

Aim of Course: Topics to be discussed: The structure of organizations, need for organization, determinants of productivity, autonomy and constrains, power and authority, scientific management, and human relations.

Readings: N. Mouzeh, Organization and Bureaucracy; C. Tausky, Work Organizations; T. Burns and G. Stalker, The Management of Innovation; T. Caplow and R. McGee, The Academic Marketplace; L. Peter and R. Hull, The Peter Principle; R. Presthus, The Organization Society; Dubin, et. al. Leadership & Productivity.

Requirements: Papers: to be determined. Examinations: a mid-term and final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Sociology 101.

SOCIOLOGY 292
Background in the Study of Social Welfare
Prof. Gordon Sutton

Aim of Course: Concern is with problems with the distribution of wealth and social rewards, emphasizing social policy. Course begins with an historical survey of British and American social welfare policy. Development of modern social policy and practices are considered in the setting of the New Deal and subsequent events. Problems of poverty and inequality in society is discussed from a sociological perspective. Planning, social indicators and the social sciences are viewed as sources of ideas which are important in looking toward social welfare reform.

Readings: Required: Wilensky and Lebeaux, Industrial Society and Social Welfare; U.S. Dept. of HEW, Toward a Social Report and Social Security in the U.S.; Kershaw, Government Against Poverty; Supplementary materials: 20 or 30 articles on reserve or in a reader. Optional discussion of welfare issues: Wednesday 7:30 P.M.

Requirements: no papers; 2 hour exams and final; essay and short answer.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Sociology 101.

SPEECH 203
Argumentation and Debate
Professor Ronald J. Matlon

Organization of Course: The professor will lecture and promote discussion, and the students will participate in oral talks and debates. I. Intro. to Argumentative Propositions; II. The use of Evidence; III. The use of Reasoning; IV. The Structure and Presentation of Arguments; V. Intro. to Debating Propositions; VI. The Debate Case; VII. Attacking and Defending Debate Cases; VIII. The Presentation and Evaluation of Debates.

Aim of Course: This course is aimed at pre-law students, but is, of course, open to any undergraduate.

Readings: Ronald J. Matlon, Manual for Tournament Debate, 1970 (to be distributed by the instructor); Glen E. Mills, Reason in Controversy, 1968 (to be purchased); Harry P. Kerr, Opinion and Evidence, 1962 (to be purchased); Russel R. Windes and Arthur Hastings, Argumentation and Advocacy, 1965 (to be purchased).

Requirements: 2 examinations, oral reports, and written assignments.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

LABOR RELATIONS

Research Practicum
Milton Brooke

Organization of Course: Seminars, usually monthly. To the extent feasible, visiting lecturers will be invited to address students concerning research programs at the Federal and State levels relating to industrial relations, manpower development and labor standards.

Aim of Course: To enhance graduate students' skill and competence in problem-solving, action-oriented research in subject areas of vital concern to the labor community and other interested groups.

Readings: Milton Derber, Research in Labor Problems in the United States, paperback, Random House, 1967; Julian L. Simon, Basic Research Methods in Social Science--The Art of Empirical Investigation, Random House, 1969. Other suggested readings are listed for guidance of students.

Requirements: Term paper on research assignment. Students make oral report to class followed by an exchange of viewpoints and discussion at seminars. No examination.

Pre-requisites for admission: Course normally taken in second year of graduate studies by labor center students.

Added Notes: Class size: 12 to 15 students.

MICROBIOLOGY

MICROBIOLOGY 140
The Biology of Microorganisms
Drs. Lessie and Reiner

Organization of Course: 3 lecture sessions per week.

Aim of Course: The overall aim of the course is to provide a description of the general properties of bacteria and viruses which relate to their important roles in the environment and in disease and an appreciation of the impact of microbial genetics and chemistry on the current understanding of the molecular basis of life.

Readings: Selected Scientific American offprints.

Requirements: 3 or 4 exams. Final exam optional.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

MICROBIOLOGY 250
General Microbiology
R.P. Mortlock

Organization of Course: 2, 1-hour lectures; 2, 3 hour labs.

Aim of Course: Introductory course in microbiology for science majors.

Requirements: 3 to 4 exams.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Organic chemistry and one semester of a biological science.

LINGUISTICS

LINGUISTICS 201/501
General Linguistics.
Donald C. Freeman

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: The aim of this course is to acquaint students with the basic principles of the structure of human language--the most complex and least understood human faculty. It will consider such questions as these: the validity of our intuitions about our native language; the principles by which speakers encode and decode sentences of natural language; the principles by which a child in a remarkably short time constructs, from very limited data, a grammar of his native tongue; selected topics in the syntax and sound structure of English.

Readings: Noam Chomsky, Language and Mind (1968); M. K. Burt, From Deep to Surface Structure (1971); D. T. Langendoen, Essentials of English Grammar. Other assigned library reserve readings.

Requirements: Two hour examinations, one final examination, no papers.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

LINGUISTICS 202/502
Phonological Theory

Organization of Course: Lecture

Aim of Course: To acquaint the student with the theoretical models used in describing the sound systems of natural language.

Readings: Required: The sound pattern of English

Requirements: Weekly exercises. Hour exams: 2. Final. Possible short term paper.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Strong recommended: Linguistics 201/501 General Linguistics. Upon permission of the instructor.

Pre-requisites for admission: None

HISTORY 140
Western Civilization From 1500-1815
Ron Bittel

Organization of Course: 2 lectures and a discussion group per week

Aim of Course: With an emphasis on intellectual and social history, to study the world of the old Regime; and to pay special attention to these phenomena—such as modern science and political revolution—which altered and survived the Old Regime.

Readings: Required: assorted paperbacks on English, French and American Revolutions, one or two period novels

Suggested: narrative text as supplement to lectures.

Requirements: one or two hourlies and a final, optional paper, active participation in discussion groups.

Pre-requisites for Admission. none.

HISTORY 140
Problems In Early Modern European History
Charles Rearick

Organization of Course: Two lectures and one discussion section per week.

Aim of Course: The course will focus on three large topics in European history since 1500: the Reformation, the Enlightenment, and the French Revolution. Major objectives are to understand the ideas of influential or representative figures and the outcome of each conflict. Changes in attitudes toward religion (from Luther and his time to Montaigne to Locke to Voltaire and so on) will receive much attention.

Readings: Three paperbacks of a narrative and interpretative nature plus several paperbacks such as Selections from Montaigne's Essays and Voltaire's Candide for discussions.

Requirements: Probably one mid-term essay examination, one short paper, and one final examination.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

HISTORY 150
Development of American Civilization
Prof. Hugh F. Bell

Organization of Course: 3 meeting/week-two lecture and one discussion

Aim of Course: Introduction to the principal themes of American history. Emphasis is on the development of institutions and ideas rather than chronological narration.

Readings: A variety of paperbacks-titles not determined as yet.

Requirements: One mid-term and a final exam

Pre-requisites for admission: None.

Added notes: Some knowledge of the main outlines of American history is assumed.

HISTORY 152 and HISTORY 735
Professor Howard H. Quint

History 152 Honors: Enrollment in this course which considers selective topics in American history from 1607 to 1877 is limited to students selected by the honors office and by the Department of History. Students are expected to read at least 1 (one) book a week and to be prepared for a lengthy seminar discussion both on its contents and on materials relevant to it.

HISTORY 735: (Topics in the 20th Century) This course will concentrate on select problems of the general period, 1900-1920 such as: the nature of Progressive leadership, the role of business in reform, the cult of efficiency, direction legislation, the nature of organized labor, socialism and syndicalism, Muckraking, wartime intolerance, conservation, the cult of moral uplift, and local politics. Reading assignments will be substantial, in general, a book a week plus articles in learned journals. There will be one major paper, but no examinations.

HISTORY 152
Development of American Civilization
Honors Section
Mr. Davis

Organization of Course: Discussion and pro-seminar

Aim of Course: To examine and analyse several key themes in American history in order to better understand the basic forces in American life to 1877.

Readings: No text; wide use of paperbacks

Requirements: Weekly discussion of common readings, occasional quizzes, short oral and written reports.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Students will be selected by the honors committees of the department and the university. Enrollment will be limited to 15 students.

Added Notes: The topical approach will be used and will include such topics as Puritanism, Power Politics and Wars for Empire, Revolutionary Causation, the Significance of the Frontier, Jeffersonianism vs. Hamiltonism, the Rise of the Common Man, Mission and Manifest Destiny, Slavery and Abolition, Civil War and Reconstruction.

HISTORY 185
New Approaches to the Study of History
Instructors: Behenna, Boyer, Nissenbaum, Tracy, Valvo, Wilson

The Salem witch trials of 1692 will be the single topic of investigation this fall. Classes will meet in weekly two-hour seminar sessions and, jointly, for a one-hour weekly lecture. Part of the course will involve a controlled probing of the original trial records and other important sources. The regular brief papers and exercises will not be graded, but will be returned with extensive comments and discussed in class. As the semester progresses, the class will use its knowledge to branch out, singly or in small groups, into more extensive independent projects—still working with original sources in Amherst and Salem. At the end of the course the class will evaluate its work and compare conclusions with those of modern historians who have written about the trials.

Aim of Course: To some extent, the aims of the course will be defined as the semester progresses. Broadly speaking, the aim is to provide the student an opportunity to discover the uses to which historical sources can be put, and the kinds of questions to which such sources can provide answers.

Requirements: A collection of relevant documents—trial records, Salem-Village and church records, wills, deeds, sermons, etc.—will be available in either printed or mimeographed form. In this course more than most, regular class attendance and active participation, as well as prompt completion of all assignments, are centrally important. There are no examinations or quizzes.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. This is an introductory-level course designed for both majors and non-majors. While majors receive upper-level American history credit for Hist. 185, they are encouraged to take the course early in their undergraduate careers.

HISTORY 200/500
Ancient World to Alexander the Great
Mr. Kirk

I - Prehistoric man, hunter and food-gatherer.

II - Evolving agriculture and techniques in S. W. Asia.

III - Literate urban civilization in Mesopotamia and Egypt.

IV - "Imperialism," acculturation, and international relations.

V - Israel, from tribal confederacy to petty kingdoms: prophets of ethical monotheism.

VI - Early Greek politics and science.

Required texts: (all in paperback): McEvedy, Colin: The Penguin Atlas of Ancient History; Clark, Grahame & Piggott, Stuart: Prehistoric Societies; Jones, Tom B.: From the Tigris to the Tiber; Covensky, Milton: The Ancient Near Eastern Tradition; Hexter, J.H.: The Judaeo-Christian Tradition; Finley, M.I.: Early Greece, the Bronze & Archaic Ages. Reserve list of a dozen books, for reference rather than detailed study. "Universal history...is not a burden on the memory, but an illumination of the soul" (Acton).

Term-paper on subject of own choice, required from graduate students, optional for undergraduates.

Two hour-examinations, short essays to test broad comprehension and ability to conceptualize and discuss, not to test memorization of factual detail. Same principle applies to final examination.

For Juniors and Seniors only

HISTORY 205/505
Age of the Renaissance
Vincent Ilardi

Organization of Course: lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: The course deals with the development of new ideas within the institutions of the Church, the Empire, the national monarchies, the Italian city states, and in education and in the arts -- the work of a new breed of intellectuals (the humanists), who revolted against medieval restraints and sought to build a NEW AGE based on the contributions of ancient Greece and Rome and on the dignity of MAN. The emphasis is on problems of intellectual history and their role in the shaping of modern civilization.

Readings: Assigned reading in past years: Ferguson, Europe in Transition, 1300-1520; Boccaccio, Decameron; Dante, On World Government; Burckhardt, The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy; Huizinga, The Waning of the Middle Ages; Vasari, Lives of the Artists; Cassirer, et al., Renaissance Philosophy of Man.

Requirements: one paper of 1500 words (5-6 pages) usually on an original source; one mid-term exam and a final, one of which can be given orally on request.

Pre-requisites for Admission: European history survey course before 1600 or assigned background reading and permission of the Instructor.

Added Notes: Considerable use of slides of Renaissance works of art.

HISTORY 210
Survey of European History from 1870-1914

Organization of Course: Both lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: To survey European history from 1870 to 1914 with emphasis on the interrelationship between domestic and international politics of the major powers.

Readings: A text (as yet undecided) and a number of supplementary readings.

Requirements: There will either be two hour exams and a final or an hour exam, a paper, and a final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

HISTORY 213
Intellectual History of 20th Century Europe
W. M. Johnston

Organization of Course: Discussion seasoned by lectures.

Aim of Course: To acquaint students with ideologies and world-views that have shaped today's thinking, especially as regards thinking about the future.

Readings: Authors advocating and criticizing topics such as Marxism, anarchism, existentialism, and ethology will be read, mostly in anthologies.

Requirements: One 15-page paper or three 5-page papers will bear witness to how much a student has learned from class discussion. NO examinations.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

Added Notes: Students who like to talk in class will enjoy this course more than those who do not.

HISTORY 216
History of the Russian Revolution
R. H. McNeal

Organization of Course: lecture.

Aim of Course: To elucidate the revolutionary movement in Russia before 1917, the overthrow of the imperial regime and the provisional government in 1917, and the establishment of the Soviet government.

Readings: Has not yet been determined. Will probably include: A. Yarmolinsky, The Road to Revolution; W. Chamberlin, The Russian Revolution; L. Trotsky, History of the Russian Revolution.

Requirements: Has not yet been determined. There will probably be one or two hour tests and no outside essay, owing to library problems.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None, but some previous course in history or on Russian literature or culture is recommended.

HISTORY 218
Early Modern Germany
Mr. Levy

Organization of Course: lectures plus discussion.

Aim of Course: An introduction to the political and intellectual history of the German states from the end of the Thirty Years War to the Revolution of 1848. Lectures trace the development of the major German states, with special attention to the rise of Brandenburg-Russia. Weekly discussion assignments will include the classics of German literary art and philosophy.

Readings: A basic text plus weekly paperback assignments (reading load will hover around 150-175 pages). Some titles: Goethe, Faust (part II); Herder, History of the Man; Engeles, The German Revolution; Grimmelshausen, Adventures of a Simpleton; Goethe, The Sorrow of Young Werther; etc.

Requirements: Mid-term and final of the take-home variety worth one-third and one-half the final grade. Class performance and 2-3 quizzes on the basic text will account for the remaining one-sixth of the grade. (Graduate students will be asked to do a term paper instead of the exams; undergraduates may also opt for a paper instead of the exams.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

HISTORY 220
Modern Scandanavia

Organization of Course: Some lecture but mainly discussion.

Aim of Course: To examine the domestic and international politics of the Scandanavian states in the twentieth century.

Readings: As yet undecided.

Added Notes: This is expected to be a small class with emphasis on discussion.

HISTORY 221
France since 1789
Professor Charles Rearick

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussions.

Aim of Course: The course will examine major social and political conflicts in French society since the Revolution of 1789. Special attention will be given to the defeats and victories of anticlerical groups, liberals, republicans, socialists, organized workers, and artists in the nineteenth century. Emphasis will be placed on the attitudes and ideas of the various groups as they take a position regarding, say, the Church, a Napoleon, or Alfred Dreyfus.

Readings: Gordon Wright, France in Modern Times; J. Friguglietti and E. Kennedy, The Shaping of Modern France. Also several paperbacks on specific periods of French History and at least one novel.

Requirements: One short paper at the least and two essay examinations (one of which will be a final.)

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

HISTORY 230/530
History of Modern Italy
Mr. Sarti

Organization of Course: Lectures are the basic means of communication but the instructor welcomes and encourages informal discussions. Students are free to ask questions at any time. Audio-visual aids, particularly musical selections, are used to illustrate major themes.

Aim of Course: Particular attention is paid to the formation of an Italian national consciousness in the 19th century, problems of modernization, the rise of popular and radical movements, and the nature of Italian Fascism. The problems of Italian society are presented as typical of most rapidly modernizing countries.

Readings: Cassels, Alan. Fascist Italy (pb); Delzell, Charles F., Italy in Modern Times (pamphlet); Lampedusa, Giuseppe di., The Leopard (pb); Historical novel; Mack Smith, Denis. Ed., Garibaldi (pb). "Great Lives Observed" series; Saladino, Salvatore., Italy From Unification to 1919 (pb). Other readings on library reserve.

Requirements: A mid-term and a final, both in essay form. Short quizzes available on request. Also, a short paper on a topic to be chosen by the student with the instructor's approval. A substantial research paper required of graduate students.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. No reading knowledge of Italian required.

HISTORY 301
Argentina
Robert A. Potash

Organization of Course: Lectures and discussions.

Aim of Course: The purpose of the course is to provide an understanding of the historical evolution of a key Latin American state. The transformation of Argentina from a colonial backwater in the eighteenth century to a seemingly modernizing society toward the end of the nineteenth century, the attempts at democratization in the twentieth century, and the experiences with Peronism, militarism and nationalism constitute some of the themes of the courses.

Readings: J. L. Romero, A History of Argentine Political Thought; J. S. Scobie, Argentina A City and Nation; R. A. Potash, The Army and Politics in Argentina.

Requirements: One hour examination; one paper (about 10 pp); final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: No formal requirement. An introductory course in history would be helpful.

HISTORY 304/604
Gran Colombia
Mrs. Loy

Organization of Course: Lecture-Discussion. A comparative approach to the history of Venezuela and Colombia emphasizing similarities and contrast in their development from colonial times to the present. Lecture themes consider conquest, colonization, winning independence, the collapse of Gran Colombia, the rise of parties and caudillos in the nineteenth century. Approximately half of the course concentrates on such twentieth century topics as the loss of Panama, economic and social change, militarism, the church, agrarian reform, race relation, and some films.

Aim of Course: la violencia. To consider in detail a sub-region of Latin America; To utilize techniques of comparative history; To create an understanding of current Latin American problems.

Readings: Readings draw upon some paperbacks, novels and excerps from primary and secondary sources which are duplicated and distributed to the class.

Requirements: Exams: Mid-term and final, both essay type; Papers: One short paper or two reports.

Pre-requisites for Admission: History 120-121 or background in Latin-American studies is highly recommended.

HISTORY 316
The colonial period of Amer. History

Readings: A variety of paperbacks - titles not determined as yet.

Requirements: A variety to paperbacks
Requirements: 3 short (5 pages) papers and a final exam

Pre-requisites for Admission: None - though this course is not recommended for those students who have not taken History 150 or its equivalent.

HISTORY 320/620
The Civil War and Reconstruction
Mr. Oates

Introduction

"The Civil War and Reconstruction," an eminent scholar recently contended, "constitute the central epoch in American history." It was a central era because so many crucial issues were at stake: the destiny of white Southerners who sought a solution to their fears and problems in a romanticized past; the very survival of the United States as a nation; and the fate of the black man in American white society. This course will try to provide an in-depth examination of the major themes of the period (roughly from the 1820's to 1877), to take a critical, dry-eyed look at how a whole generation of Americans failed to solve the conflicts that divided them and finally plunged into civil war because of that failure.

Part One of the course will try to explain not just how, but why the Civil War -- and unmitigated national tragedy -- ever happened in the first place; it will evaluate all the old explanations (agriculture vs. industry, for example) and will incorporate the most recent interpretations to show what caused sectional hostilities, and to assess particularly the role of slavery, the plight of the black man, and the growing fears of white Southerners in the coming of the Civil War. Part Two examines the course and conduct of the War itself, from the point of view of both sides, and poses the crucial question of what the War solved, if it solved anything. Part Three, covering the controversial Reconstruction period, is frankly "revisionist" -- that is; it utilizes the most recent historical thinking to demonstrate that this myth-ridden period was not "simply a black-out of honest government" (as a number of high school history courses still portray it), but was rather a time of many noteworthy achievements.

As an added feature of the course, we will see a motion picture, The Birth of A Nation. The film was made in 1915, but it is still worth viewing because it contains most of the myths and legends about the Civil War era that this course challenges. The film is blatantly racist toward slaves in specific and black people in general, a film that reveals the racial attitudes of white Americans not only in the antebellum period but also in the post Civil War era. I think it also reveals the origins of some of the racial myths that persist in our own time.

Readings: Eight paperbacks, including a variety of things -- biographies, dramatic narratives, novels, and artful essays on the major themes and most significant personalities.

Examinations: There will be an hour examination and a final. Undergraduates who prefer independent work may elect to write a term essay of about 15 pages in lieu of the hour exam, but not of the final exam. All graduate students are required to write a paper.

HISTORY 324/624
The Progressive Era
Mr. Tager

This course represents an examination of the effects of the Industrial Revolution upon the perceptions of the American people from 1890 to 1920. This "age of reform" is to be surveyed as the transition stage between an agrarian and an urbanized society. Changes in politics, culture and diplomacy will be analyzed from the point of view of the conflict between a pre-industrial system of values based upon individual freedom and the social problems engendered by a highly complex technological society.

Specifically, some of the topics to be studied are: 1) the gospel of wealth philosophy and the intellectual currents which challenged this notion--James, Dewey, Veblen, Ward, Norris, Dreiser. 2) the nature of the reform impulse and an examination of the controversy over the cause of Progressivism. 3) the Social Gospel movement and the social justice movement, and the Progressive movement on state and local levels. 4) Roosevelt and Wilson and national Progressivism. 5) the impact of U.S. domestic affairs upon foreign policy--the Spanish American War, Latin America, the Far East, the First World War and the peace.

This is a lecture course, but there will be numerous occasions when student participation is anticipated. The readings will consist of about a dozen paperbacks and some articles. There will be 2 examinations and the student may choose between a term paper or taking a final examination.

For Juniors and Seniors only.

HISTORY 325/625
United States Between the World Wars
David S. Wyman

Organization of Course: Lecture. Main emphasis is political; secondary emphasis on economic factors. Part on 1920's deals with the business government; progressive political currents and the emergence of urban liberalism; the economy; and several problems connected with the transition from a small town oriented to an urban society. Part on 1930's concentrates on the Depression and the New Deal.

Aim of Course: 1. A basic foundation of facts and events of the period. 2. Some understanding of the causes behind the events. 3. To explore relationships between events of the interwar years and American society of the 1960's and 1970's. 4. To impart something of the moods of the 1920's and of the Depression years. 5. To put forward some sensible interpretations of the 1920's and of the New Deal.

Readings: Eight to ten books, totalling about 2500 pages. Some of the reading focuses on social history or social conditions.

Requirements: Probably a mid-term and a final exam, both mainly essay. Most likely, short reports (1 to 3 pages per book) will be required for the assigned readings. Undergraduates may do a short paper (about 8 pages), but it is optional. Graduate students must write a short research paper or 4 critical book reviews, in addition to doing the basic course assignments.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Junior, Senior, or Graduate status.

HISTORY 340
Early Islamic Civilization
Professor Biddle

This course is a study of the rise and development of Early Islamic Civilization from 570 A.D. to 946 A.D. The life of the prophet Muhammad and the influences which shaped his career as founder of Islam and the Muslim Arabian state are followed by a study of the conquests of the Islamic community which ranged from Central Asia to India and from Egypt across North Africa to Spain. The impact of the older civilizations on the Arab Muslims is considered and the administration of the Islamic Empire which reflects the Arab-Muslim reaction to the formal structure of the older Persian and Byzantine Empires is examined. Arab interest and awareness of the cultural heritage of the older civilizations at first practical and mundane, later more abstract is considered. The role of The Islamic Empire in the preservation and transmission of the classical heritage to Europe is also studied. The course also considers the internal structure of the Islamic Empire under the Umayyads and Abassids in an attempt to explain the change from a viable open society to one that is unable to meet the challenge of military groups from beyond the pale of the orthodox Islamic world.

HISTORY 360

HISTORY 392
Topics on the Jewish Holocaust 1933-1945
David S. Wyman

Organization of Course: This is a seminar type of course consisting of (1) reading and discussion and (2) writing a major research paper. In the early weeks of the semester, students will read some general materials on the Jewish Holocaust while deciding upon individual research topics. In the middle weeks, reading and discussion will move to such issues as the background to the Holocaust, the response of the non-Nazi world to the agony of the European Jews, the death camps and the survivors, and post-1945 attempts to understand this monstrous tragedy. In the final weeks, students will present their findings orally to the group.

Topics to be Considered: Each student will select, in consultation with the instructor, a topic of his choice within the general context of the Jewish Holocaust. Because of the nature of this subject, important topics can be found in United States, Latin American, British, European, and other areas of history. A few of the possibilities are: the responses of any of the following to the plight of Europe's Jews--the Latin American nations, the United States, Great Britain and possibly others; the Palestine issue and the Holocaust; evolution of the Nazi policy toward Jews; the concentration and death camps; one or more of several philosophical and psychological issues raised by the "final solution"; the reaction of one or more of the Nazi occupied or neutral countries to the Jewish tragedy (e.g., Denmark, France, Switzerland); individual figures in the Holocaust.

Readings: Gerald Reitlinger, The Final Solution; Varian Fry, Assignment Rescue; David S. Wyman, Paper Walls; and the equivalent of about 6 other books.

Requirements: Completion of a major research paper. Oral presentation of the substance of the paper to the group. Participation in discussions of the readings and of the paper. Brief (1 to 3 pages) written reports may be required on the assigned readings.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Junior or senior status. Class limited to 16 students.
Added Notes: The history major may count this course either within or outside his upper division specialization requirement, depending on the subject of his research paper.

HISTORY 394
History of Modern Vietnam
Mr. Minear

Organization of Course: Lecture.

Aim of Course: To view Vietnam's development in the modern period, with special reference to European and American involvement.

Readings: A variety of paperbound titles required.

Requirements: To be announced.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. A survey on East Asia considered helpful.

HISTORY 702
W. M. Johnston

Organization of Course: Six weeks of discussion followed by six weeks of criticizing students' papers.

Aim of Course: This course is designed for incoming graduate students. It introduces them to theories of historical research, and it subjects their writings to intensive scrutiny.

Readings: D. H. Fischer, Historians' Fallacies.

Requirements: A research paper is prepared for the class to read. A revised version is due in mid-January. NO examinations.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Admission is restricted to graduate students.

Added Notes: This course fulfills the requirement for one (1) historiography course.

HISTORY 703
American Historiography to the Civil War
Mr. Davis

Organization of Course: Discussion and pro-seminar.

Aim of Course: The aim of this course is to provide first-year graduate students with an understanding of the major themes as developed in the works of leading historians and of various schools of historical writing. The approach will be topical and the selected readings will represent the most significant and lively written articles and monographs in the field.

Readings: Texts: J. P. Greene, The Reinterpretation of the American Revolution; Grob and Billias, Interpretations of American History; Eisenstadt, American History; Fine and Brown, The American Past; Several Problems in American Civilization in the Amherst College Series.

Requirements: Weekly discussion of common readings, one oral report and paper, two examinations (mid-semester and final)

Pre-requisites for Admission: Open to all graduate history majors.

Added Notes: Enrollment will be limited to 16 students.

HISTORY 733
Topics in the American Civil War Era
Mr. Oates

Introduction

If the function of a research seminar is to provide experience in historical research and writing, then the task of a topics seminar is to offer training for those who plan to teach. Thus the design of a topics seminar is to provide students with a comprehensive knowledge of the subject matter, an awareness of its problems and historiographical controversies, and an understanding of the significance as well as the facts of the period under examination. "True scholarship," James Russell Lowell told his students at Harvard in the 1850's, "consists in knowing not what things exist, but what they mean; it is not memory but judgment." The aim of this seminar, then is to ask not only how the American Civil War came, was fought and resolved, but why it happened and what were its significances. Moreover, (and just as importantly), why have historians disagreed so sharply in their efforts to explain the causes of the War, to assess the role of slavery and the plight of the Negro in the coming of that tragedy, and to evaluate both the "forces" and the people who were instrumental in bringing the War about? What does such disagreement among historians of the Civil War reveal about the nature of History? About historians themselves?

Examinations and Papers: You may elect two of the following options: 1. A mid-term examination--either oral or a take-home written exam (you make the choice). 2. An essay of 15 to 20 pages on some problem or theme of the period. 3. A final examination on discussions and readings -- either oral or written (again, you make the choice.)

Readings and Discussions: Each seminar will be devoted to discussing, criticizing, and evaluating an assigned set of readings about a major topic in the Civil War era. The Seminar Outline below gives the topic and the readings for the weekly discussions. I've also included a supplementary reading list under each topic; that list contains what I regard as the more significant writings on the subject. If you have the time, try to skim some of the volumes on the supplementary list so that you will be acquainted with them for the purpose of the M.A. or PhD. examinations.

LATIN

Intensive Elementary Latin - 4 cr.
Professor Lawall

Organization of Course: In the regular class meetings on MWF new material will be presented with audiovisual aids. In the sections on TUTH students will meet in small groups for practice in active use of the language. Laboratory sessions will be conducted at the scheduled hours in a regular classroom. (No lab fee) These sessions provide opportunities for supervised homework with the aid of taped pattern practices and the presence of an experienced graduate student to help students on an individual basis.
Aim of Course: To master half of the basic morphology and syntactical structures of the Latin language, to acquire a vocabulary of about 1000 Latin words, and to introduce the student to a typical Roman family through extensive graded readings. Students progress directly from this course to Latin 140 and may thereby fulfill their foreign language requirement in one year.
Readings: Oerberg, Lingua Latina Secundum Naturae Rationem Explicata, Vol. I, Pars I. Instruction Bookiet, Latin-English Vocabuiary, and Ars Grammatica to accompany the text.
Requirements: Frequent quizzes and brief compostions; 1 mid-term and final exam.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None. However, it is expected that students who have had some Latin in high school will enroll in Latin 110, while those with no previous experience will enroll in Latin 112.
Added Notes: 9 out of 10 students in Professor Lawall's experimental section of this course in the fall of 1970 reported that they preferred this method to traditional methods of learning Latin and that they would recommend the course to others. Classics 102, Roman Civilization and Literature, is a recommended collateral course in the life and thought of the ancient Romans.

Intensive Elementary Latin
4 credits
Professor Lawall

Organization of Course: Same course as Latin 110 above. The two sections of Latin 112 have been specially set up for students with no previous experience with Latin.

LATIN 140
Intensive Intermediate Latin (C)
4 credits
Professor Cleary

Organization of Course: In the regular class meetings on MWF new material will be presented with audiovisual aids. In the sections on TUTH students will meet in small groups for practice in active use of the language. Laboratory sessions will be conducted at the scheduled hours in a regular classroom. (No lab fee) These sessions provide opportunities for supervised homework with the aid of taped pattern practices and the presence of an experienced graduate student to help students on an individual basis.
Aim of Course: The first half of the semester will be taken up with a thorough review of morphology and syntax with emphasis on acquiring an active command of the language; readings dealing with Roman family life and mythology. In the second half of the semester passages from Livy and Eutropius on early Roman history will be read. By the end of the course students will have attained an intermediate reading ability with an active vocabulary of about 2,500 words. Satisfies the foreign language requirement of the College of Arts and Sciences.
Readings: Oerberg, Lingua Latina Secondum Naturae Rationem Explicata, Vol. I, Partes I et II, Vol. II. Instruction Bookiets, Latin-English Vocabulary, and Ars Grammatica to accompany the texts.
Requirements: Frequent quizzes and brief compostions; 1 mid-term and final exam.
Pre-requisites for Admission: 2 or 3 years of high school Latin. No placement test required.
Added Notes: Classics 102, Roman Civilization and Literature, is a recommended collateral course in the life and thought of the ancient Romans.

LATIN 161
Catullus and Horace
Professor Robert Goar.

Organization of Course: There will be three meetings per week, at which selected poems of each author will be translated and discussed. The emphasis will be on interpretation, but grammatical and syntactic problems presented by each poem will be thoroughly examined prior to interpretation and evaluation of the poem itself.
Aim of Course: To acquaint students with the best poems of two major Roman poets. Poems to be read will stress the vicissitudes of love; the individual and the demands of society; man and nature; friendship; artistic integrity; the winning of happiness; the refuge of art; man's mortality; acceptance of political change; rejection of materialistic goals; the attainment of immortality through artistic achievement.
Readings: Merrill's Catulius and Bennet's Odes and Epodes of Horace are the required texts.
Thornton Wilder's The Ides of March is suggested as collateral reading for the first part of the course, for a better understanding of the social context in which Catullus did his work. There will be an introductory lecture on Horace and his era.
Requirements: There will be two hour exams, and perhaps one short paper.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Four years of high school Latin.
Added Notes: None

LATIN 307/607.
The Teaching of Latin in Secondary Schools

ITALIAN

ITALIAN 126
Intensive Elementary Italian
8 hours, 6 credits
Staff

Organization of Course: Course meets 5 days a week for a total of 8 hours, including lab. 6 credits. Section size will be limited to 15 for maximum student participation.

Aim of Course: The acquisition of basic skills in the language. Learning effected by means of immediate correction and continual reinforcement.

Readings: Grammar and selected readings.

Requirements: Quizzes, two hour exams, final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. Course is intended for students with no previous training in Italian.

Added Notes: This course has been offered for the past two years as an alternative to the first year of traditional four semester sequence. This year, acting on composite student and faculty reactions which indicate that this course is both more rewarding and effective, the department has decided to offer it as the only option to beginning students. Advisors and prospective students should be aware of the fact that though the course covers the amount of work normally done less well in one year, it does not mean double the amount of work. It is simply a more efficient way of doing things.

ITALIAN 146
Intensive Intermediate Italian
6 hours, 6 credits
Staff

Organization of Course: The course meets three days a week for a total of six hours--six credits. Sections will be small for maximum student participation. Two instructors will teach as a team.

Aim of Course: Reinforcement of the basic skills and further preparation in the language. Readings and discussions of literary texts, and an introduction to Italian culture and current scene. Successful completion of this course will satisfy CAS foreign language qualification and will enable the student to perform competently in more advanced courses in Italian literature and language.

Readings: Italian periodicals, an anthology of short stories and poetry, one novel, one play.

Requirements: Frequent compositions on various subjects, occasional short quizzes, two one hour exams, final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Italian 126 or equivalent of one year of Italian in college.

ITALIAN 161 (C)
Introduction to Italian literature I.
3 hours, 3 credits.

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: Close reading of representative works in Italian literature from 13th-17th centuries with some stress on historical prospective.

Readings: One anthology and one or two short works.

Requirements: Mid-term, final, one or two short papers or oral reports.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Intermediate proficiency.

Added notes: This course may be used to fulfill CAS core requirement in Humanities.

ITALIAN 181
Oral Italian
3 hours, 3 credits

Organization of Course: Discussion.

Aim of Course: To provide students with opportunity to practice speaking Italian and improve their command of the language through supervised but informal discussion on a variety of topics.

Readings: Short stories in current periodicals.

Requirements: Short oral quiz, and mid-semester and final evaluation.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Intermediate proficency.

ITALIAN 255
Italian compostion
3 hours, 3 credits.

Organization of Course: Primarily discussion and in class correction of written exercises.

Aim of Course: To develop competence in writing Italian necessary for those who intend to pursue advanced courses in Italian language and literature.

Readings: Reference grammar.

Requirements: Mid-term and final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Intermediate proficiency in Italian.

Added Notes: This course was originally conceived to give the student training in less frequent elements of grammar as well as practice in actual composition. Our experience last year, however, showed that the double function could not be served in one semester. Consequently we are in the process of expanding the course into a two semester sequence in which case this course would be concerned primarily with advanced grammar and language work.

ITALIAN 292 P.
Dante in Translation
Dr. Sara Sturm

Organization of Course: Lectures will provide background material, but class will be conducted primarily through discussion of works read.

Aim of Course: To provide a solid introduction to the works of Dante, particularly the New Life and the Divine Comedy, emphasizing both his ideas and their poetic expression. Some reference will be made to Dante's contribution to the Western intellectual and literary tradition.

Readings: Dante Aleghieri, On Monarchy, The New Life, The Divine Comedy; Barbi's Life of Dante.

Requirements: Mid-semester and final examinations and one brief paper.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. May not be taken for credit by Italian majors

ITALIAN 310/610
Prehumanism and the Early Renaissance.
3 hours, 3 credits

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion

Aim of Course: A study of the major figures in Italian literature of the 14th and 15th centuries; emphasis on the elaboration of humanistic thought regarding man's personality and his education. The class will read and critically analyse works of Petrarca and Boccaccio. It will also consider selected works of humanists such as Alberti, Valla, Pico della Mirandola and others, who in the next century went on to develop many concepts first expressed by the two great Florentines. A discussion of medieval literature and thought before Petrarca will precede by way of introduction. The course will close with readings illustrating the subsequent development of humanism in Europe.

Readings: Texts: Petrarca, Il Canzoniere; Boccaccio, Il Decamerone; selected works of other authors plus supplementary readings of appropriate critical works.

Requirements: One paper, and class reports. Mid-term exam and final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Italian 161, 162 or equivalent.

ITALIAN 345/645
Modern Poetry

Organization of Course: The class will meet for three hours a week for three credits.

Aim of Course: This course will be a study of the development and major currents of modern poetry in Italy. Historical perspective will be gained by considering the work of Carducci and Pascoli, with reference to the Crepuscolari and the avant-garde theories of Futurism. The class will emphasize the hermetic poets and will therefore do close reading and discussion of Ungaretti, Montale, Saba and Quasimodo. Throughout the course attention will be paid to the Italian social, political and cultural climate in which modern poetry evolved.

Readings: Texts: Poeti del Novecento (two paperback volumes), with supplementary reading in other collections.

Requirements: Two papers, mid-term and final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Italian 162 or equivalent

Added Notes: This course is being offered for the first time.

ITALIAN 350
Modern Novel
3 hours, 3 credits
Zina Tillona

Organization of Course: Some lecture but primarily discussion.

Aim of Course: Detailed study and analysis of the works of major figures in the Italian novel from Verga to the post World War period.

Readings: Approximately 8 novels chosen from the works of the following: Pirandello, Buzzati, Vittorini, Moravia, Calvino, Cassola, Sciascia.

Requirements: One paper, mid-term and final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Italian 162 or equivalent.

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

AFE 110 WORLD FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES
Dr. John H. Foster-Satisfies University Core Requirement D.

Organization of Course: Two lectures and one small group discussion group per week.

Aim of Course: The course has two objectives:

a. Introduction to the forces controlling world food and resource use problems

b. Expand the student's world view of natural resource problems.

The course has four sections: (1) Pressures on world resources, (2) World resource potentials, (3) Concepts of resource allocation and decision making, (4) Other influences on resource decisions.

Readings: Two required paperbacks:

1. Hunker, H. L. Zimmermann's Introduction to World Resources.

2. Heilbroner, Robert L., The Great Ascent.

Requirements:

a. One 5 page term paper.

b. Two hour exams and a final.

c. Participation in a public resource policy debate in discussion sections.

d. Short quizzes on assigned reading.

AFE-235 AGRICULTURAL BISINESS MANAGEMENT
Deane Lee

Organization of Course: 2-1 hour lectures, 1-2 hour discussion

Aim of Course: The aim of this course is to introduce the student to the application of economic principles, management tools, and analytical methods in the management of commercial farms and other agricultural firms.

Readings: Text: Farm Business Management by Castle and Becker. Selected readings are required from other standard books in the field.

Requirements: Three examinations, one paper.

Pre-requisites for Admission: One introductory Economics or Agricultural Economics course is recommended.

Added Notes: To give the student experience in making business-oriented decisions, extensive use is made of a computer game.

AGRICULTURAL AND FOOD ECONOMICS 341 PRICE THEORY
Professor Christensen

Organization of Course: Lecture - Discussion

Aim of Course: To integrate economic theory and quantitative procedures in a manner that develops the analytic ability of the student and provides him with the tools of rational economic decision making.

Readings: Elementary Mathematics of Price Theory-Allen; Graphic Analysis Applications in Agricultural Economics-Waugh; Demand and Supply Analysis - Waugh.

Requirements: Homework exercises (graded); Class participation; Team project; Several quizzes and examinations.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Required-Ag. & Food Econ. 206, 125, Math. 121; Also Desirable-Ag. & Food Econ. 235, Econ. 201, and Math. 116-117.

AGRICULTURAL AND FOOD ECON. 352
AGRICULTURAL POLICY
Professor David A. Storey

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: To evaluate U.S. public policies and programs relating to agriculture and the rural sector of the country. Major topics will include farm price and income support programs, programs for alleviation of rural poverty and food trade and aid policies. The particular programs and policies considered will be evaluated within a broad conceptual and methodological framework which considers all national goals, programs, public revenue sources and expenditures.

Readings: Texts: (1) Tweeten, Luther, Foundations of Farm Policy; (2) Haveman, Robert, The Economics of the Public Sector. Other reading materials will be handed out or made available on reserve.

Requirements: Exams: Midterm and final; Class Debates: Each student will participate in one class debate and will submit written reports on other debate topics. Debates will be on topics of current interest.

AG & FOOD ECONOMICS 582
"Water Quality Economics"
Mr. Robert L. Vertrees

Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion.

Aim of Course: To teach the student the basic principles of economics that are applicable to water quality management and demonstrate how the economi principles are applied in practice. Students cannot become "Water Quality Economists" or "Resource Economists" in a one semester course. However, after completing the course they should be able to read and understand the relevant literature and comprehend how their chosen discipline and profession interact with various types of economists in the water quality managment effort.

Readings: Text: Allen V. Kneese and Blair T. Bower, Managing Water Quallty; Economics, Techonology, Institutions (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press for Resources For the Future, Inc., 1968).

Requirements: Several problems will be given of a practical nature whereby the students apply economic theory to practical situations of water quality management of firms and municipalities. Quizzes on occassion will be given. An in-class mid-term and a final examination will be given. A term paper on a topic of interest to the student is required.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None. Preferably students have had an introductory course in economics.

Added Notes: Course is interdisciplinary in nature, with students in natural and engineering sciences as well as the social sciences invited to attend.

F&AE 381
Unit Operations in Food Engineering
Professor S. W. Fletcher

Organization of Course: 1-2 hour lab; 2-1 hour lecture.

Aim of Course: To study the fundamental principles of heat transfer, fluid flow, properties of biological materials and psychrometry as applied to the unit operations in food processing, including evaporation, distillation, dehydration, freeze drying, cooling and freezing.

Readings: Required: Earle, Unit Operations in Food Processing; suggested- Henderson & Perry, Ag. Process Eng.

Requirements: 3 hour exam; 8 lab reports; 6-8 quizzes; occasional homework.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Nominal Math & Physics background.

F&AE 390
Instrumentation for Scientists
Professor E. A. Johnson

Organization of Course: 2-1 hour lectures; 1-3 hour laboratory.

Aim of Course: To provide students interested in research with the basic knowledge to choose and use research instruments covers the basic principles and limitations of mechanical and electronic instruments.

Readings:

Required: Instrumentation for Engineering Measurement, Cerni & Foster; Electonics for Biologists, Offner

Supplement: Instrumentation with Semi Conductors, Brown; Environmental Measurements, Platt & Griffiths.

Requirements: Weekly laboratory reports and 3-4 exams.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Nominal math & physics background and permission of instructor.

A&F EC 261 FOOD MARKETING SYSTEMS
Prof. Fitzpatrick

Organization of Course: Lecture

Aim of Course: Familiarization with problems and practices in the production and marketing of the nation's farm food and fiber products.

Readings: Selected readings will be provided to the class, to supplement the text.

Requirements: Four or five hour exams, some homework problems.

Added Notes: Open to all majors.

FAE 281 FOOD SERVICE FACILITIES PLANNING

Organization of Course: 2-hour lab, 1-hour lecture.

Aim of Course: Develop the ability to plan and layout a commercial food service establishment in terms of arrangement, structure, utilities and equipment in addition to the asthetics of the facility.

Readings: Suggested: Kotschevar & Terrell-Food Service Planning, Kazarian-Work Analysis and Design, McGuiness-Mechanical & Electrical Equipment for Buildings.

Requirements: 3 hour exams, lab drawings, 6-8 quizzes.

A. & F. ECONOMICS 775
Advanced Agricultural and Food Economics.
Elmar Jarvesoo

Organization of Course: Three lecture hours a week, usually in two periods on Monday and Friday.

Aim of Course: To give the beginning graduate students a firm foundation in modern microeconomic theory with major emphasis on production economics, resource pricing and allocation, and on income distribution.

Readings: Texts: Ferguson, C., Microeconomic Theory; Heady, E. O., Economics of Agricultural Production and Resource Use. Other readings covering economic classes through the modern theory to acquaint the students with the contributing of leading economic theorists, amounting to about 100 pages a week.

Requirements: About 10-12 home problems, 2-3 hour exams, final exam and a 15-page term paper.

Pre-requisites for Admission: No formal pre-requisites, but introductory calculus is needed to follow the lectures and to do the home assignments.

AGRICULTURAL ENGINEERING

AGRICULTURAL ENGINEERING VOCATIONAL AGRICULTURE
Principles and Methods in Teaching
Robert C. Jones

Organization of Course: Special methods in teaching agriculture in conjunction with classroom student teaching. The experiences of students in teaching becomes one of the factors for course content. A seminar approach including audio visual media.

Aim of Course: To develop competencies needed by agricultural teachers.

Readings: Required: Lloyd J. Phipps, Handbook on Agricultural Education, Danville, Ill., The Interstate Publishers, inc., Second Edition, 1966.

Suggested: Robert F. Mager, Preparing Instructional Objectives, Paperback Ed., 1962. Palo Alto, California, Fearon Publishers.

Supplementary Reading List is provided the student.

Requirements: Oral reports, several papers, teaching plans and curriculum guides are required in conjunction with student teaching.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Educ. 372/672 and 376/676; permission of instructor.

Added Notes: Students enrolling in this course are student teaching in an approved school. The class meets once each week off-campus during the semester.

VETERINARY AND ANIMAL SCIENCE

ANIMAL SCIENCE 121
Introductory Animal Science
Anthony Borton and Staff

An introduction to modern animal agriculture and the many scientific disciplines it encompasses. Staff professors will discuss the role of nutrition, genetics, physiology, economics and pathology in animal research and production.

The dairy, poultry, meat, recreational and laboratory animal industries will also be evaluated in light of their role in serving mankind.

Text: The Science of Animals that Serve Mankind by Campbell and Lasley.

Pre-requisites: None

Papers: Two; a 500 word paper and a term paper on subjects of student's choice.

Exams: Two hour exams. Final exam.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 353
Poultry Management
Mr. Grover

Using the modern commercial poultry industry as a model, the course reviews the technological and economic developments which have elevated poultry enterprises to industry status. It discusses the major institutions influencing the industry, with emphasis on management of the firm. The course is of greater interest to students seeking careers with commercial agricultural firms. No textbook is required, but extensive reading is assigned. A term paper, three hour exams and a final examination are usually required.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 359
Light Horse Management
Anthony Borton

This course is primarily designed for non-majors and is concerned with the selection, care and management of the light horse. Lectures stress the relationship of anatomy, physiology, genetics, pathology and nutrition to the selection, care and management of the horse. Laboratories include the practical aspects of horse management including basic training techniques.

Required Text: Horseman's Handbook

Supplementary materials: Numerous outside articles and supplied aids.

Pre-requisites: None

Exams: Two hour exams. Final exam.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 219
Introductory Animal Physiology
Assoc. Prof. George R. Howe

Organization of Course: 2 lectures weekly; 1 laboratory weekly.

Aim of Course: To formulate the basic foundation for systemic organ physiology. To study the applied mechanisms concerning the major homeostatic circuits such as nerves, muscles, nervous system, blood, fluid dynamics, and special senses.

Readings: Guyton, Medical Physiology

Requirements: 3 hour exams and final exam. Few brief lab reports.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Permission of the instructor.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 321
Physiology of Reproduction
W. G. Black

Organization of Course: 3 lectures;1-2 hour laboratory-discussion.

Aim of Course: A comparative approach is used to study reproductive mechanisms needed for species survival in mammals and birds, with stress on practical problems encountered in exploitation of domestic animals.

Topics to be considered: Nature of sex and sexual reproduction; anatomy of reproductive organs; sex determination and differentiation; endocrine and neural control; cyclic activity; gametes, fertilization, fetal growth and parturition; lactation; fertility problems.

Readings: Nalbandov - Reproductive Physiology, 2nd Ed. Others may be suggested.

Requirements: Two - 1 hour exams (combined short answer and essay questions). One - Final Exam. Occasional unannounced 10 min. quizzes on current material.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Beginning Zoology required; more may be helpful (e.g. Zo. 135 or equivalent).

Added Notes: Course may be of interest to those with biological interests, e.g. Wildlife, Zoology, etc.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 330
Principles of Animal Nutrition
D. L. Anderson

Organization of Course: Lecture Course 3 hours per week.

Aim of Course: Study the metabolic function, interrelationships and unique dietary requirements for carbohydrates, lipid, protein, minerals, vitamins and water of monogastric and polygastric animals.

Readings: Animal Nutrition - Maynard and Loosli, 6th Ed., 1969 (required). Suggested reference readings - lists revised and supplied annually.

Requirements: 3 hour exams; periodic quizzes; final exam.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Animal Science 220, Animal Physiology or Zoology 135, Intro. Physiology; Biochem. 220, desirable.

Added Notes: Demonstrations, slides and closed circuit TV used where appropriate.

ANIMAL SCIENCE 621
Physiology of Reproduction
W. G. Black

Organization of Course: 3 Lectures; 1 2-hour laboratory-discussion.

Aim of Course: A comparative approach is used to study reproductive mechanisms needed for species survival in mammals and birds, with stress on practical problems encountered in exploitation of domestic animals.

Topics to be considered: Nature of sex and sexual reproduction; anatomy of reproductive organs; sex determination and differentiation; endocrine and neural control; cyclic activity; gametes, fertilization, fetal growth and parturition; lactation; fertility problems.

Readings: Nalbandov - Reproductive Physiology , 2nd Ed. Others may be suggested.

Requirements: Two - 1 hour exams (combined short answer and essay questions). One - Final Exam. Occasional unannounced 10 minute quizzes on current material. One paper of approximately 2000 words on an aspect of reproduction.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Beginning Zoology required; more may be helpful (e.g. Zo. 135 or equivalent).

Added Notes: Course may be of interest to those with biological interests, e.g. Wildlife, Zoology, etc.

FORESTRY AND WILDLIFE

FORESTRY 222
Conservation of Natural Resources
Carlozzi, Greeley, Johnson, Wilson
Organization of Course: Lectures M, W, F 9:00

Approaches, history and methods of conservation; biosphere, biomes and succession; water; fish; soils; forestry; wildlife; minerals; population; social organization for conservation; "debate" on a current resource problem.

Aim of Course: Introduction to the nature of renewable natural resources and to the problems associated with their conservation and utilization.

Readings: Environmental Conservation by R. Dasmann, plus 4 or 5 small paperbacks of topical interest

Requirements: Two hour exams and a final, six 10 minute quizzes

Pre-requisites for Admission: None

FORESTRY 223
Silvics
D. L. Mader, B. F. Wilson
Organization of Course: 3 lectures, 1 four-hour lab per week.
Aim of Course: Study of forest ecology as the basis of silviculture and forest management, covering environmental factors and growth and development of trees and forest stands.
Readings: Forest Ecology, Spurr, Ronald Press. Supplementary - readings from journals and bulletins.
Requirements: Quizzes-4-5, Hour exams 2 objective and essay questions, Final Exam, Term Paper - 1, 2500 words
Pre-requisites for Admission: Dendrology (Forestry 112), Botany 100, or equivalents.

FORESTRY 225
Forest Mensuration
Joseph C. Mawson, Asst. Prof. of Forestry
Organization of Course: Lecture and Lab - 2 lectures and an averal of 4 hrs of lab per week
Aim of Course: To aquire some "understanding" of the problems and procedures of measuring forest products - trees - timber - logs to be used in land resource management. This is a basic course in what is called timber cruising and scaling.
Readings: The required text is Forest Measurements by T. R. Avery. (1969)
Requirements: 2 hour exams, 1 final, 3 lab reports. There are occasional quizzes
Pre-requisites for Admission: None
Added Notes: The lab is sometimes carried out on Saturday since one full day of work is more efficient (takes less time to gain a given degree of knowledge) than a 4 hour lab. The weather is often a factor also.

FORESTRY 235
Forestry Economics
Professor Robert S. Bond
Organization of Course: Three lectures. About two thirds of these are devoted to problem solving to illustrate principles of economics and their application.
Aim of Course: To teach economic principles of production and to apply these to the timber management decision-making process.
Readings: Duerr, W. A.: Principles of Forestry Economics
Requirements: 3 hour exams plus a final exam.
4-5 quizzes
Pre-requisites for Admission: Economics 126 or equivalent.
Added Notes: This course is designed for seniors majoring in forest management although the principles taught in it may be applied to other production decisions.

FORESTRY 239/539
The Forest Resources of North America
Prof. Arnold D. Rhodes
Organization of Course: Lectures and discussions.
Aim of Course: To acquaint students with the forest resources of North America in a region-by-region treatment that describes the resource and discusses its management, and related problems, and its economic and social significance.
Readings: A test and assignments in journal articles and resource bulletins.
Requirements: Three semester papers.
Pre-requisites for Admission: For seniors and graduate students in forestry or related resource fields such as wildlife management, park administration, regional planning, resource economics and planning.

WILDLIFE BIOLOGY 261/561
Principles of Wildlife Management
Mr. Greeley
Organization of Course: Two lectures and a lab (1/2 the labs. in the field).
Aim of Course: To provide a broad survey of basic ecological principles and their applications to wildlife management. Habitat requirements, change and manipulation and population dynamics, structure and manipulation are considered.
Readings: 1. Wildlife Biology by Raymond F. Dasmann; 2. A Sand County Almanac by Aldo Leopold. Additional required readings from Journal Articles and portions of books.
Requirements: Papers: Weekly reports on field and laboratory exercises. Exams: two 1-hour and final, short quizzes.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Zoology 101, Botany 100
Added Notes: Limit of 90 students. The class is composed primarily of students majoring in wildlife biology, fisheries biology and forestry.

FOREST TREE IMPROVEMENT
Prof. Herschel G. Abbott
Organization of Course: Three 1-hour lecture. One hour a week devoted to seminar presentations by students.
Aim of Course: This is a course in applied forest genetics. Topics considered are: geographic variation, genetic basis for tree selection, controlled pollination and hybridization, vegetative propagation, tree introduction and the management of seed production areas and seed orchards.
Readings: Selected papers in scientific journals are assigned.
Requirements: One paper, oral reports and 2 examinations
Pre-requisites for Admission: Botany 100 or equivalent.
Added Notes: Enrollees should be Juniors, Seniors or graduate students with biological backgrounds or interested in forestry or resource management.

FOREST PROTECTION
Prof. Herschel G. Abbott
Organization of Course: Three 1-hour lectures
Aim of Course: Course stresses the principles pertaining to protecting N.A. forests against fire, insects, diseases, weather, animals and atmospheric pollution. One-third of the course is devoted to fire behavior, prevention and suppression. The remaining two-thirds is concerned with others groups of harmful agencies. Specialists in forest protection participate as guest lecturers.
Readings: Partial bibliographies are provided as suggested reading to assist students in selecting term paper topics.
Requirements: A major requirement of the course is a paper of approximately 2500 words, written in the form of a manuscript to be submitted for publication in a professional journal. Papers are edited by the instructor and returned to the student for revision prior to final grading. Special concern is given to permit the student to select a subject of his own choosing and to investigate it thoroughly by library or field research.
Two hour exams and a final.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None
Added Notes: Enrollment limited to 75

FOREST AND SHADE TREE PATHOLOGY
Walter Banfield
Organization of Course: Lecture, laboratory work, discussion, and field trips
Readings: Boyce- Forest Pathology
Requirements: Reports required only for field trips
Pre-requisites for Admission: None, Mycology suggested
Added Notes: This course is a study of the principal diseases of forest and shade trees in North America. Since these diseases are almost entirely due to fungus pathogens, the first week is spent in laboratory and lecture review of the taxonomy, biology, and distribution of the major classes of fungi. This is followed by an exploration of environmental deficiency diseases, diseases of forest nursery stock, then root, foliar, and stem diseases of respectively conifers and broad leaved trees. The course terminates with a survey of wood decay in standing timber, but does not consider the individual rots in detail.
The material is first presented in lecture, then supplemented by actual study of the diseases in the laboratory, using disease specimens, prepared microscope slides, and display charts, after which there is a brief weekly review and discussion period, followed by a 20 minute quiz concerning the subject matter covered in the preceding week. This evaluation procedure is supplemented by an hour examination each month and the usual two hour final examination.
The laboratory work is supplemented by field observation and study wherever diseased material is near enough to make this practicable. A written report is required only for subject matter studied in the field. The text book used is Forest Pathology by J. C. Boyce, a McGraw-Hill publication.

ENTOMOLOGY

ENTOMOLOGY 126
General Entomology
Michael Peters and Edward Tobin.
Organization of Course: Two 50-minute lectures and one 3-hour laboratory period per week.
Aim of Course Entomology 126 may be used to fulfill the E core curriculum requirements. Lectures are organized to study the insect as a functioning unit composed of organ systems as well as an individual reacting to its surroundings. The widespread effect of man's greatest competitors on his life and well being is discussed. Other topics include: Introduction and Evolution (4), Insect Mechanics (3), Organization and Operation of Internal Systems (3), Reproduction and Development (2), Ecology and Behavior (4), Systematics (5), Economic Entomology (5). Labs stress work with living insects.
Readings: Required Texts: Ross, H.H. A. Textbook of Entomology, 3rd Edition; Wigglesworth, V. B. The Life of Insects.
Requirements: No term papers required: however, a collection of insects is required in lab course. Three hour-exams and a final. Questions are primarily essay, but with some short answer types included.

ENTOMOLOGY 266/566
Apiculture
Dr. Lawrence J. Edwards
Organization of Course: Two 1-hour lectures per week. One 2-hour lab per week.
Aim of Course: To interest the student in an in-depth discussion of the biology, behavior and physiology of the honey bee. For students considering the use of the bee as an experimental animal.
Readings: Ribbands, C. R. 1964. The Behavior and Social Life of Honeybees. Dover Publications, Inc., N.Y.
Van Frisch, K. 1950. Bees, Their Vision, Chemical Senses, and Language. Cornell University Press, Ithaca, N. Y.
Requirements: Midterm and Final Exam. Labs will emphasize the techniques required for successful rearing and special considerations for using the bee as a research animal.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Background in behavior or physiology or Entomology 126.
Added Notes: The text will be supplemented with recently published research articles.

ENTOMOLOGY 290
Evolution
John F. Hanson
Organization of Course: Lecture and discussion--Topics: Slightly more than half the course on life forms. Highlighting a biological evolutionary look at human behavior. The remainder of the course is roughly equally split between the origin and evolution of the elements and cosmos, the solar system and the earth, the continents and their geological formations.
Aim of Course: This course is designed primarily for Arts and Humanity students to give them a philosophical perspective on the whole universe from sub-atomic particles to man. The emphasis is on concepts, the integration of academic disciplines, and the how and why of things, not just on things and facts. It is a course on realistic scientific philosophy; we think the broadest such course in the world.
Readings: One hardback: Introduction To Evolution by Moody
3 paperbacks: Darwin edited by H. J. Muller; Origin Of The Species and Expression Of Emotions In Man And Animals by Dawrin a dozen Scientific American offprints a number of timely journal or magazine articles appearing while the course is in progress
Requirements: Examinations and quizzes: 4 (one or two take-home). All are essentially essay exams with one question in each reverting back to old material to be sure that you continually tie the material of the whole course together in your mind. Since every exam essentially covers the course material up to that point, the final exam need count only as another hour exam.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None. Impossible to have prerequisites in a course covering the whole universe: each student will have an advantage over other students in his particular area of interest or background and, therefore, no student should be at any great disadvantage. If there is a requirement, it is that you be prepared to think and look at knowledge in new perspectives.
Added Notes: If you are one who doesn't like his thinking to be tied down to the real world, if you don't like the educational experience that a good exam can be, and if you think that proper use of words and grammar is not part of an education, please don't take this course.

ENTOMOLOGY 380
Insect Control
John H. Lilly
Organization of Course: Two lectures and one laboratory discussion period per week.
Aim of Course: To introduce students to the general principles and practices of pest control, with emphasis on safe usage and protection of the environment.
Readings: Selected readings will be assigned in the text (Metcalf, Flint and Metcalf: Destructive and Usefui Insects and in about ten authoritative treatises on specialized aspects.
Requirements: Two 50-minute examinations will be scheduled during the semester, plus the final exam. One term paper (or oral report) of reasonable length will be expected of each student. Two or three field trips will be made.
Pre-requisites for Admission: A course in Entomology or permission of instructor.
Added Notes: "Cook-book" recommendations will be avoided, and the emphasis placed on how sound judgments are arrived at in determining: (1) whether or not control measures are really needed, and, if so (2) what measure will do a satisfactory job without objectionable side-effects.

ENTOMOLOGY 821
Toxicology
Dr. Lawrence J. Edwards
Organization of Course: Two 1-hr. lectures/week and One 3-hr. lab/week. A series of lectures is given initially to set the level at which subsequent student led discussions are to be conducted.
Aim of Course: To consider the mode of action of the major classes of organic insecticides. To establish quantitative and qualitative correlations between the effects of a toxicant on physiological responses and molecular processes.
Readings: O'Brien, R. D. 1967. Insecticides: Action and Metabolism, Academic Press, N. Y.
Albert, A. 1965. Selective Toxicity. John Wiley & Sons, Inc., N. Y.
Requirements: Midterm and Final Exam. Lead 1 or 2 discussion Groups (requires extensive outside reading in journals). Labs-one 3-hour lab/week.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Background in chemistry and physiology
Added Notes: Labs: This is the 2nd time that this course is being taught by the above instructor, and changes will be made in the labs as a result of student response. In the first offering the labs centered around DDT. Synthesis, purification, and chromatography of DDT comprised one bloc. Analysis of the dose-response curve of insects to DDT by probit analysis, binding of radioactive DDT to nerve cord, electrophysiological measurement of nerve response to DDT, and respiratory response to applied DDT comprised another bloc of labs.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE

HISTORY AND THEORY
Env. Des 243 (previously 251)
John H. Martin
Organization of Course: 3 lectures/wk. and occasional seminars.
Aim of Course: To present an introduction to a study of the historical foundation of our environment. Concentration from pre-classical through to medieval in Europe.
Readings: Space, Time & Architecture, Gideon; Human Geography, Jones; Odyssey, Homer; Canterbury Tales, Chaucer; Outline of European Architecture, Pevsner.
Requirements: 1 hour midterm exam; course paper involving the study of a 20th century environment; 1 field trip.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Elementary Art Historv.

ENVIRONMENTAL DESIGN 273
City Planning
T. S. Bacon, Jr.
Organization of Course: 3 lectures per week; 3 credits.
Aim of Course: This course presents a brief history of urbanization throughout the world with some emphasis on the development of land and resources as the basis for community growth. Land and community patterns in Great Britain and the United States will be stressed. City planning and the development of various legal and administrative tools for dealing with urban problems will be examined.
Readings: No required texts - all reading will be on reserve in Goodell or dept. library.
Requirements: No papers; 3 examinations including final.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None

ENVIRONMENTAL AESTHETICS D-85
385 Environmental Aesthetics
Professor Barrie B. Greenbie, T-Th 4-5: 15
Organization of Course: 2 1-1/2 hour class sessions per week, which will include lectures with slides, with time allowed for class discussion. The amount and kind of discussion will depend to some extent on the size of the class, but it will be encouraged as much as possible.
Aim of Course: To find common ground for "aesthetics" in a complex and changing pluristic society, in terms of the physiology of perception. Aesthetic experience is viewed as the emotional response of human beings to their environment, which result from a synthesis of external stimuli and internal memory images. Fundamental ways in which artists of all time have organized visual experience are used to interpret the contemporary scene.
Readings: The required text for this course is The Hidden Dimension by Edward T. Hall. It will be used as a frame of reference and point of departure for lectures and discussion in class sessions, not as a source of subject matter. Selected readings will be assigned from time to time in a list of books titled "Supplemental Reading" in the bibliography for the course.
Requirements: There will be a book report and a final exam. There will be one or more field trips, depending on the size of the class and scheduling problems that may develop.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Junior standing. Graduates are encouraged, but should sign up under "Land. Arch 700, Lecture Section 2". Students from all departments are welcome; those from Art History and behavioral sciences are particularly encouraged to provide an "interdisciplinary approach". Class limit 90.

REGIONAL PLANNING 700
Introduction to Research Methods for Regional Planning. for Regional Planning.
David W. Sears
Organization of Course: Lecture and seminar format.
Aim of Course: This course will explore the potential utility of research for planning. In addition, the student will be introduced to several quantitative techniques available to the regional planner.
Readings: Basic texts include 1) Julian Simon, Basic Research Method in Social Science, 2) Thomas Dyckman, Management Decision Making Under Uncertainty, and 3) Walter Isard, Methods of Regional Analysis. These texts will be supplemented with other readings.
Requirements: Exams: 2 (take-home). Papers: 1
Pre-requisites: None

REGIONAL PLANNING 703
Land and Development of Communities
T. S. Bacon, Jr.
Organization of Course: 3 class meetings/week - seminars and lectures.
Aim of Course: The course examines land and its use from ancient to modern times. Emphasis will be placed upon the resource base and its importance as the intensity of land use increases in the development of both rural communities and urbanized areas. Much of the course will be devoted to the study of city planning, zoning, subdivision controls and other techniques used to guide and control the use of land.
Readings: No required texts - all reading will be on reserve in Goodell or the department library.
Requirements: No papers are required. There will be three exams including the final.

REGIONAL PLANNING 791
Interdisciplinary Regional Planning
Julius G. Fabos, David W. Sears, Robert L. Vertrees
Organization of Course: projects and discussion
Aim of Course: Students from several disciplines will work together in small teams, each dealing with a specific regional problem (e.g. -- regional economic development, recreation, control of urbanization) in a nearby region. Each team will go through the planning process, with each student imputing knowledge and techniques from his own discipline.
Readings: No required readings.
Requirements: 3 written and oral reports. No exams
Pre-requisites for Admission: None
Added Notes: This course is 5 credits.

DUTCH

DUTCH 126
Accelerated Elementary Dutch
Mr. Beekman
Organization of Course: Grammar, pronunciation, building of vocabulary and skill in reading ie. translation.
Aim of Course: The aim is to provide the student with the basic skills and information necessary for reading an elementary text in the original.
Readings: In addition to the basic grammar text, newspapers and comic books are used, and at least one fairy tale perused.
Requirements: Attendance is most important since the bulk of the work is done in class. Midterm and final and weekly quizzes to acquaint the student with his own progress.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

DUTCH 251
Dutch and Flemish Literature
Mr. Beekman
Organization of Course: Discussion (hopefully)
Aim of Course: Its aim is reading shorter texts in the original language to acquaint the student with modern Dutch literature. Hence emphasis is on understanding texts in their fictional complexity and not the quantitative accumulation of data. This course will urge on the student to examine any one author's work in more detail and measure of completion.
Readings: An anthology of post-war short fiction, and anthology of modern poetry. Depending on nature of the individual class, perhaps one novel studied completely.
Requirements: Readings, discussions, oral report and one paper of 15 pages. No midterm and no fimal.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Knowledge of Dutch or completion of Dutch 126 and 146.
Added Notes: Existence of this course dependent on number of students. Minimum of 5 students is required for holding this course. Students are requested to call Mr. Beekman to announce their intention (545-0319) or Department of Germanic Languages (545-2350).

DANISH

DANISH 126
Accelerated Elementary Danish
Mr. Hugus
Organization of Course: Danish grammar, pronunciation and texts with practice in the spoken and written language. Meets 5 days a week (6 credits)
Aim of Course: To prepare the student in basic Danish grammar and pronunciation to a greater extent that would be possible in two semesters of a normal, 3 hours first year course.
Readings: To be announced later.
Requirements: Regular quizzes during the semester as well as a final examination.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None

FOOD AND SCIENCE TECHNOLOGY

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY 101
The Struggle for Food
F. M. Clydesdale and F. J. Francis
Organization of course: Three lectures per week with an open question period at the beginning of each lecture.
Aim of Course: This course will satisfy a University Science core(E) requirement. It is proposed as an introduction to current problems in the world food crisis, and is primarily for those with a non-technical background. It is anticipated that this course will enhance awareness of problems and possible solutions to feeding the world and hopefully provide an opportunity for students to become more informed citizens in this area.
Readings: No required readings. A suggested book list will be supplied.
Requirements: No exams. Two term papers.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY 275/575
Introduction to Food Science
K. M. Hayes
Organization of Course: Two lecture hours and a two-hour laboratory period
Aim of Course: An introduction to the role of food science and its relationship to the world's food supply. Surveys food quality, methods of preservation, consumer and institutional aspects of conventional and new foods, and regulatory issues. Laboratories explore changes in food, quality measurement, and preservation methods.
Readings: Food Science by Potter
Supplemental materials are supplied on specific areas.
Requirements: Three combination essay and short answer hour exams
Pre-requisites for Admission: None
Added Notes: Designed to give a broad background in food science for a number of majors having an interest in food.

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY 371/671
Food Analysis
W. M. Hunting
Organization of Course: 2 lecture hours and one four hour laboratory
Aim of Course: The study of the physical, chemical, microbiological and microscopic methods of analysis which are applied to the evaluation and analysis of foods and food products. The first semester includes the proximate analysis of foods for moisture, ash, protein, fat, fiber and carbohydrates.
Readings: Triebold and Aurand, Food Composition And Analysis auxilary source: Methods of Analysis of the Association of Official Analytical Chemists.
Requirements: Two hour exams and the final exam. Termpaper optional
Pre-requisites for Admission: Analytic Chemistry
Added Notes: Open to majors and non-majors

FOOD SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY 850
Colorimetry and Appearance
F. J. Francis and F. M. Clydesdale
Organization of Course: 2 lectures and 1 3hr. lab per week.
First portion - General color theory and instrumentation.
Second portion - Specific applications to food science.
Food Science majors are expected to take both portions for 3 credits. Other majors may take only the first portion for 2 credits.
Aim of Course: To acquaint students with the science of modern color theory. This involves the measurement and classification of color in six or more mathematical and visual systems and an understanding of the equipment designed to use these systems. Electronic equipment to duplicate the response to color of the human eye is included.
Readings: A set of 28 technical papers will be provided. Other books for reference are readily available in our library.
Requirements: Two term exams (one for each portion). Students taking the course for 2 credits will write one exam. A brief lab report will be required for the laboratory work.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Permission of instructor.

FOOD MERCHANDISING
Professor Donald R. Marion
Organization of Course: Lecture-discussion
Aim of Course: To familiarize students with the distribution system serving the food needs of U.S. consumers for foods consumed at home. Particular emphasis is placed upon the merchandising practices of retail food stores - from the management decision-making view, as well as that of social welfare implications. Also considered are contemporary issues related to food marketing, including the food buying problems of the poor, packaging and labeling problems, etc., and alternatives for corrective action.
Readings: R - Competition and Price Making in Food Retailing, Ralph Cassady, Jr.
• - Competition In Food Marketing, The Agricultural Policy Institute.
R - Consumer Problems of the Poor: Supermarket Operations in Low-Income Areas and the Federal Response, U. S. Congress.
• - Food From the Farmer to the Consumer, National Commission on Food Marketing.
• - Special Studies in Food Marketing, Technical Study #10, National Commission on Food Marketing.
R - Required; • - Sources of selected reading assignments
Requirements: One term paper, summarized orally in class, two hour exams, and a final exam.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Economics 126 desirable, but not required.
Added Notes: Enrollment in the course normally includes students interested in careers in foods or food marketing and students with an interest in public policy issues related to food marketing.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 110
Plant Propagation
G. B. Goddard
Organization of Course: Topics to be covered are: Structures (1 week), environmental requirements, 1 1/2 weeks) cuttage, (2 1/2 weeks) layerage, (1 week) graftage and buddage, (2 1/2 weeks) seedage, (4 weeks) dormancy, (1 1/2 weeks).
Aim of Course: A detailed study of the propagation of plants. In lecture, emphasis is placed on the principles and concepts of sexual and asexual propagation. Laboratories deal with the practices involved that ramify the lecture discussions through the propagation of a wide variety of plant material.
Readings: Hartmann & Kester, Plant Propagation, Principles and Practices. Assigned readings from reference materials. Each student will be expected to provide a pocket knife.
Requirements: Papers: One optional term paper, length determined by student. Exams and quizzes: Two hour-exams and a final (Essay), Unannounced quizzes (2-3 minutes in length). Final Grade determination: exams and quizzes 1/2, Labs 1/2.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Introductory botany or being taken concurrently.
plant and soil 200
Deciduous Orchard Science
J. F. Anderson
Organization of Course: Two 1-hour lectures and one 2-hour lab per week. Opportunity for discussion is afforded during lecture and lab periods.
Aim of Course: Topics considered in this course are: Environmental and economic factors relating to the establishment and operation of deciduous orchards; planning the orchard; propagation, root-stocks and planting stock, nutritional requirements and fertilizer practice, orchard soil management; flower-bud formation, pollination and fruit set; thinning and alternate-bearing; temperature effects on fruit trees; preparing the orchard for winter; study of the important tree fruit varieties.
Readings: Modern Fruit Science, 4th Edition, N. F. Childers. Research and extension bulletins and scientific journals are used for supplementary reading assignments.
Requirements: Three hour-exams. All hour exams and quizzes are announced. Both essay and short answer questions are employed.
Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 205
Small Fruit Technology
J. F. Anderson
Organization of Course: Two 1-hour lectures and one 2-hour lab period per week. Opportunity for discussion is afforded during lecture and lab periods.
Aim of Course: Topics considered in the course are: Environmental and economic factors relating to the establishment and operation of a small fruit planting; propagation and selection of planting stock. Planting plans and factors affecting their choice; soil management systems, nutrient requirements and fertilizer practice; weed control; pruning and training; temperature effects; major problems; varieties and harvesting. Fruits discussed in the course: blueberries, cranberries, currants, gooseberries, grapes, raspberries & strawberries.
Readings: Modern Fruit Science, 4th Edition, N. F. Childers. Several other books and various experiment station publications are used for supplementary reading assignments.
Requirements: Three hour-examinations and occasional quizzes. All exams and quizzes are announced. Both essay and short answer questions are employed.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 230-530
Plant Nutrition
Donald N. Maynard

Organization of Course: 2 - 1 hour lectures; 1 - 2 hour laboratory.

Aim of Course: To develop and understanding of the uptake, transport, and role of the essential inorganic in plants.

Readings: Text books - Mineral Salts Absorption in Plants; Plant Physiology Vol. III. Recent reviews and journal articles on aspects of plant nutrition.

Requirements: Semester paper, 2 hour exams, final exam, laboratory reports.

Pre-requisites for Admission: No specific pre-requisites - check with instructor if you have any doubt.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCES 235-535 (1)
Taxonomy of Economic Plants
Alfred W. Boicourt

Organization of Course: 2 class hours 1 2-hour laboratory period. Thirty-five plant families are stressed. Time for each family depends on major ity interest of the class.

Aim of Course: "Short cuts" to the identification of useful plants. Accurate plant identification is essential for scientific plant research, for food crops and medicine, for landscape planting and conservation. Students are given the opportunity in their own field of interest using the department's facilities.

Readings: L. H. Bailey's Manual of Cultivated Plants recommended. Substitutes will be allowed. Students making large herbarium collections must provide mounting paper.

Requirements: Examinations: 3 plus final (both essay and short answer). Quizzes: Weekly identification.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 255(555)
Dr. Joseph Troll

Organization of Course: 1 2-hour lab and 2 lectures per week.

Aim of Course: The establishment of maintenance of turfgrasses used on lawns, athletic fields, highways, airports, cemeteries and turf nurseries, with particular emphasis on golf courses.

Readings: Turfgrass Science - American Society of Agronomy Monograph; Turf Management - H. B. Musser and related texts. Popular and scientific journals.

Requirements: At least three hour exams. Term paper written and oral report thereon. Project, in lieu of final, which is specifically related to a problem area. At least two field trips, as time permits - to an athletic field and the other to a golf course.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None - but recommend that student be at least a sophomore.

Added notes: Suggest that student have background in turf maintenance or landscape operations.

Graduate Students - have additional outside reading and more scientific journals. The term paper should be of a scientific rather than a popular nature.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCES 260 (560)
Ecology and Control of Weeds
Jonas Vengris

Organization of Course: Two 2-hour sessions weekly; first 5 weeks weed identification laboratory; remaining time two 1-1/2 lecture periods weekly.

Aim of Course: (a) Weeds in environment: identification, ecology, economics.
(b) Weed control: mechanical, chemical means.
(c) Special weed control problems.
(d) Herbicide toxicology.
(e) Weed control equipment.

Readings: Weed Biology and Control by T. J. Muzik, McGraw-Hill Co. Suggested text: Weed Control by A. S. Crafts and W. W. Robbins and Weed Science Journal.

Requirements: Term paper; Problem calculations; Weed identification and two 1-hour exams, final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: None

Added Notes: Detailed syllabus available upon request.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 265-565
Martin E. Weeks, Professor of Soil Science

Organization of Course: Course consists of 3 one-hour lecture-discussion periods per week. One discussion period of 20-30 minutes for each student to present a topic from special readings. A term paper is required. A 3-hour laboratory period is scheduled once a week. This may take the form of a field trip over a weekend to see soils of different areas.

Aim of Course: To bring together all phases of soil science into a single concept of soil and land use. To understand the soils of the world based on surveys and a study of factors of soil formation.

Readings: Thorough review of literature on a selected or assigned topic for a term report. Assigned readings from literature of agriculture, soils, geology, geography and climatology.

Requirements: Oral report on a special reading selected or assigned. Term p. as described. 3 exams and final. Field t to be arranged (overnight).

Pre-requisites for Admission: Basic courses in soils, geology, geography or forestry with permission of instructor.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCES 275/575
Soil Chem.
John H. Baker

Organization of Course: Lecture

Aim of Course: To provide a basis for understanding chemical reactions that occur in soils by considering such topics as the nature and chemical properties of soil clay minerals, cation exchange, soil acidity and chemical reactions in soils of plant nutrients and soil amendments.

Readings: No text. Reading assignments in monographs and journals.

Requirements: Two examinations, one at mid-semester and a final.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Plant and Soil Sciences 105 and Chemistry 127 or permission of the instructor.

PLANT AND SOIL SCIENCE 740
Mr. Hrant M. Yegian

Organization of Course: 3 class hours; lab by arrangement.

Aim of Course: The application of statistics to the analysis and interpretation of data obtained in agricultural research, and the consideration of factors to be included in a well planned experiment.

Readings: Steele & Torrie - Principles and Procedures of Statistics; References: Cochran, W. G. & Cox, G. M. - Experimental Design; Federer, W. T. - Experimental Design Theory and Application; Goulden, C. H. - Methods of Statistical Analysis; Snedecor, G. N. - Statistical Methods.

Requirements: Weekly problem assignments in place of examination.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Permission of instructor.

PLANT PATHOLOGY

PLANT PATHOLOGY 251 (551)
General Plant Pathology
George N. Agrios

In lecture are discussed general consideration of disease in plants, the mechanisms by which pathogens cause disease and the mechanisms by which plants resist diseases. Effects of pathogens on the physiology of plants. Genetics of disease development. Effect of environment on disease development, and control of plant diseases.

In lab, we discuss the general characteristics and properties of the pathogens that cause plant diseases (fungi, viruses, bacteria, nematodes, mycoplasmas, parasitic higher plants, and the non-infectious agents that cause plant diseases. Representative diseases of plants important in the area are examined in detail with emphasis in their identification and control.

Text: Plant Pathology, Agrios, 1969.

Prerequisites: One course in botany.

Papers: One term paper 6-12 pages on a disease of a plant of interest to each student.

Exams: Three 1/2 hour exams, plus final.

PLANT PATHOLOGY 378/678
Nematology
R. A. Rohde

Organization of Course: 3 hrs. lectures; One 3 hr. Lab per week.

Aim of Course: The student learns to identify important genera of soil nematodes, diagnose injury to plants anywhere in the world, and recommend useful controls. At the same time, he is introduced to biological principles of genetics, physiology, ecology, and taxonomy illustrated by an extremely large and diverse group of invertebrate animals.

Readings: No required text. Assigned readings in reference books and journals.

Requirements: One extensive individual project devised by the student. 2-hour exams including practical laboratory questions.

Pre-requisites for Admission: A year of biological science.

HOTEL AND RESTAURANT MANAGEMENT

HOTEL & RESTAURANT ADMINISTRATION 100
Introduction

Organization of Course: Three lectures each week.

Aim of Course: To provide information and general understanding of the broad field of Tourism, Hotel & Restaurant Administration: its antecedents, development, present scope and parameters, important concepts and people, opportunities and problems.

Readings: The Hotel and Restaurant Business, Lundberg, Cahners, Chicago, 1970. The Tourist Business, Lundberg, Barnet and Crampon, Cahners, Chicago, 1971.

Requirements: Three examinations.

Pre-requisites for Admission: Major in Hotel & Restaurant Administration or a definite interest in the travel, hotel or restaurant field as a possible career.

FOOD PREPARATION AND SERVICE
Hotel and Restaurant Administration 367
Mr. Clifford J. Robertson

Organization of Course: Consists of 1-1/2 hours of lecture each week along with a 4 hour laboratory session consisting of the preparation and service of general meals for 25-30 people centering around an international theme. Four laboratory exercises are included on such subjects as baking, deep fat frying, and the preparation of mayonaisse and salad dressing. Outside lecturers are invited from time to time to give pertinent demonstrations.

Aim of Course: To explain the scientific "why" behind the "how" of the various cooking processes as well as to foster a high degree of understanding and proficiency in the preparation of the various foods involved including proper table service, the elements of proper menu planning, and training in the proper use of the various pieces of equipment involved, as well as pertinent information on nutritional factors.

Readings: Lundberg and Katchevar, Understanding Cooking; Amendolla and Lundberg, Understanding Baking; mimeographed handouts.

Requirements: exams: three 1-hour combination short answer and essay exam--40% of the grade
Laboratory participation --30% of the grade
Papers: biweekly meal critiques--30% of the grade
Laboratory fee $12.50

Pre-requisites for Admission: Hotel and Restaurant Adm. majors-sophomore thru senior to a maximum of 40. Open to other university students according to existing vacancies after needs of H&RA Dept. have been fulfilled, with consent of instructor, Home Economics and Home Economics Education majors receiving preference. Nutrition and Food 156 and background in sciences normally required.

WOOD TECHNOLOGY

WOOD TECHNOLOGY 201/501
Wood Anatomy and Identification
R. B. Hoadley

Comments: The objective of this course is to develop an understanding of the structural nature of wood primarily from the standpoint of its potential value as an engineering material for the manufacture of products, and is designed as a foundation course for Wood Technology or Forestry majors. The anatomy of commercially important timbers of North America are considered at the macroscopic and microscopic levels.

Topics: Two lectures per week cover the following topics: Tree growth; gross feature of wood; the woody plant cell; anatomy of conifers; anatomy of hardwoods; variation and defects; introduction to wood properties. One three hour laboratory period per week parallels lecture topics, also includes identification of woods.

Required Texts and Materials: Panshin and DeZeeuw, Textbook of Wood Technology, Vol. I, 3rd Edition, 1970 McGraw Hill. Hard Lens. Pocket knife or razor blades
Prerequisite: None
Term Paper: None
Exams: 3 hour exams, combination essay-short answer. 8 ten minute quizzes - announced in advance

WOOD TECHNOLOGY 203/503
Forest Products
H. B. Gatslick

Organization of Course: Lecture

Aim of course: Objective of this course is to develop an understanding of the forestry industry complex, its dynamic nature, economic and geographic limitations and potential.

Readings: Panshin, Harrar, Bethel and Baker, Forest Products, 2nd Edition
Supplementary materials: Selected readings in journals and symposia reports.

Requirements: Three class meetings per week are designed to include discussions on the economic and environmental values of our timber resources, wood residues, utilization as well as new trends and developments in the pulp and paper, furniture, plywood, particleboard and hardboard industries. Current research topics will be chosen or assigned and the students, following a study in depth, will be expected to prepare a 10-minute oral presentation. Graduate students will also prepare a paper in addition to their presentation. Three essay exams. Short unannounced quizzes.
Pre-requisites for Admission: Junior class standing

MISCELLANEOUS

I.E. 261/561
Design of Man Machine Systems
S. Lippert

Organization of Course: Lecture and Laboratory.

Aim of Course: This course presently has a two-fold aim, due to historical development in the department. One aim is to acquaint the student with anthropometric, physiological and psychological information which relates to the design and operation of vehicular industrial and other systems. The emphasis is on man. The other aim is to consider problems of layout in such places as industry, schools, hospitals, etc.

Readings: Chiefly texts and work book.

Requirements: Papers and reports, some laboratory work.

Pre-requisites for Admission: I.E. 260, 272 or permission of instructor.

I.E. 757
Human Factors Design Engineering
S. Lippert

Organization of Course: Seminar. Student sets his own problem.

Aim of Course: The course aims to give the student an opportunity to work on a professional level topic using human factors techniques and information sources.

Readings: Student reads as his needs dictate.

Requirements: Paper and project, combined, preferably experimental.

Pre-requisites for Admission: I.E. 561 or permission of instructor.

"I Expect to Visit China"

Nixon: No Change In Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Thursday night neither demonstrations in the streets nor opposition in Congress will lead him to change a Vietnam policy he believes will bring "not just peace in our time" but a lasting peace.

"I would not want to leave the impression that those who came to demonstrate were not listened to, it's rather hard not to hear them, as a matter of fact," Nixon said.

But he said as he looked at the televised coverage of the demonstrations, he noted that many of them were teen-agers, and "my responsibility is to bring peace, but not just peace in our time but peace in their time."

He said he is convinced that a precipitate withdrawal, before South Vietnam is able to have a chance to prevent a Communist takeover, would increase the danger of future war in the Pacific.

Nixon said to a question about China policies that some speculation about the recent U.S. ping pong team's visit to Communist China has not been useful.

He said he aims at a normalization of attitudes toward Communist China. "We have moved in the field of travel. We have moved in the field of trade," he said.

Nixon said progress is not helped by speculation that goes beyond that progress. "We have broken the ice and now we have to test the water," he said.

"I expect to visit mainland China in some capacity," he said, without specifying when such a visit might take place.

As for Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's privately expressed reservations about administration China policy, Nixon said now that the administration course has been set, the vice president supports it.

Nixon said Agnew usually falls behind a decision once it is made and he expects Agnew to do so this time.

Asked whether he might consider a court of inquiry to consider "just who cast blame for the war on either Presidents John F. Kennedy of Lyndon B. Johnson.

"Both President Johnson and President Kennedy I'm sure were making decisions that they thought were important to the security of the United States," he said.

But he reiterated his long-standing position that he feels it is important to end the war in some way that will insure peace.

Asked about U.S. operations in Laos, Nixon said the possibility of any further action of major proportions "is pretty remote."

"At this time we see no need for any further actions," he said.

"The war is winding down, the Americans are coming home. We will achieve our goal of total withdrawal," but only after the prisoner of war question is settled, Nixon said.

Asked if he would consider setting a safe date such as end of 1972 for total U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam, Nixon said he saw no need to set a date at the end of 1972, or middle of 1972, if this country got nothing for it. He repeated his stand that it would destroy the enemy's need to negotiate. He said it also would lessen U.S. bargaining power for prisoners of war. "I believe that setting a date is not in our interest," Nixon said.

Nixon said the United States would keep a residual force in Vietnam "no matter how long it takes" to get U.S. POW's released. But he said he can forsee that the South Vietnamese soon will be able to defend themselves, removing that as a precondition for U.S. withdrawal.

Nixon was asked whether he endorses the Supreme Court's decision upholding busing of school for racial balance.

Nixon noted that he had once spoken out for neighborhood schools, but he added, "Now that the Supreme Court has spoken, whatever I have said that is in conflict is moot." He said even the president must obey the law of the land as interpreted by the high court.

"We will comply with that situation, and we will work with the Southern school districts, not in the spirit of coercion, but in the spirit of cooperation," Nixon added.

"Until the court rules in that field I still adhere to my views of March that" busing of children for balance in de facto situations is improper, he said.

The President was asked whether he had any involvement in the Justice Department's decision first to seek an order preventing Vietnam Veterans Against the War from camping on the Mall, and then deciding not to enforce the rule once upheld by the Supreme Court.

"The principle having been established, I saw no reason to go in and arrest the veterans and to put them in jail," Nixon said. He said the administration had sought the rule to avoid a possible "nasty confrontation" which did not develop.

Asked to define how he felt the verdict in the Lt. William Calley case endangered the national interest and how that interest was served by his intervention, Nixon said it would not be appropriate to comment on the merits while the case was still in appeal stage.

But he said he felt Calley should not be confined to Leavenworth during the year or so the appeal will take. He said this is proper since people have freedom on bond during the same period in civilian cases.

Secondly, he said, there was a great deal of national concern among the public as to whether Calley would get a fair treatment. He said he wanted to assure the country that Calley would get fair treatment. And he said he felt this intervention was one of the reasons the feeling was cooled down.

Nixon was asked whether he would like to see Charles Mansion freed on bail in view of his order releasing Calley from prison and confining him to quarters.

The President said that judges must consider the danger involved in allowing a particular person to be released on bail. He reiterated his feeling that Calley, facing a lengthy appeals process, deserved favored treatment.

Asked again about a two-China policy, while some favor a "one-China policy."

"I'm not suggesting these are lively options," he said, but that these were considerations.

"I will make the decision," he said, "but I'm not going to speculate on it now."

Such speculation, he said, might jeopardize progress that has been made so far.

Asked about the future of Nationalist China, Nixon said it is "completely unrealistic" for the two Chinas to negotiate their differences.

He said the United States while maintaining its relations with Formosa is seeking a normalization of relations with Communist China.

Grayson Seven Found Guilty

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

A letter of censure, disciplinary probation, and work requirements were the punishments handed down to the Grayson Seven by the General Court after a long deliberation Wednesday evening. In an MDC interview, Jerry Moriarty of the General Court discussed the actions taken by the General Court in regards to the operation of an illegal bar on Orchard Hill.

Of the seven convicted five were convicted on two charges. The charges were the sale of alcoholic beverages without a license and offering alcoholic beverages for sale on University property. One student was found fuilty of three charges, the ones already mentioned plus the charge of procurement of alcoholic beverages for consumption by minors. Four charges were placed against the last defendant. The charge of knowingly transporting alcoholic beverages while a nimor was added to the three preceeding charges.

The letter of censure will be placed on the student's record until they graduate; the disciplinary probation will be imposed until the end of the Fall 1971 semester; and the work requirement will consist of checking IDs at Administratration approved functions.

The General Court, according to Moriarty, also decided that they have an opinion to present to the Administration. According to the UMass Student Handbook, "the University has the authority to discipline, however these powers are secondary to counselling, guidance and admonition. In this case, Moriarty said that the University failed to exercise roles which it considers primary. The University violated the theory of punishment. According to the decision of the Court, they should have been told that the bar had to be removed rather than waiting to bring it to General Court. THIS, Moriarty said, would have resulted in less harm being done to the defendants. By admonishing the problem, the University could have gotten rid of it without court action. The General Court representative went on, saying that while the University has statutes on the books, it has neglected them. Selective enforcement is a bad thing, he continued. The University should have across the board enforcement of it's statutes. He added that "students have no right to violate the University laws, but we shall try to stop this in the least harmful way."

Citing a section of the student conduct code, Moriarty said that verbal attepts should have been made to try to stop this operation. Upon failure of the persons to respond in accordance with the standards, they would be warned of the consequences and given reasonable time to desist. He said that the University failed to follow up to this.

It was the unanimous decision of the court that Boys though charging the group with the violation refused to answer the Defense's questions in good faith. He was less than honest and candid before the Court, the court declared.

Keeping the case on campus before the accused's peers saved the group attorney's fees plus a permanent record which they would have received if the case had been taken to District Court.

Discussing the punishments, Moriarty said that the letter of censure merely expresses that a person has broken a law. It is viewed by the court as an educational tool which admonishes a person of the consequences. Probation is more restrictive than punitive, he continued. Those on probation must obey the laws of the University during the period of probation. Moriarty concluded by saying that the work requirement is tended to be rehabilitative. This is intended to show the seven how a function is properly run.

Rally Held In Support Of People In Cairo

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

In an attempt to dramatize the plight of the people of Cairo, Illinois, a rally was held last evening at Johnson Chapel on the campus of Amherst College. Speakers from the Five College Area spoke to an audience of 50 concerned citizens of the academic community in an attempt to gain support in their fight against racism, poverty, inferior housing and other issues plaguing the residents of Cairo.

The students were part of group of students from 81 colleges who went to Cairo on their own time to learn of the conditions and problems.

Speaking first was Bill Hassan who told the group that it is extremely significant that they learn what is happening to people in the United States, Viet Nam and everywhere. By learning of the problems he hopes that the people will move towards resolution of the problems. He continued by saying 'Cairo is the mirror of what is happening in Viet Nam, South America and South Africa. "There is live ammunition, airplanes, and bullet proof vests in Cairo," stated Hassan. "There is indeed a war in Cairo."

A Mount Holyoke student, Sandra Simpson spoke to the group about the reasons why the events in Cairo were unknown by the people. She said that Blacks are being killed, arrested, and homes are being burn't everyday but noone knows this because the press hasn't given any publicity to Cairo.

Cairo is 1st in poverty, 2nd in substandard housing, and 3rd in unemployment, Arel Ben Israel a UMass student told the gathering. "In Cairo there is Police, vigilante and white hat violence," he said. "Cairo was once an industrial town, now only two buildings and industries exist," he continued. Businesses in Cairo were run out of town because they hired black workers.

"The people of Cairo have decided not to give up thier struggle." "He stated that the entire community would rather die before giving up. Noting the population figures of Cairo he said that there are 300 Police for a population of 7,500 people who aren't even given proper police protection.

While in Cairo, the representatives from the visiting colleges took part in a march through the center of Cairo. Patroling the line of march were 300 police riding in armored personal carriers who took pictures of every black and white participating.

Speaking about the United Front, Israel told the group that meaningful support is needed. Food, clothing, and money for bail, medical and office supplies is needed.

Viet Nam veteran, Napoleon Jasper was the evening's final speaker. He asked the group "How does one fight in Viet Nam when he is fighting for the same thing at home?" Continuing, he went into a short history of the events in Cairo. "In the 1940's and 50's the people decided to respond to decisions made in the community." The blacks would not passively take the treatment given them. In response to their actions, the racist white hats formed to suppress the blacks, Jasper said. He concluded by telling the group that in March 1969, the black community was shot into for 2 1/2 hours by police and white hats.

Dogs New Issue At General Court

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

Another controversial issue was brought to the attention of the student court tonight concerning dogs in dormitories. Kenneth Boyajian, the defendant, was charged with keeping a "live animal in a residence hall." Mr. Boyajian specifically kept a dog in Dwight House.

The prosecution attorney, Staff Sheehan attempted to show that live animals are a danger and a threat to people in the dorm. He also wanted to show that the dog was kept in direct conflict with the Health regulations set up by the University.

The defense counsel, Larry Ladd attempted to show that the dog in question, "Sniffer" posed no real, genuine, threat. He also mentioned that rules governing animals in dorms are unjust.

The first witness to appear for the prosecution was Dr. William K. Harris, who has practiced veterinary science at the University.

Dr. Harris stated the Zoonetics, which is the study of "diseases transmitted by vertebrate animals and man" can aid in understanding the problem. Dr. Harris stated that "wherever the concentration of animals and man is great, the greater the risk of contraction of the disease." This can be applied to a dormitory situation where there is a great amount of people.

The veterinary professor stated a few of the potential diseases that may be contracted by humans from animals.

The first disease is rabies, which is primarily contracted from dogs and cats, although other animals may transmit them. Other diseases include, ringworm, mange, lepto, rocky mountaing spotted fever, and salmonella. Dr. Harris also mentioned that other pets such as turtles, monkeys, chickens, are responsible for many diseases mentioned here.

Dr. William Harris remarked that he and fellow colleagues set up a certain possible solution for keeping pets in residence halls. The suggestions include: 1.) Health certificate from a veterinarian, 2.) Establishment of a sanitary code, and 3.) registration of the animal by the dorm.

Some other witnesses scheduled to appear were members of the maintenance staff, and director of University health.

Since deadlines had to be met, the story could not be covered in its entirety. The verdict will appear in Monday's Collegian.

This is the first time that a student was brought to trial for keeping an animal in a dorm. It arose by a complaint from another dorm.

Senate To Fast In Protest

By DOUG DEARBORN
MDC Staff

Four officers in the Student Senate, along with other senators and concerned persons, are planning to fast from May 1 to Moratorium day on May 5, and at the same time emphasize that people can join them for just part of the period. It's an individual act.

This is a way of showing agreement with the Washington demonstration by those who can't be there, said Vice-President Larry Ladd, and it "expresses an ethical position by the people who are ostensibly the leaders of the students." He continued "it is pointless, irrational as is any demonstration. But the point of a demonstration is to get publicity for a cause, and to emotionally gratify the participants."

Lee Sandwen, Senate President, expressed his motives: "What we're trying to do is assert some sort of moral leasership as Senate officers. We're going to try to represent through our personal actions what we think is the student body's feeling about Vietnam."

Dr. Thomas McBride of the University Health Services offers some useful information on fasting. Studies have shown fasts up to forty days to have minimal undesirable effects. Hunger should be no problem with free access to water. A weight loss should be expected, about 12 pounds over five days. It is important to maintain intake of water and salt; drink about 2 1/2 quarts of fluid a day. Salt-containing soups and broth are particularly good.

Weight loss may cause blood pressure fluctuation, and that in turn faintness. Muscle weakness may occur, so activities should be kept minimal. People with chronic diseases such as diabetes, kidney stones, gout, and chronic kidney diseases should not fast.

Rogers In Turkey For CENTO Meeting

ANKARA, Turkey (AP)-U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers arrived here Thursday to attend a Central Treaty Organization-CENTO- meeting before launching his week-long Mideast tour aimed at promoting a peace settlement.

Martial law prevailed in this troubled Turkish capital. Helmeted armed troops were stationed along the 18-mile route which Rogers followed from the airport into town. There were no incidents.

Commanders of Ankara and 10 other provinces under martial law have started a strict crackdown on left- and right-wing extremist groups which have disrupted Turkey in recent months.

Rogers arrived from London, via a brief Paris stopover to chat with French leaders about the Middle East.

The secretary had warm words for Turkey-"a close friend and ally of the United States"-and for CENTO, whose annual parley he will attend until Saturday.

CENTO is a security post grouping Britain, Turkey, Iran and Pakistan. The United States plays an active role in CENTO though its official status is only that of observer.

On Saturday, Rogers sets off on the most important part of his two-week journey-calling at Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Lebanon, Egypt and Israel.

"I do not expect there will be breakthroughs or dramatic developments," he said of his bid to ease the Arab-Israeli deadlock. But "it is our hope that we can at least narrow the gap" between rival Egyptian and Israeli proposals for reopening the Suez Canal.

During his short stopover in Paris, Rogers told French Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann that the Suez issue presented the best possibility for a part-way accord that in turn could spur an eventual over-all peace settlement.

In Rogers' view, the big powers and the Mideast countries alike generally favor a reopening of the international waterway, closed since the 1967 war.

While Egypt and Israel may be far apart in their present terms for opening the canal, he believes they are interested in discussing specifics.

Rogers acknowledged that the problems to be solved in obtaining peace for the Middle East were difficult and complex and involved strongly held opposing viewpoints. But he said one should not be too gloomy. He rated the present Mideast peace prospects as far better than those of a year ago.

American novelist John Barth recited a portion of his upcoming novella "Perseid" last night before a full crowd at the Campus Center Auditorium. The novella concerns itself with the myth of Perseus. Barth's speech, part of the DVP Program, featured multi-media effects such as slides to enhance his reading. Barth is the author of THE FLOATING OPERA and GILES GOAT'S BOY, among his novels, and is considered one of our nation's finest living authors. (MDC photo by Barbara Brecker)

Poisson Defends Work Of Concert Committee

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

A lot of bad words have been tossed around considering the Concerts Committee and the work the people involved have been doing to give this campus free Spring concerts. Charges of non-representation of the student body, unresponsiveness to suggestion, and secrecy have been aimed at almost everyone concerned with the Committee's operations.

Dave Poisson, chairman of the Committee, decided yesterday in an MDC interview it was time to clear up a little of the useless "flak" floating around.

"First of all," he said, "I'd like to emphasize the fact that the Committee's work was in no way secret. Anyone who called RSO requesting information on the concerts was informed of the proceedings," he added. Of course false rumors "occasionally spring up concerning the groups we were contracting for the concerts but they were just that, rumors."

"We are also accused several times of not representing the student body, "Poisson said. "Again, this was an uninformed accusation. The Committee was comprised of two people from each residential area, two commuters, two representatives from class government, and two people from Afro-Am. There was no way to make the Committee more representative."

"Our biggest problem has been money," he said. "This concert has been, far and away, the smallest budgeted concert this University has ever seen. The Committee has had the task of getting the most talent and diversity for the least amount of money."

"Most concert promoters aim for big groups in order to sell out and thereby get profits," he continued. Our aim has not been to make money, but rather to give to the University the best entertainment possible for the least amount of money. This is one of the principal reasons for the lack of publicity on the concerts, another point of contention between the committee and those that would have had big name concerts.

"The rationale behind the lack of publicity was that with a lot of publicity, you try to seel things. We weren't trying to sell anything. This concert is for the students. The music will be there if they want it, where they can get it. If we had publicized it as some say we should have, the campus would have been swarming with outsiders already. As it is, we've been getting calls asking about camping permits and accessiblity of trailer parks."

"We've been trying to act in the best interests of the students, Poisson concluded. "Environmentally this area is not equipped for anything similar to a Woodstock, and we planned accordingly. I feel we've accomplished what we set out to do I hope my statements have clarified our motives for those who voiced doubts about our abilities."

Six Dorms Accepted For Co-ed Residence

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

Six dormitories have been accepted on the principle of co-ed residence for the fall semester, according to Dick Palomba, spokesman for the Co-ed Review Committee. He said recommendations for alternate rooms will be submitted for consideration on Tuesday.

The approved dorms are: Johnson, Hamlin, Brett, Grayson, Field and the entire Sylvan area (the northeast suites).

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Randolph Bromery makes the final decisions on residential life, by the power invested in the Administration by the Board of Trustees. He approved these dorms after careful consideration of the proposals submitted by the dorms and also by the opinions of the Coed Review Committee, Palomba said.

One of the criteria used to determine which dorms were to go co-ed was the provision for fulfillment of the necessary requirements specified by the Board of Trustees, he explained. The trustees require a) voluntary participation, b) meetings with parents, and c) parental permission for students under 21 years of age.

Demonstration of overwhelming support for transition to the co-ed life style was also teken into consideration, continued Palomba.

"This means if the dorm had a large group ready to make the move, we felt the situation wouldn't allow for imbalanced ratio of the residents and the opposite sex," he said.

It was explained that in Grayson and Field one complete wing in each will be set aside to be an all male (and an all female) corridor in order to keep a residential area open to more than one type of living style.

The sylvan suites are being distinguished not only by going co-ed but also by extending approval to alternate suites. Palomba said that this was decided in an effeot to create a more conducive living environment in the light of the present dissatisfaction with these dorms.

A recommendation for alternate rooms in coed dorms, and a rationale for the recommendation will be submitted to Dr. Bromery on Tuesday. A decision will be made some time this semester, Palomba said. Until the decision is made, all co-ed dorms, old and new, will have alternate floors, he explained.

Essentially 108 male spaces will betaken out of service. Palomba admitted when questioned as to the number of spaces opening up.

Palomba said the present number of co-ed dorms (13) will be increased to 19. He estimated the total number of students that will be accomodated in co-ed dorms in the fall to be around 3500 to 400.

Essentially 108 male spaces will be taken out of service, Palomba admitted when questioned as to the number of spaces opening up.

This was based on projections for next year specified by the Housing Office, he said.

One of the fears in approving what might be too many co-ed dorms was that if too many male dorms went co-ed there would have to be tripling, Palomba continued. The opening of the new Sylvan dorms in the fall should prevent this, he added.

Houses have already started to solicit applications from interested persons to live in their co-ed dorms. Students should contact the residence hall of their choice to apply. All arrangements should be made in compliance with the usual regulations for room choosing.

B52's Hit N.W. Vietnam In Assault On VC Bases

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. B52 bombers returned to targets in the northwest corner of South Vietnam Thursday in another intensive effort to dislodge North Vietnamese from jungle bases.

Six waves of the eight-jet bombers struck at a mountainous region running along the Laotian border from just above the A Shau Valley to the southern edge of the demilitarized zone.

This is a frontier area used by the North Vietnamese to slip into South Vietnam on the numerous outlets of the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

The B52s dropped tons of explosives on suspected North Vietnamese troop concentrations, bunker complexes, antiaircraft sites and infiltration trails. The raids were a follow up of five B52 strikes Wednesday in the same area.

As many as 30 B52 Stratofortresses, each one carrying 30 tons of bombs, took part in Thursday's mission in support of Operation Lam Son 720 in the provinces of Thua Thien and Quang Tri.

"The mountains are some of the highest in South Vietnam," said one U.S. officer. "The North Vietnamese withdraw into them when they choose not to fight. The South Vietnamese and American forces in Lam Son 720 can go in and dig them out. But the loss of life is much smaller by using B52's."

Only small skirmishes have been reported in Operation Lam Son 720, which is now in its 16th day.

The air blows dominated war action in South Vietnam.

In another day of generally light ground fighting, South Korean forces reported the heaviest action.

The Koreans claimed they killed 81 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong in a new offensive along a 200-mile stretch of South Vietnam's central coast.

The U.S. Command, in its weekly casualty summary, confirmed the unofficial reports of earlier in the week that American battlefield deaths have passed the 45,000 mark in the Vietnam war.

The command reports 45 U.S. serviceemen killed in action last week, to bring the total for a decade of U.S. involvement in Vietnam to 45,019.

The command also reported 518 Americans wounded last week, raising the war total to 298,289.

KENT, Ohio (AP)-Antiwar slogans reminiscent of those that blossomed on buildings here prior to the four days of violence at Kent State University last May appeared Thursday in spray paint on the sides of buildings in the downtown area and on the university campus.

ROTC Hit

The anonymous painter hit eight buildings in the city and campus, including the ROTC headquarters.

Another building used by the ROTC was burned down during a demonstration last May 2. It was that fire which resulted in National Guard troops being sent to the campus. The disturbances, which started with a demonstration that erupted into window smashing in downtown Kent, culminated in the May 4 confrontation in which guardsmen opened fire on demonstrators.

Four students were killed.

The slogans sprayed on buildings and a water tower next to the campus police station Wednesday night declared that "the war ends in May."

Woman Arrested

A woman charged with destruction of property in connection with an earlier spray painting incident appeared in Municipal Court and pleaded innocent.

The woman, Nancy Kurshan, 26, a former companion of Yippie leader Jerry Rubin, was accused of painting slogans on the KSU Administraton Building during a demonstration Feb. 5.

Miss Kurshan, who is not a student at KSU, is one of the organizers of the May Day Coalition on campus.

Yippie on Campus

The coalition has planned what its leaders call nonviolent demonstrations commemorating the May 4 incident. However campus Yippie leader Jerry Persky says the goal of the demonstrators will be to "shut down ROTC at Kent."

A series of official commemorative events is being planned by a committee organized at the direction of KSU President Robert I. White. The coalition is not among the official events.

Drugged Chinese Red Seized By French

PARIS (AP)-A Chinese "technical adviser" emerged from a drugged trance Thursday, while police sources disclosed that the French counterespionage service knew in advance that Peking Embassy officials would try to force him onto a jetliner to Shanghai.

But authorities, apparently trying to keep the case from becoming a major diplomatic incident that could ruin French-Chinese relations, kept silent on whether Chang Shi Jung would be turned over to the Chinese or granted asylum.

The police sources said the counterespionage wing known as the DST Bureau had wind of the case before Chang appeared semiconscious in Orly Airport Wednesday morning with a group of embassy men, some of them armed with pistols.

Other sources reported earlier that Chang, described as a 33-year-old agricultural adviser attached to the Peking Embassy in Algiers, made contact with French officials in Algeria, indicating to them that he wanted to defect.

In such cases, a diplomat will usually hold out a promise of important information in turn for a guarantee of security. It was not known here what Chang's duties as "agricultural technical assistant" involved.

Chang remained in a special police ward of Hotel-Dieu Hospital.

Wall Down In D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Antiwar and poverty demonstrators bashed down a plywood wall that had been erected to bar them from the inner corridors of the Health, Education and Welfare Department Thursday.

The wall came down after a milling crowd held a rally in the auditorium with the department's consent.

The demonstrators broke down the barricade only to find a wall of police on the other side guarding the central corridors.

About 150 of the militants were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct or parading without a permit. Paul Fuqua, police department information officer, said those arrested included Hosea Williams of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

This came after the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, in front of about 750 demonstrators in the department's auditorium scolded a picture of President Nixon.

Abernathy aide Hosea Williams called the barrier "Nixon's HEW wall" and said, "they used taxpayers' money to build that wall against us when we're here trying to redeem the soul of a sick nation."

Abernathy, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, looked at a Nixon picture held by two demonstrators on the auditorium stage and said, "We are not going to be fooled by your smile. We're not going to be fooled by your tongue."

Abernathy and the other demonstrators were in the auditorium to demand a $6,500 minimum income for the poor.

The Welfare Department was Thursday's target of the demonstrating coalition of poverty and antiwar groups who earlier in the week visited at the Selective Service and Internal Revenue Service buildings.

Capt. Found Not Guilty Of Crime At My Lai

FT. MCPHERSON, Ga. (AP) — A military jury acquitted Capt. Eugene M. Ketouc Thursday of maiming a Viet Cong suspect during an interrogation after the My Lai assault of 1968.

The jury of seven Army officers - six of them Vietnam veterans - deliberated for little more than an hour before returning the verdict.

One Left

The acquittal leaves only one soldier, Capt. Ernest L. Medina, yet to be tried on criminal charges arising from the My Lai raid and its aftermath. Medina, who is awaiting trial here, is charged with murder.

Friends and relatives of Keteuc, 37, of Humboldt, Neb., cheered in the courtroom after the president of the court-martial board, Col. James Burkhart, announced the verdict.

"Thank you, sir," said Kotouc as he snapped a salute to the jury, he round-laced, balding paratrooper, who was an intelligence officer at the time of the My Lai assault, then walked out of the courtroom with his auburn-haired wife and their three children.

He told newsmen outside that he would remain in the Army.

"It's the best damn army in the world, I'll tell you," said Kotouc, smiling. "Today is my day to be happy and not critical. I'm going out to be with my family." Kotouc declined further comment. "There are people who haven't been tried yet," he said. "There's Ernie's trial next month."

Both Friends

Medina, commander of the infantry company that conducted the assault, is a close personal friend of Kotouc.

Kotouc was the intelligence officer for Task Force Barker, which included Medina's Charley Company. He said he never went into My Lai, questioning the Viet Cong suspect two miles away at a U.S. bivouac area.

The captain testified he accidentally cut off the tip of the prisoner's little finger. He said he was threatening the suspect with a hunting knife while seeking information that would allow U.S. troops to operate safely in the area around My Lai.

The prosecution argued that Kotouc had maimed the prisoner maliciously and deliberately.

Fourth Tried

Kotouc was the fourth soldier to be tried on charges arising from the My Lai incident - and the third to be acquitted. Acquitted of assault charges earlier were S. Sgt. David Mitchell of St. Franciscille, La., and Sgt. Charles Hutte of Tallulah, La.

The captain's acquittal follows the conviction of Lt. William L. Calley Jr., on murder charges.

He was acquitted. Capt. Eugene M. Kotouc was set free yesterday after being found innocent of maiming a Viet Cong suspect during interrogation by a seven man jury of Army officers. (AP Wirephoto)

YSA, Randolph Inst. Sponsoring Confer.

On Saturday May 8 The University of Massachusetts chapter of the Young People's Socialist League and the Western Massachusetts chapter of the A. Philip Randolph Institute will co-sponsor an educational conference on the problem of building a coalition of students and workers. The conference will open with a panel discussion on "Students and Labor: the possibilities of coalition" at 10:00 a.m. in the Council Chambers of the UMass Student Union.

Among the panelists will be long time labor leaders and activists, such as Alfred Ollirio, the New England Regional Co-ordinator for the UAW and Henry Murray, the Regional Director of the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education. Socialist activists such as Julie Bernstein, the Vice Chairman of the Socialist Party and Jim Burnett, the organizer of Berkeley YPSL, and Earl Bourdon, an official with the United Steel Workers of America and a member of the Socialist Party's National Executive Committee. Also on the panel is Harvey Friedman from the UMass Labor Relations Center, an accomplished figure in both the academic and labor communities.

The panel will be oriented toward stimulating discussion from the audience at the morning conference. Other than those already mentioned other representatives from the labor movement will come from area unions, such as the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 1776 (the union for campus employees), the Service Employees International Union, the American Federation of Teachers, several local building trades unions.

After the morning panel the conferees will break up into workshops to allow for greater participation and dialogue between the unionists and the students in attendance. There will be three workshops; one will examine the possibilities of co-operation between students and labor in electoral action and related projects. Rather than repeat the morning panel this workshop will deal at least partially with increasing electoral participation through registration of young, minority, and working class voters. A second panel will deal with labor problems on campus and in the community. This panel will explore the ways students and workers can work together on the local level on problems of common interest.

A second purpose of this panel will be to provide politically serious radical and liberal students a perspective on allying with the labor movement on the grass roots level. The third workshop will concentrate on labor and the ecology movement.

For more information on this conference, contact Jack Clark at 546-3384, or Carol Drew at 549-0830.

Gov't. Holds Peace Worker

WASHINGTON (AP)-The U.S. Court of Appeals backed the government Thursday in its efforts to hold a blonde, teenage peace worker under $100,000 bond for testimony before a Seattle, Wash., grand jury investigating the March 1 bombing of the U.S. Capitol.

Leslie Bacon, 19, will be taken to Seattle by federal marshals, the Justice Department said after the appeals court rejected attempts by Miss Bacon's lawyers to free her.

Robert L. Stevenson, Justice Department spokesman, refused to disclose when Miss Bacon would be moved. The grand jury had subpoenaed her to appear Wednesday.

Guarded by Marshalls

Miss Bacon, a member of the Mayday Collective sponsoring antiwar demonstrations here next week, was guarded by marshals at an undisclosed location following her arrest Tuesday night as a material witness in the Capitol blast.

The government contends Miss Bacon has "personal knowledge of the circumstances and persons responsible for" the bombing that caused $200,000 damage to parts of the Senate wing of the Capitol. No one was injured.

Not Charged

Although she is not charged as a defendant in the case, an FBI agent testified Wednesday she is suspected of having participated in the bombing.

However, her attorney said government lawyers do not feel Miss Bacon is implicated but want her to testify about conversations she allegedly overheard.

"She told me she knows nothing about the Capitol bombing," said lawyer Philip Hirschkop.

Informant "S1"

He contended the government's case thus far relies on the word of an unidentified informant given the name "S1" during testimony in a hearing on Miss Bacon's bond.

Hirschkop referred to S1 as a "creepy undercover agent" and suggested he "might have been a spurned suitor."

Asst. U.S. Attorney Harold Sullivan argued against releasing Miss Bacon on bond in spite of promises by Hirschkop that she would go voluntarily to Seattle to testify before the grand jury.

Sullivan said the undercover agent was convinced that she would tell if given the opportunity.

Hebrew And Arabic Offered Next Fall

The Arabic and Hebrew languages will be taught for the first time next fall at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Both languages will be offered by the Classics department.

Arabic 110 will acquaint the student with basic grammar, correct pronunciation, and a vocabulary sufficient to enable the student to read a newspaper in Modern Standard Arabic, the language employed throughout the Arabic-speaking world from Morocco to Iraq in newspapers, books, radio and television. Prof. David Biddle, a graduate of the School of Oriental Studies at the University of London, will teach the course which will meet Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 2:30 p.m.; with labs Tuesday and Thursday at 3:35 p.m. in Herter Hall, room 119.

The course will serve as an introduction to Arabic for those who wish to study classical texts including the Koran, selections from which will be included in the course.

Hebrew will be taught in four courses, two elementary and two intermediate. Mrs. Leora Baron, a native speaker of Hebrew, has taught the language in Texas and to Hillel members at UMass. Next fall Hebrew 110 for beginners and Hebrew 130 for intermediate speakers will be offered. Follow-up courses, 120 for beginners and 140 for intermediates, will be offered in the spring. Completion of Hebrew 140 will satisfy a foreign language requirement at UMass.

Hebrew 110 will meet Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 4:40 p.m. with a lab Tuesdays at 4:40. Hebrew 130 will meet Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 3:35 p.m. All classes will meet in room 119 of Herter Hall and will aim at proficiency in reading, writing, and conversation in Modern Hebrew.

A placement test for the Hebrew classes will be given Tuesday, May 4, from 6 to 7 p.m. in Thompson Hall, room 104. The test is obligatory for students wishing to take Hebrew in the fall. Enrollment in each class will be limited to 20, with five slots reserved in each course for students from neighboring colleges.

Further information may be obtained from Prof. Gilbert Lawall, Department of French, Italian, and Classics, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass., 545-0512.

Injuries On 747's

WASHINGTON (AP)-Alarmed at turbulence injuries aboard the world's largest airliner, safety experts called Thursday for tighter seatbelt discipline on flights of the Boeing 747 jumbo jet.

The National Transportation Safety Board suggested that the Federal Aviation Adminstration require:

1. Strict enforcement of the use of seat belts on the 747 when the seatbelt sign in on-and reminders by public address announcement at regular intervals when it is on for prolonged periods.
2. Repair or replacement of defective locking mechanisms on overhead luggage bins.
3. Improvement of headrests on economy class seats so that the headrests will not break loose under severe turbulence.
4. Installation of narrow carrying boards for the injured, for use in 747 aisles that are too narrow for standard stretchers.

FAA Administrator John H. Shaffer, Jr., notified the board that he would take appropriate corrective action.

The board also asked the FAA to review airline policy regarding in-flight assessments of injury or illness of passengers.

Board chairman John H. Reed said this should be done to prevent unnecessary delays in obtaining medical assistance.

The FAA indicated it would consider this proposal in some detail before taking any action.

A Safety Board representative said the board is watching carefully operational results of the new passenger lounges on the 747, which permit prolonged standing or strolling.

Starving For Nothing

When Richard Nixon eats breakfast May 5th, Lee Sandwen will be going hungry. This is not because Lee Sandwen does not have a meal ticket or because he does not have twenty cents for an order of English muffins. It is because Lee Sandwen does not like the war in Vietnam.

Lee, of course, is not the only person who does not like the war in Vietnam, and probably a great many people who do not like the war will eat breakfast on May 5th.

But the war is very special for Lee and protesting the war means more for him than it does for other, average Americans. Lee Sandwen is President of the Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts, at Amherst, Massachusetts 01002. Lee is committed.

This means that Lee must be fashionably radical or a shade to the left of above, must take vocal stands on certain prescribed issues and must play the role of a leader, both symbolically and literally, in all major campus protests which serve causes of the left.

Lee understands this. He follows the Glenn Elters tradition of being there when the official spokesman is looked for. Lee Sandwen intends to sacrifice his body for the publicity of his students' movements.

This is very noble.

Placing the movement and the goal of an end to the war as a priority above his own health and comfort, Sandwen reasons that he becomes a leader in another dramatic effort against the war. And all of this is, no doubt, quite gratifying to him.

But there is only one thing wrong with all of this--it won't end the war. Hunger strikes are nice for prisons and sanitariums--they attract television cameras and officials are forced to act our of embarrasment and make some token gestures. But as soon as the cameras go away the changes slow and then stop.

A college student hunger strike that gets, say, less than 5% support becomes nothing more than a joke to the people who run the war from Washington. They shrug it off as simply more nonsense from that unrepresentative group that they claim supports the anti-war movement all by itself.

Sandwen and his hunger strike, if anything, just discredits other more viable protests and rekindles the dimming congressional belief that anti-war sentiment is merely a childish game. The Hunger strike is childish and serves nothing except the collective egos of the strikers, although it may shorten the lines in the Dining Commons a bit for a few days.

Know Thyself

Every year it seems a new method comes along for concerned individuals to demonstrate their feelings on important issues, and at this time, the important topic is the Kent State massacre of last year. By removing a page from the civil rights worker's manual, the individuals memorializing what happened in Ohio and Missippi last year have taken up the Hunger strike as a fitting tribute.

By no means are we trying to condemn this action on the part of some truly dedicated individuals for a cause which they, as well as we, feel is deserving. Instead, we support those employing this means of self-involvement and hope that others would see in themselves the same dedication.

Yet an act of this sort must be an individual activity if it is to be at all meaningful. To say that all should take part is, in itself, not especially beneficial to the cause since it lessens the thought and meaning behind the whole thing. It would be overwhelmingly important if each individual looked into his own heart and made the decision to fast. It would be minutely insignificant if done by all just because it is being done by all.

For if that is the case, a mass fast would represent a kind of hopeless "me tooism" which would do more harm to the cause than good. The purpose of it all must not be simply to demonstrate to all our concern over the events of the last few years, but to do in convincingly. Numbers are not necessarily best or the easiest means to this end. Washington should have demonstrated that much at least. What does persuade people is an individual's undeniable dedication and belief in a cause and this is something which is not only difficult to suppress but also impossible to hide.

On the other hand, people are not easily fooled by individuals who profess a belief that they do not sincerely hold. In this situation, the best of actors is at a disadvantage to the least crafty critic. In the end, this type of person can only do injury to the belief he only half-heartedly espouses.

To fast can be a meaningful and effective action by those who truly believe in what they are doing. For others, to do so would only increase the burden which the dedicated must already bear.

The Generation Sex Gap

WASHINGTON——Everyone talks about the problems parents have with their children, but no one is aware that grandparents also have trouble identifying with their grandchildren.

A friend of mine, whom I shall call Zachary Danbury, decided to take his 16-year-old son to see Zach's mother who was in a nursing home. Mrs. Danbury, in her 80s, was happy to see both of them.

Unfortunately, Zach's son had very long hair and this is when the trouble started.

"Mother," said Zach, "this is my son, Bobby."

"She's very beautiful," Mrs. Danbury said.

"No, Mother. Bobby is a boy, not a girl."

Mrs. Danbury nodded. A few minutes later she said, "Bobby, I hope you don't let boys get fresh with you. They lose all respect for a girl if she's considered easy."

Bobby said, "Grandma, I don't go out on dates with boys. I go out on dates with girls."

"That's nice," said Mrs. Danbury. "You'll never get in trouble if you go out with girls."

"Mother," said Zach. "You don't understand. Bobby is a boy. That's why he goes out with girls."

Mrs. Danbury absorbed this and then nodded, "I see you wear pants, Bobby. You know, when I was a girl we weren't permitted to wear pants. When I was your age, my mother made me wear crinolines when I went out. I don't suppose you know what they are."

"No Grandma, I don't."

Mrs. Danbury smiled. "None of the young girls know what they are any more." She then peered closely at Bobby and said, "You don't wear lipstick, do you?"

Bobby shook his head, "No, Grandma. I don't."

"You should be very proud of her, Zachary," Mrs. Danbury said to her son. "If you saw some of the young girls who come to visit their grandparents here, you'd be appalled." Then she turned to Bobby again. "Can you cook?"

"A little," Bobby replied.

"Learn to cook. You'll never hold onto a man if you don't know how to cook."

Zachary said, "Mother, Bobby isn't trying to find a man. He is a man, at least he's almost a man."

Mrs. Danbury's eyes gleamed. "Lots of young girls think all they have to do is look sexy. Well let me tell you something, Bobby. You're beautiful now, but you won't always be beautiful. That's when you need to hold onto your bushand. I don't imagine you're going steady at 16?"

"No, Grandma," Bobby said. "I'm not going with anybody on a permanent basis."

"That's good," Mrs. Danbury said. "Make all the boys come to you. Never chase them."

"Yes, Grandma."

"I'd like to do something nice for you, Bobby, since you came to see me. Here's $20."

"What for?" Bobby asked.

"Buy yourself a pretty dress," Mrs. Danbury said. "I don't have any objections to you wearing pants, but I think you should have one pretty dress in your closet for some special occasion."

Bobby took the 20-dollar bill. "Thank you, Grandma."

"It's all right, Bobby." Mrs. Danbury smiled. "Mrs. Dobkins, who lives across the hall from me, is always bragging about her granddaughter, so I want to see the expression on her face when she sees that I have a beautiful granddaughter, too."

"Oh — And To You Down There, Warm Regards"

Have We So Quickly Forgotten?

It was now nearly 10:30 in the evening. A large crowd of students and faculty members had been gathered in the lobby, in the ballroom, and in the hallways of the Student Union since the middle of the afternoon. The crowd had been large at 3:00 p.m. and even larger by 4:00. At 5:00 it had gradually begun to shrink in size and from then until 7:00 only the very stalwart remained, unconcerned about their supper. But after seven o'clock in the evening, once the Commons were closed, the people started returning. The crowd now bagan to grow to an even greater size than that which it had reached at its peak earlier in the day. Word had been spread during the evening meal. Many more had heard and had come to join those already in the Union. They were there, and others kept coming there because they had heard about the invasion of Cambodia. The crowd asked questions about this shocking, stunning pronouncement...Cambodia?...invasion?...why?...aren't things bad enough?...Questions and fear were everywhere in the crowd, seeking answers, seeking solidarity.

Then, amidst this tension, words began to fly through the crowd ...national guardsmen...shooting... students...somewhere in Ohio...someplace called Kent State...four kids dead. FOUR KIDS DEAD?!?! NO...no way...couldn't be true... not in our country...just couldn't ...just wouldn't happen here.

The words were silent now. They had been spoken. They were no longer being spoken. But their feeling had been created within everyone. And these words were being felt.

Two days later, word came that two more students had been killed at Jackson State. This feeling grew even harder within us. We marched. We picketed. We confronted. We rallied by the pond. We rallied on the Common. We worked through long, sleepless, nights. We worked through long, sweltering days. We were driven by this feeling within us. This hard feeling which shocked us. This hard feeling which pained us. This hard feeling which sickened us.

This is what we did on May 5, 1970.

What will we be doing on May 5, 1971?

In May of last year, at Kent State University in Ohio, four people were murdered and eleven others were wounded.

In May of last year, at Jackson State College in Mississippi, two people were murdered and ten others were wounded.

This happened in May of last year. Can we so easily forget it — in May of this year?

We urge the entire campus community to participate in the national memorial moratorium, which will be held on this coming Wednesday (May 5th), in remembrance of our murdered brothers and sisters.

Letters To The Editor

Criminal, Illegal, Immoral

To the Editor:

At the Student Senate meeting of Wednesday, April 28, 1971 the Senate voted overwhelmingly to establish May 5 as "Student's Patriots Day" and as such as a day of mourning for those students killed at Kent State and Jackson State and asked students to observe it accordingly. The Senate also asked other colleges and universities to likewise observe this day.

Later in the meeting Glenn Elters and I proposed the following amendment: Resolved, theat the Student Senate strongly urges the students, faculty, staff and administration of the University of Massachusetts to participate in the nation-wide one day strike called by the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice on May 5 in support of 1) total and immediate withdrawel of all U.S. forces from Indochina 2) a minimum guaranteed annual income of $6,500 and 3) the release of all political prisoners. This amendment was passed 18 in favor, 15 opposed and 6 abstensions. I asked that a roll call vote be taken so that the public could know their senator's position on this matter. Not one senator there favored such a public record thus the roll call was not taken.

At a meeting early in April the Senate voted to support the entire calendar of anti-war activities scheduled for this spring, including the April 24 march and the May 1-5 events. One of these events is a nationwide one day strike on May 5. The reason for the amendment then is to be more explicit in our role of support. The Senate voted to support these events but had not asked the people here in the UMass community to do anything. The main thrust of this amendment is that it strongly urges the students to stay away from classes on May 5, it strongly urges the faculty to stay away from classes on May 5, it strongly urges the staff of the university including custodians, Hatch ladies, grounds crew, dining commons workers, etc. to stay away from work on May 5 and it strongly urges the administration to stay away from their offices on May 5 and not conduct "business as usual".

I asked the senators not to oppose the amendment on account of the three demands that the PCPJ is making as part of their protest because while we may disagree with one of them we can agree with another and this agreement can provide the basis for our participation in the May 5 strike.

What good is a strike? Let us spend the day talking with those people who are not convinced that the role of the U.S. in Indochina is criminal, illegal and immoral. Let us think of ways to advance the quality of life for all Americans and suggest them in letters to our representatives in Washington. Let us examine the "crimes" of the so-called political prisoners to see if their acts are really crimes in a free society. These suggestions are not limited to students but to anyone in one of the four groups mentioned who is in any way sympathetic with either of the 3 demands contained in the strike amendment. And people who disagree with these demands also have a part in this strike in that, despite their disagreement, they should recognize the need to discuss their views so that there is at least understanding.

Many people will think that a strike here is pointless because the staff won't stay home and the administration in Whitmore will come to their offices. When I asked at the Senate meeting that a roll call vote be taken on this amendment many senators looked around to see if anyone else was going to stand up. No one did — no roll call. If we all look around waiting to see who else will stay away from their normal routine or otherwise observe the strike and/or the day of mourning for those killed at Kent and Jackson perhaps no one will and there will be no such strike.

The student government has acted and says that it supports this strike. The people in the four groups mentioned in the amendment who are in some way sympathetic to any of the PCPJ's 3 demands should not simply scoff at May 5 as another meaningless, mind and energies to work in an attempt to convince others of the rightness of their views and to bring about the achievement of these goals.

Echolalic Nonsense

To the Editor:

Re: "A Lot To Be Said For Grass

Dear name withheld by request,

You have displayed a great deal of ignorance in your letter complaining about the Campus Center and the immediately surrounding area. First, the seasons of the year are restrictive on the possibilities of landscaping. Grass must be planted in the late summer since the soil is not warm enough until then for the seed to germinate properly. Since the Campus Center was opened only recently, perhaps you are rushing things a bit. The optimum time for tree-planting, likewise has not yet arrived. Secondly, I believe that if you will take the time to familiarize yourself with the plans for the Campus Center area, you would clear up some of your ignorance.

You have also shown extreme irresponsibility in your comments about the aesthetics of the building itself. First of all, I doubt very much that anyone cares that you, name withheld by request, think that the building is "ugly" — whatever that means. Secondly, no responsible critic would allow himself to make statements as unqualified as yours. They lead me to believe that you know almost nothing about aesthetics generally, architecture specifically, and even less about the skills of criticism.

It appears to me that you are caught up in the highly popular pastime of perpetuating echolalic nonsense — you even have the phrases correct — "Awful Waffle, cold drab monstrosity". It also appears that you have nothing else to offer — not even a name!

All For Change

To the Editor:

Dwight Allen is concerned with change and that is all he is concerned with. I have been a student in the School of Education for one year and I have never been so confused. In my opinion student teaching is a very important part of my education but apparently the School of Education does not agree.

The Office of Field Experience is completely disorganized. They do not consider the individual students needs, but have the attitude of just getting rid of everyone...'A place for everyone and everyone in their place.'

When I came to the School of Education as a transfer student I planned to practice teach in California, but the School of Education decided to change the program in my senior year and now I do not qualify. This should not have happened if I was being considered as an individual.

I do not see how Dwight Allen can be concerned with change when what he has is so disorganized, confusing, impersonal and unsatisfactory. It's about time he stopped and looked at what he created and how it affects the students before he continues because students should be more important than personal recognition.

Students Beware

To the Editor:

Students beware! The senate is moving forward to aggrandize its power once more. Prior to the Student Senate's recent action the will of the people could strike down unpopular legislation via referendum as it did repeatedly during the past two years. The Student Senate has passed a bill that would allow them to overturn referenda that doesn't get 25% of the student body's support or refusal, by making a slight change in the bill and passing it again. This may seem innocuous enough but in reality it is an attempt to free the Student from the "meddling" of their constituents.

Fellow students there are approximately 19,000 of you in attendence here. What makes this action of the Student Senate so sinister is the fact that no bill put up for referendum in the past two years (how long I've been here) has ever gotten more that 25% of the entire electorate to vote on it! The largest turnout for a referendum in the past two years was 4300 people grand total. Twenty-five percent of the school's 19,000 students gives you 4750 people, In other words nothing defeated in the past by the popular outcry of the students at the referendum would have been if this bill had been in effect. This presents the prospect that the Student Senate will ignore referenda in the future knowing full well that the popular will may be circumvented if it so desires.

Fresh Harvest

To the Editor:

Spring is a time of planting seeds for a fresh harvest. The seeds of peace and justice are now being planted across America. At Amherst, perhaps, a renewed university will be sown.

Together with the Vietnamese, Laotians, and Cambodians; with Black people, with women, gay people, workers, and bank robbers, we students are also "outlaws in the eyes of America."

During the first five days of May, we must bear witness to our impatience with the militarism, racism, and sexism that is woven into the fabric of the land. We can no longer seek to hide from the cancerous tissue infecting our nation.

The Senate officers will join with other students in a liquid fast from May 1 to May 5. On May 5, in memory of Jackson State and Kent State, we will not attend class. The Senate will not hold its regular meeting on that date. It is our hope that everyone, in his own way, will honor those who have died both in Amerika and Southeast Asia.

There is no spring in the rice paddies.

Kid Stuff

To the Editor:

I don't like children's lib because they speak for themselves but not all the kids in the school and teachers. The only way they will get in trouble is if they look for trouble. Ever since children's lib started, the children's lib gang have been looking for trouble and I think they are just looking for attention.

One of the kids from children's lib threw a grinder in the lunchroom and he didn't get hit. He expected, however, not to even get into trouble. Then he complained to the principal about children's lib and wanted his own way.

Infinate Wisdom

To the Students:

You should be alerted once again to an attack being waged on your financial prudence by the Student Senate.

In their infinite wisdom, the Student Senate again last night passed legislation to pay the officers of that body. They have, however, provided for the bill to be placed on a referendum to be presented to the Student Body for their approval May 6.

Now, we Students ought to be aware that the question to be presented provides lesser payment for EACH officer; but there is now another officer to be paid (this new office, too, was approved last night). Thereby, the bill will cost us Students $25 more each month than a similar bill which was soundly defeated in March.

It appears that the senate is attempting to bore the Students with referenda on pay bills-kind of "winding down the opposition"-in hopes that they may be able to finally slip one such bill through the back door. I implore the students of the University to remain aware of the ploys of the Student Senate in their underhanded attempts to irresponsibly squander our money. And I STRONGLY ENCOURAGE you to vote "NO" to both questions on next Thursday's referendum.

An Open Letter

Dear President Nixon:

This letter is to inform you that we, the Coalition for Environmental Quality, are shocked and dismayed at your recently reported action to delay safety labeling on phosphate detergents.

Clearly this is no time for delaying action to correct any environmental problem. Detergents containing phosphates are widely recognized as a major threat to the nation's fresh water. The fact that further research needs to be done on those chemicals used to replace phosphates is certainly no excuse to delay the condemnation of phosphates. We believe that it is the manufacturer's responsibility to show that his products are safe to use, especially if he is changing the content of his product to some new questionable formula. We believe that the Federal Government's responsibilities are to rigidly enforce environmental protection and check the findings of private companies regarding the safety of their products. It is not the taxpayer's responsibility to pay for the development of alternatives to dangerous ingredients.

Safety labeling of phosphate detergents is a disappointingly weak defense against the ravages of these polluters. To delay even this indicates a dangerous disregard for misunderstanding of the environmental perils this nation faces. It is not alarmist or doom's day prophecy to state that we are in real trouble with out environment. Inspite of Earth Day, 1970, political promises, articles and books galore, the situation has certainly frown worse in the last year. This is obviously no time to go soft on polluters or environmental issues. We are trifling with the survival of this nation and the well-being of the global biosphere. We are disappointed to note that the record of your administration on environmental matters is proving to be too little too late. We are only beginning to pay the price of our disregard for the environment and the price must certainly go up for each new generation. Bankruptcy looms in the forseecable future.

Howard Morgan, President of Proctor and Gamble, was quoted as saying that safety labeling "would have the effect of forcing the industry to remove phosphates from its detergents." We approve whole-heartedly. He further was quoted; "the industry would have to replace the phosphates with other materials before those other materials have been proved safe for people and the environment." This is certainly a problem and we urge your administration to protect us from these dangers by forbiding the marketing of any new formulas until the contents are proved safe. If that means that the industry will suffer a profit setback, that's their problem, not the tax payer's. We ask you point-blank; where should the lose be incurred? In the environmert, where pollution robs all the people of their heritage and their right to decent healthful lives? Or in the profits of a large industry guilty of woeful disregard for the well-being of this nation's environment and the people who must live and work in it? In almost every case an environmental question must involve such difficult choices, but we can no longer afford to compromise. Any decision will be unpopular with someone, but priorities must be observed. Certainly the right to survive, the right to enjoy peace and freedom, and the right to enjoy physical and economic security must take higher priorities than a constantly expanding GNP.

We strongly urge you to insist on the safety labeling of detergents immediately, to include a list of all ingredients and percentages of all active ingredients. Further, we urge you to take forceful action on all of our environmental woes. We feel that we, and the vast majority of the people of this nation would stand behind a leader who took strong action on the real issues this nation faces.

Films

THE BLUE ANGER (Talkie, Northampton)

Joseph von Sternberg's 1930 film made a star of Marlene Dietrich as well as being one of the more expressionistic views of pre-war Nazi Germany.

COLD TURKEY (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A light-weight satire about a Middle America town whose citizens give up smoking for a month to win $25 million. Dick Van Dyke, Bob Newhart, and satarists Bob and Ray all have funny moments.

DADA FILMS, Friday, Thompson 104, 8; Pierpont Lounge, 10 until dawn)

Free Dada-Surrealistic films beginning with (at Thompson) with "Closed Vision", an attempt pure stream-of-consciousness expression. Also to be shown are shorts by Man Ray and Hans Richter, Isou's "Venom and Eternity" and other available films.

THE DREAMER (Saturday, Thompson 104, 7:30 and 9:15)

A blend of lyricism and realism is this story about a young man torn between his love for old people and a young girl.

8 1/2 (Tuesday, Mahar, 6:30, 8)

Fellini's vision of himself and his work. A surrealistic, multi-level masterpiece about one man's madness and his attempt to put order into it.

THE GENERAL (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30, 10)

A comedy about the Civil War with master comic Buster Keaton.

LAWRENCE OF ARABIA (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

David Lean's beautifully executed, massive film biography of the elusive and legendary T.E. Lawrence. Rereleased and cut, the film is masterfully done with a superlative cast including Peter O'Toole, Alec Guiness, Omar Shariff, Anthony Quinn, and Jose Ferrer.

LITTLE BIG MAN (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A lyrical, ballad-like adaptation of Thomas Berger's allegorical tale of Indian-white relationships as told by the 120 year old white survivor of Custer's Last Stand. It's a brilliantly done, multi-level film, the best American one of last year. Dustin Hoffman is a superb passive deadpan caught between two cultures and Chief Dan George gives a brilliant, lively performance as an Indian leader.

LOVE IS A FUNNY THING (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:15, 10)

Claude Lelouch directed this love story about a French couple in the United States. It's a good humoured of love and life in this country.

MAROONED (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)

A cinerama-space-spectacular about an aborted space mission sometime in the future. The film caught, as the title implies, between some excellent special effects and wooden acting and direction.

M*A*S*H (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

The funniest film in a long time. An acerbic look at army life seen through the wild antics of three Army medics during the Korean conflict. Director Robert Altman handles his material well, jumping from cool satire to frantic slapstick with ease.

THE NIGHT THEY RAIDED MINSKY'S (Friday and Sunday, Hampden Dining Commons, #5, SW, 7:30 and 9:30)

A very fine, neglected film that takes a most enjoyable look at Burlesque during the Thirties. Britt Ecklunc plays the young lady whose strap breaks on the stage and introduces the striptease to the world. The chorines are appropriately chunky, the sets are tacky, the humour bawdy, and the entire film is neatly low-keyed.

PATTON (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

George C. Scott copped all the major acting awards of last year with his strong, hard performance of the tough World War II general.

PRETTY MAIDS ALL IN THE ROW (Amherst Cinema, Amherst; Calvin Theater, Northampton)

Roger Vadim's rather loose and ill-aimed satire about a high school teachers amourous and criminal affairs with his female students. Rock Hudson plays the .

THE RISE OF LOUIS XIV (Academy of Music, Northampton)

Italian director's Roberto Rossellini's recreation of Seventeenth century France is elegant, intelligent documentary about royal court life.

ROSEMARY'S BABY, (Monday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)

The film adaptation of the highly successful best seller is a stunning yet most uncomfortable film, (especially in view of the entire Sharon Tate murders). Roman Polanski's perverse humour permeates this psychological thriller about a young pregnant wife who believes her husband has made a pact with a witches' sult. Mia Farrow gives her finest performance as the neurotic wife and John Cassavettes is neatly nasty husband.

SUNDAYS AND CYBELLE, (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)

Director Serge Bourguinon's first film not only copped the oscar as best foreign film in 1962, but "Sundays and Cybele" also garnered vast critical acclaim. One critic, Bosley Crowther of the New York Times calls the film "A cinematic miracle...a masterpiece....brilliant cast....sheer magic."

(Sunday, SU Ballroom, 2 1:40, 7, and 9:30)

Costa-Gavras made an amazing piece of political propoganda that, beyond the politics, stands-up as one of the finest thrillers in years. Yves Montand plays a political leader who is assasinated, and Jean-Louis Tringenant plays the honest government official who investigates his death. The film is excellent propoganda against the present regime in Greece that moves with breathtaking speed in its photography and direction to a somewhat polemical climax.

It's Sticky Between The Teeth

Sticky Fingers, The Rolling Stones, Rolling Stones Records

Receiving the new Rolling Stones record is like good sex, the question isn't whether or not you'll like it, but rather how pleasureable it will be. Sticky Fingers (the title metaphorically answers the question asked) is a most satisfying album; nothing as spectacular or grand as "Their Satanic Majesties" or certain cuts on "Let It Bleed", just the Stones playing rock and roll and blues as they did on their earlier album only now matured to a totally unique style.

The Stones have been with us since mid-adolescence. Back when the Beatles were the crown princes of rock, the Stones were the king's bastards. Dirty, grubby, rude, hardly cute, they stood to the side as music's bad boys. Their reputation was that of a local whore, almost universally denounced but invariably enjoyed by many.

Then with "Satisfaction" the Stones became respectable. Fourteen year old girls made room between their Paul and John pictures for Mick. They were seen as being one of the best groups around and the stinking, grubby, boorish juvenile look they had gave way to an arrogant, stylish, half-serious nihilism. The group began to become a social phenomenon; while John Lennon spoke of the Beatles relationship to Christ, Jagger was upsetting Ed Sullivan by wanting to sing "Let's Spend The Night Together" before the host's large Middle American audience.

Mick Jagger

They made good albus, amny of which are just no beginning to receive the mass appreciation they merit. We listened to their music and probably liked it more than we wanted to admit, for still the group hardly had much of a likeable nature. They were still whores, only now in a penthouse, a place we put them in buying their singles which were some of the best rock songs of the last decade.

Their nihilism became more apparent. Women became only accessories as Jagger began to take his sexual appeal seriously. Their role as being an antithesis of good also was more defined with songs like "Sympathy for a Devil" and the album "Their Satanic Majesties Request" which was something of Sgt. Pepper's dark side.

The Stones were rock's forerunners of a counter-culture akin to what Warhol's Factory. It was devoid of sexual roles and very much drug oriented. They were the pacesetters and we began to be the followers. We began to respect the group. When the Sixties were over and done with some rock magazines placed the Stones over the Beatles as being the most important group of that decade and others held their peak would come in the Seventies.

"Let It Bleed" bouyed them even further by being one of the most frequently liked albums of last year by many people.

But it wasn't until the release of the stunning documentary "Gimme Shelter" that the Stones were redeemed for the nightmare at Altamont. Even more the Stones now received our respect on all levels, musically and intellectually, and many of us waited with anticipation for their new album.

Sticky Fingers was released this week on the Stones' new label. It's packaging, by Andy Warhol is an elaborate perverse conceit that's very funny. On the cover is a front body-shot of a man in dungarees, thighs (the rear is his rear). Instead of just a picture of the zipper, each album has real one which works. It unzips and beneath it are a pair of knickers. Original reports said there would be an self-inflating balloon inside the fly that would flop out, so to speak. Apparently either is was considered too difficult a project or simply carrying the joke too far, whatever the case — the balloon's not there.

The album inside is the Stones playing Chuck Berry styled rock flavored with their own musical and social touches. The recent single, "Brown Sugar" and "Bitch" is typical of most of the album. Jagger doing the vocals with he and Keith Richard writing all but one of the ten songs. The production isn't elaborate, it's tone is most consistant, quite reminiscent of much of "Let It Bleed" and the Berry material on their most recent live albums (the legitimate and it's bootleg European tour brother).

Sticky Fingers is the kind of album you keep playing and playing, finding something different and better each time.

It is their most explicit album as to drugs and sex. The first will obviously keep it off of some uptight radio stations concerned with the recent FCC decision concerning the airing of drug-oriented songs. (Apparently the conclusion was drawn that drug songs on the radio corrupt youth and kids are "freaking out in Kansas" because of it.)

Jagger has for a long time been a male chauvinist, and here women are viewed with casual contempt. The album cover would be a slap to any feminist as would some lyrics which have women pictured simply as performing a function, and a rather perfunctory one at that.

The production on the album is excellent, the sound is clean throughout and the instrument mix is handled very well. All the songs are good, perhaps the most exciting is the seven-minute "Can't You Hear Me Knocking" which features some extra ordinary playing from the group (along with the highly talented Billy Preston on organ.)

One astounding thing about the Stones is, although they have many gold records (a gold record meaning one million dollars in sales), they have never sold a million copies of a single album - a feat frequently done by the likes of such useless groups as Grand Funk and Three Dog Night. With their new-found respect and nearly now quite intellectual following, may Sticky Fingers be their first.

Replies To Notes From Yale

By Nathaniel Hayden

To the Editor:

My son Robert, who is a student at Yale, gave me a copy of an article that appeared in The Yearling* and the University of Massachusetts Daily Collegian on April 2nd. This was extremely interesting to me because I am a social science teacher at Crestdale High School, which was the subject of the article. It brought to the forefront many problems that I feared existed, but which I fervently hoped would have been resolved by now. Unfortunately, they have gotten worse instead of better.

When I arrived in Crestdale nine years ago, there was no rigid, caste-like stratification along academic lines. This extreme emphasis on high marks is due in large measure to the sudden reversion of colleges and universities back to the meritocratic (i.e. grade point average) method of selecting students. Due to the success of schools such as Hampshire, Goddard and Bard in the 1970's, many secondary school educators began to believe that the deeper qualities or "potential" of a student was more important than how many facts he could accumulate. The tremendous influx of new students in the late 1980's and the lack of a commensurate increase of aid by the federal government have made this unworkable. Although unlike in earlier times computers are available on a wide scale in order to tell a student what schools would be best to apply to, the problem of too many students applying to too few colleges and universities is overwhelming. A computerized selection of students seems to be the only fair way to accept students. More likely than not, this problem could have been avoided if we had been able to break the go-to-college lockstep in the 1970's. Instead of doing this, educators chose to accept all. I must admit that at that time, this was definitely necessary in order to compensate for the deprivations that blacks, Chicanos and other minorities have had to confront with for centuries in this country. In addition to this, there should also have been a larger increase in the number of junior colleges across the country as well as more schools without walls programs.

"A computerized selection of students seems to be the only fair way to accept students."

The major problem was that education remained a low priority on the federal governments list even after the Vietnam war ended in the early 1970's. Hence, the pressure built up in the schools that existed causing the following to occur:

(From the New York Times)

BLACKS ACCEPTED AT COLLEGES IN HIGHER PERCENTAGES THAN NUMBER IN COLLEGE AGE GROUP PRINCETON, April 10-

It was disclosed here today by the National Collegiate Census Bureau that 18% of all college freshmen are members of a racial minority. Most of this group is composed of blacks and Puerto Ricans. "The vast majority of these students are well equipped to handle higher education", one spokesman said. Due to this, many educators are now speaking in terms of returning to the strictly meritocratic method of selecting students. "A major reason for considering this" says Lawrence Davidson, Admissions Director at Hampshire College in Amherst, Massachusetts, "is that schools such as Hampshire are no longer able to process all of their applications. We've had to move the deadline for filing them to September 20th to be considered for acceptance the following January, and December 1 for entrance the following September. We just cannot afford the staff necessary to handle all of the applications that we receive each year. Even if we did, there would still be the problem of selection. Competition has gotten so great that we can accept only 5% of those who apply. We have been able to select a diversified group at the expense of academic winners. However, most of the students that we turn away each year would be excellent students here. Space and funds are so limited however, that we can't accept them. Since all of those who now apply are on an equal footing, so-to-speak, I believe that a return to the meritocratic method would be fair at this time. Of course, the problem of elitism may arise once again. At Hampshire, we discovered that the problem remained beneath the surface even when we chose our students for their aesthetic qualities instead of merely academic ratings. This change therefore, will not make much of a difference.

"The major problem was that education remained a low priority on the federal government lists..."

Elitism was Mr. Davidsons' key word. This is the paramount problem in Crestdale today. The Nobility, elite scholars, the Ivy League, each of these point to elitism. Many of the residents of towns such as Crestdale use these to overcompensate for the position they were in until recently. They have become carbon copies of upper-middle and upper class white suburban communities. Like all carbon copies, they are more pronounced, and their mistakes are more sharply outlined. One hears that Crestdale is the ideal place to live, however. Rarely do outsiders hear of the sever emotional upsets that many of the students who have not been able to "make it" into the higher academic ratings (avant-garde, honor students, scholars and elite scholars) suffer from due to the ridicule they are subjected to by their parents and the school authorities. Rarely are outsiders aware of the void where youthful exuberance was once found. This is without a doubt depressing. I would like very much to be able to say that I enjoy teaching in one of the nations' highest rate high schools, but I can't. Someone once said that you don't see children in Harlem. What you see is a lot of little people disguised as children. The same is true in Crestdale, but of course at the opposite extreme. I once asked a ten year old boy who lives in Crestdale what he wanted to get our of life. His reply was: Straight A's and extracurricular activities in high school, a perfect average in college and acceptable marks in graduate school so I can live in a big house like the one I live in now. A ten year old boy!

"Elitism was Mr. Davidson's key word. That is the paramount problem in Crestdale today."

The brightest students are usually the ones who rebel against a system. This has not been true in the case of Crestdale and other communities like it because whenever a student says to one of his parents, "It's a lot of garbage," the reply very often is:

1) That's the only way you'll be able to make it in the world. Only the best equipped blacks are not expendable.

2) Your ancestors toiled for centuries in this country without compensation. Now that we've reached the point where we can control our own destinies you've decided that it's not worth it?

3) What's better? A low paying, rarely rewarding 9-5 job or being an attorney, professor, doctor, etc.)

I am still teaching at Crestdale High School because I know that there are alternatives, and it is my responsibility to inform students who are not aware of them what they are. One of the most important alternatives is a seldom heard of town located sixty miles northwest of Philadelphia known as Renaissance. The name is appropriate because the town does symbolize rebirth. It symbolizes the rebirth of the communal spirit that middle class blacks had with lower class blacks during the civil rights campaigns and Black pride movement during the 1960's and 70's. This new camaraderie is shown in many ways. A couple of which are:

1) There is no income restriction on residents. Instead of only professionals and executives, there is a sizeable number of blue-collar workers (primarily steel workers) and lower white collar workers (office assistants in Philadelphia and the like). When Renaissance's first zoning meeting was held (attended by the majority of the first couple of hundred residents, who were primarily upper-middle class), it was decided that, if need be, housing for lower income blacks and a few whites would be subsidized. Due to the availability of low cost pre-fabricated housing on a large scale, the need for subsidization was eliminated. It is interesting to note that in Renaissance, one cannot ascertain a family's income by merely looking at the home it lives in. The low cost homes look as impressive as the higher cost ranches, colonials and condominiums. The low cost homes can be found in all sections of the town, thus the possibility of stratification by community is lessened considerably.

2) The schools also de-emphasize differences. They do this by encouraging excellence in whatever the student likes the most. I a student loves creative writing, he is allowed to take several courses involving writing techniques and is required to have only a basic knowledge of other academic areas. In other words, a student may major in whatever he is especially interested in. The old claim that junior and senior high school students don't know what they like has been left behind. Of course, prior to the eighth grade students are able to sample many possible areas to determine their interests. Ranking of students has also been disregarded in these schools.

"The brightest students are usually the ones who rebel against a system. This has not been true in the case of Crestdale..."

To me, schools such as these and towns such as Renaissance are the true frontrunners in comparison to others across the country. Perhaps my true reasons for staying in Crestdale is that I hope that someday, my students will be among those who come back and make it the way it should be. Then I will no longer be envious of Renaissance. Crestdale will truly be number one.

Where Are The Students?

I'd like to deal with a few of the issues raised in the editorial in the last issue of DRUM magazine, since I was unable to submit this article in time for the forthcoming issue.

First of all, did the editor, in writing the article, recall the many days of work, the periods of fatigue and frustration and the hours spent, alone, organizing and preparing? Quiet as it's kept, the Black Studies Department on campus has experienced similar occasions. Several times. Most of the time, in fact. NOT because students haven't been persuaded and coaxed to contribute to their Department, and NOT because they are pushed aside when they flock into the office, intent on participating in the Department's activities. Rather, as appears to be the case within most Black organizations on campus, DRUM included, student participation is, when not scarce or temporary, absent. The "student entity" of the Department is, undoubtedly, where the "student entity" of the DRUM is--just "O.ut D. 'ere."

And since there is such a lack of student participation, perpetuated by the lack of communication within the community, (and THAT'S what should be questioned...) the entire Aptheker "battle" to appoint Herbert Aptheker, a white historian, was more than just a battle to add an additional member to the faculty in the Department; and the color of this particular prospective professor was not what should have been questioned. Rather--does the Department have the power, authority, and autonomy to choose and hire its own faculty members, based on their qualities as professors and teachers, or should it permit certain political forces within the administrative body to automatically reject him, basing their decision solev on the man's "political affiliations"?....not to mention the fact that Herbert Aptheker happens to be the most informed and educated man on slavery and slave revolts in the country. His course would have been entitled "Slavery in the United States." He was also a close friend of Dr. W.E.B. Dubois, and maintains a collection of several of Dubois/ important letters and documents, left to him upon Dubois' death. He would have taught a course on the "Life and Writings of W.E.B. Dubois.

The English Paper

By Richard Hardie

A seventeen-year-old black freshman turned in a paper to a ten-year-older Doctor in the English Department on Paradise Lost and got himself an eff. First of all he had handed the shit in late, which would otherwise have gotten him up to a dee minus, but there were lots of other mistakes. It wasn't bad enough that right off he knew that Demogorgon was Harlem, but he kept mixin up Chaos with the Supreme Court, that "....umpire sits./And by decision more embroils the fray/By which he reigns."

But that wasn't half bad--he had entitled the paper, The Bad Ballad of the Black Puritan, and, moreover, he had superimposed Cleaver's shit, the four horses of the Mitosis, upon the candy (sic) mythology of Milton. He had alloyed the Supermasculine with Satan and come up with a hero of sorts, and had put together Sin and the Ultrafeminine (You remember Milton's character Sin?--"About her middle round/A cry of Hell-hounds never-ceasing barked/.../A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,/If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,/And kennel there; yet there still barked and howled/Within unseen."), both combining into a grand strumpet"...who loved her babies black, loved her babies white, loved her babies stillborn."

Well, anyway I got this essay from the teacher who thought I might be more eligible to inform the student of his low grade. We regret to inform you that in a skirmish closely following the Puritan Revolution, your paper died." The teacher appended the following note to me:

Dear Black Teaching Assistant,

I know we have ground you well in classical writing and mythology and in the rich precedence of English letters and literature. You have learned well to recite the formial excitement of the Spenserian Sonnet, the French Ballade, the Alexandrine, and you have employed in your writing under this department the glorious measures-monometer iambic, trimeter trochaic, dimeteriambic and anapestic, trimeter anapestic, with iambic variation, dimeter dactylic, tetrameter iambic, trimeter iambic, tetrameter trochaic, tetrameter anapestic, pentameter iambic, pentameter anapestic, hexameter iambic, hexameter anapestic with iambic variation, hexameter dactylic, heptameter iambic with anapestic variation, heptameter anapestic with iambic variation, octometer trochaic, not to mention the figures of grammar, rhetoric and prosody; accidence, ad captandum, amphibology, anacoluthon, anapaest and anaphora, anastrophe, antepenult, and antistrophe, aphaeresis, anacope and apodosis...(etc., which I discovered she copied right out of Fowler right down to zees, and here discontinue).

Is it not then low grade impertinence that our students ignore the immortal forefathers of Paradise Lost, Virgil and Homer, Dante and the books of the bible Genesis and Revelation, and instead substitute their black contemporaries. Can one chapter of Leroi Jones condense the literary wealth of the past, one poem of Sonia Sanchez? Can anyone understand black expression without a deep foundation in English Literature?

Please explain to the student that he, like you, must take the long road to arrive at a good education; that he dare not write about Milton until he knows what Milton means, has checked the places and names that people his epic. Demogorgon, for instance, is not a place at all, but a character of the nether world with power over god and men--what can he mean by Harlem?

I hope this act of liason does not put you in a bind, but think of me, I have to grade his next paper which is to be on Alexander Pope's The Rape of the Lock:

Sincerely,

I am on my way to bang on the student's dorm door and I'll tell you about it next week

The thing is--are we, as Black students, mature enough and sure enough of our own identities to accept Aptheker on the basis of his vast knowledge and his ability to teach us new, important, and relevent concepts rather than on his physical appearance or ethical background?

The intentions and goals of the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies were all very clearly stated in the original proposal of February 1, 1970 and should have been questioned and debated THEN, before the development of the Department. As it turned out, the Department has followed that proposal as it was accepted by all. The Department is cultural and political and addresses itself to the desperate need of the Black Nation for aware Black people, rather than for scientists. As was stated, student apathy is a major "disease" within this community, and Black education a possible cure. At this particular stage, science won't even enlist the interest of the majority of Black students here, or many of those to be recruited in the near future. But, for those interested in studying science, the University of Massachusetts offers a wide variety of courses in the Science Department, and if one is seriously preparing to work within the Black Nation as a scientist, he will then view these science courses through a Black perspective. That will have to suffice until the Department is sufficiently supplied with political and cultural positions. Being allowed only a small number of new faculty positions to be filled, time is of essence, and before the Department wanders off to another field, the current one must be adequately sown, and not left, half-assed, for the unfit consumption of birds.

Then, there's the problem of "political barbarism," the said "primary force that is keeping thinking Brothers and Sisters from establishing a real Black student front on campus," proposed to be cured by political experiences. The first problem, as I see it, is a lack of "thinking" Brothers and Sisters having a DESIRE to establish a Black front, or even engage IN any meaningful (or otherwise) political activity. It appears that we have here some students who may be labeled as "thinking," and that's all, i.e., 'big thoughts, little or no action. I must, at this point, admit that I am somewhat biased, maybe narrow-minded, on this topic, because I base nearly my entire opinion on the lack of student interest in the proposed Mississippi project--an undeniably "political experience" which could begin to solve the problem of "political barbarism," if that is, in fact, the problem, and if political experience is, in fact, the solution.

For those who haven't heard, the Mississippi Project originally proposed to send fifty Black students from the five-college area to Mississippi for two months of the summer to implement the voter's registration drive there, in order that all elected officials in some nineteen counties be Black. For "thinking" Black students, this would be an ideal means of educating oneself more than politically. Culturally, Mississippi probably has more to offer than any other state in the country. Politically AND culturally, this project provides the opportunity to really check out Blackness, in all its "splendor." Or haven't our "thinking" Brothers and Sisters "thought" of it in that way? Granted, many of us must find employment for the summer, so as to keep up payments on our El Dorados, (or reasonable facsimiles) but THINKING Brothers and Sisters will choose Mississippi as a priority, understanding that progress in the South is also progress in the North, and that the election of Black officials in the state of Mississippi will take us a whole lot further than any "automobile" on the market. If summer-school is the hang-up, don't go. You'll learn more in Mississippi, and chances are, you'll have the opportunity to receive as many academic credits.

Then, of course, next semester, Brother Mel Smith will be offering a course dealing directly with the Black community of Springfield. It will involve the Department and its students with the cultural, social, and political problems of Springfield. This course will transcend all that "Black vanity, paranoia, and distrust," (quote, unquote) and deal with the real, more materialistic, less emotional issues of a community. I'm eager to see how many "thinkers" enroll in the course. There will be a meeting to discuss this project on May 15th at Mills House. The exact time of this meeting will be announced shortly. Come and see just what you can accomplish for yourselves and for Springfield.

So. To sum-up--The community here cannot/shouldnot be labeled and categorized as "thinkers" and "non-thinkers." Hopefully, we (will) ALL think. What is necessary is a rechanneling of thoughts, a re-definition of priorities, and a re-evaluation of commitment.

Especially, re-consider going to Mississippi for those two months, and let the Black Studies Department know of your decision.

Dizzie Gillespie Tonight

Dizzy Gillespie and his Quintet wind up their two-day visit to the University with two events today, Friday, April 30th. At 2:00 p.m., Mr. Gillespie and the group will hold an informal jazz workshop in Bowker Auditorium. This session is open without charge to those holding tickets to the evening concert.

This final popular music residency sponsored by the Fine Arts Council will conclude with a concert by The Dizzy Gillespie Quintet at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Some reserved tickets are still available for tonight's concert at the Council office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker at 7:00 p.m. Telephone to both offices is 50202.

Tiger, Tiger, Burning Bright

The University of Massachusetts Theatre will conclude its 1970-1971 season with Don Petersen's Does A Tiger Wear A Necktie? which will be presented May 5 - May 8 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

This contemporary drama confronts life in a drug rehabilitation center. The addicts are urban youth who believe that like the tigers "we was chucked on raw meat and like it." And like the tigers they wait with claws tensed for acts of violence, yet these very same claws are capable of being retracted with a warm response to affection.

In the midst of them - in this "cage for young junkies" - is their English teacher, Mr. Winters. His attempt to understand them centers around the question: Can you rehabilitate and civilize these young addicts - can you put a necktie on a tiger? The beat is now, as hopelessness and hope mingle when the kids try to realistically consider living "out there."

Under the sponsorship of the Amherst Human Relations Council, the cast spent a live-in weekend at the Clinton Youth Center in New York's West Side in an attempt to acquaint themselves with the style of life in a large inner-city setting; trying to feel what it is like to be caged in the tenements and to feel the "threatening concrete."

Under the direction of Dr. Jim Young, the production is attempting to capture the reality of a segment of life. Setting is by Jeff Fiala; costumes by Sandy Rispler; lighting by Jim Dooley; and technical direction by Nicholas Scott.

Tickets for Does A Tiger Wear A Necktie? can be purchased at the box office or by calling the box office, 545-2579. Admission is $1.75.

Landry, Morin Lead Cast for Morning Clinic

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

At 10 a.m. tomorrow, the pro clinic at Gladchuck Field behind Alumni Stadium will kick off the Bernie Dallas Day proceedings.

As hopefully you know by now, Bernie Dallas Day is a memorial to a former UMass athlete and scholar who was killed some three years ago in an auto accident.

But more than that, however, the proceeds from the day will enable the University to retain the memory of students like Dallas in the form of a memorial mall to be constructed near Alumni Stadium and also in the form of an annual scholarship in Dallas' name to be given to a student showing superior all-around qualities.

The pro clinic will be conducted by Greg Landry of the Detroit Lions; Milt Morin of the Cleveland Browns; Ed Toner of the New England Patriots; and Phil Vandersea of the Green Bay Packers--all former Redman grid greats. Also present will be Sam TRutigliano, offensive coordinator of the Patriots, John Huard of the New Orleans Saints, and pro football aspirants Bubba Pena, Nick McGarry, and Pierre Marchando.

Landry was the first draft choice of the Lions in 1968. He led the Detroit club to the divisional playoffs last year, completing 61% of his passes along the way. He will speak on ball-handling techniques, footwork, and the throwing action of the drop-back pass.

Morin, also a first draft choice, was picked by the Browns in 1966. He was named all-pro in 1968 and twice has led the NFL tight ends in receiving. His talk will concern tight end receiving and pass routes and blocking from the tight end position.

Toner has been with the Patriots for four years as a defensive end and tackle and has been a valuable swing man for the Pats. He will speak on the defensive line play of the pro 4-3 defense with emphasis on the pass rush.

Vandersea, a '66 graduate like Morin and Toner, was picked by the Packers and played in the first Super Bowl. He is captain of the Packer suicide squad. The play of the outside linebacker against the run and pass will be his topic.

Huard, recently traded to the Saints from the Denver Broncos, is a University of Maine graduate and a fine outside linebacker. His talk will be on the middle linebacker position and the 4-3 defense versus the run and pass.

Rutligiano will speak on wide receivers' pass routes and how to get open against various pass defenses.

The clinic will be attended by students from the University, high school football players, and interested adults.

After the clinic, an informal luncheon will be held in Hampshire Dining Commons. Then at 3 p.m. the big event of the day, the intrasquad game will be played.

Unlike past spring intrasquads which have pitted the Davids of the team against the Goliaths, this contest will pit two very evenly matched teams against each other. With the momentous draft already having decided which players will play for which team, everything is set for the opening kickoff.

Coach Jim Regan (Springfield Daily News) of the John Huleeki team and Al Whitmarsh (Worcester Telegram) of the Dennis Keating squad are the honorary head coaches.

Their pre-game statements have stirred an interest uncommon for any sporting event. One can sense the intense determination of the two men to bring home a win. Regan has already startled the sports world by revealing that he will use 11 men. Never before has a coach made known such an important part of his strategy before a game. Whitmarsh, more reticent, but also very cool and confident, has said only this--"Regan better be prepared for anything." Something just has to give when these two fierce rivals oppose each other on the field.

The end of the game will also mark the termination of spring football practice and the end of Bernie Dallas Day. Hopefully, the day will be an immense success. Many people have put many long hours into the preparation of this most worthwhile event. The pro stars who will be present have graciously consented to come here to pay tribute to a great man and for a few of them, a great teammate.

However, the ultimate success of the occasion depends primarily on support. Students are urged to attend the proceedings, first of all to rap with the football men who will be there, secondly to get a preview of what can be expected from the Redman football team next fall, and most important of all to support a great cause. In a school of this size it is very difficult to participate in any event that conveys a sense of belonging. This event gives every student a chance to enjoy, at least fleetingly, the feeling of being a part of the school. Sure, there is a small admission charge involved. But it's all going to causes that will help to make the University of Massachusetts a bit better for its students. It all boils down to a case of students supporting students; even the hardest cynic will find no fault with that. Besides, even the members of the press are paying their way in, so it must be something good.

The cost for the entire day for students is $1.00 and the luncheon will be an additional $1.60. It seems a small price to pay for so much in return.

Ruggers Face Heavy Action

The UMass ruggers rolled up points last Sunday to blank Schenectady RFC, 20-0. Four breakaway tries set up this score. The Redmen were paced by captain Frank Boksans who scored two of the tries, one on a spectacular 100 yard run leaving the Schenectady footballers lying in his wake.

The other two scores came from Jim Clapper and winger Paul Reynolds. All tries were successfully converted by playercoach Dale Toohey. Clapper's try came in the first half when Lovell's strong running brought the ball to within yards of a score.

From a five-yard scrum, Clapper at halfback faked to Toohey and dove the five yards for the score.

In the waning minutes of the game, UMass gained possession from a ruck at midfield, the ball passed down the line to Jack Long, then to Lovell and finally Reynolds who cut back against the flow of the Schenectady players and won the foot race to the goal.

UMass' second and third XV's were not as successful in their contests with Schenectady and Dartmouth respectively. Bill Wilson kept UMass ahead in the Schenectady game converting three kicks, but the aggressive Schenectady side matched kicks and scored a try in the last few minutes to eke out a 12-9 victory.

The UMass C team took an early lead against Dartmouth on Yoshioka Yasuo's sparling breakaway. Another try in the first half gave the Redmen an 8-0 lead, but Dartmouth picked away at the lead on a penalty kick and a great try by UMass' Chris Meehan (playing for Dartmouth) settling the score at 8-8.

UMass had penalty kicks awarded twice late in the second half. The Redmen chose to run the ball and failed to score. They pressed Dartmouth but a Green winger kicked the ball out of trouble and beat the UMass fullback to the ball for a score.

This weekend is another big rugby session. It begins today when UMass' first and second XX's meet Amherst for their annual bloodbath. The Lord Jeffs, perennial powers in college rugby, have managed to top UMass in all prior encounters, but UMass' new potent offense is expected to be too much for the Amherst tradition to withstand.

Tomorrow sees the Redmen travelling to Cambridge and the Harvard Business School's "Seven-A—Side Tourney."

And finally on Sunday, the UMass C team takes on the Northampton A's at Arcanum field to top off the solid rugby weekend.

Coed Nine Opens On Top

By NORAH SELIM
MDC Staff

The UMass Women's Varsity Softball team started off the season on the right foot with a 6-2 win over A.I.C. last week. The west game, against Bridgewater, was a left-footer all the way, UMass being aluminum-batted into submission 19-8. On Tuesday UMass apparently recovered from that pounding to do some of its own, and walked away with a 17-0 win over Westfield State College.

Pitching the first five innings against AIC, Carole Pierce allowed only two runs while her mates pecked away at the opposition pitching for three. In the sixth inning, Vicki Pagel came on to preserve the win with some excellent pitching in her two inning stint, striking out five. Also in the sixth, UMass iced the game with three runs.

Against Bridgewater two days later, Miss Pagel's pitching wasn't fooling many of the opposing batters, but their aluminum-bat hits certainly had the UM defense baffled, for nine errors. Bridgewater belted 19 hits for their 19 runs. When the game mercifully ended, the status for BS were 19 runs, 19 hits, 4 errors; for UMass 8, 5 and 9.

Tuesday Westfield State College came to test UMass' hospitality and were very unceremoniously received. The UMass infield was shuffled around in hopes of new life, and last year's reliefer Lynda Larsen started for the hostess team.

Miss Larsen's pitching had Westfield stymied. In the five innings she worker, she allowed only one hit. The UM defense had a fairly easy time of it as Westfield was popping up most of Larsen's serves. While Westfield's bats were silent, UMass' were booming, staking Miss Larsen to an insurmountable 14 run lead.

Freshman Nine Clipped in Tenth, 3-2

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

HANOVER, N.H.—Freshman Steve Newell rapped a towering solo homer in the top of the tenth but it didn't stand up as the Dartmouth JV's rallied for a pair in the bottom of the frame to edge visiting UMass, 3-2, in the cold confines of Hanover on Wednesday.

Newell's moon shot, an estimated 360 feet, gave starter and loser Steve Merrill a slim cushion going into the home half of the tenth. But three straight singles, including Devey's two run winner, sent the Little Redmen to their fifth loss of the season in eight starts.

Although tiring in the tenth, Merrill hurled a strong game as he scattered nine singles, walked none and fanned a pair, but came back with that extra something when needed to keep his mates in the game. However, the iron man of the staff gave way to the longevity of his stint as the winners produced three straight singles to win it.

The visitors, however, pounded out light hits, but lapsed in clutch situations having stranded twelve men on the base paths. Newell and Ken Brewer paced the UMass attack with a pair apiece, but the visitors just couldn't put the RBI column to good use.

The wayerings grabbed a quick 1-0 lead in the second on a double error on Bill Moan's grounder, a fielder's choice, and a wild pitch. The Indians, however, came back in their half to knot the count on a walk and a costly miscue on a single by McDunnough.

Then both Merrill and Dartmouth starter Stensgar hooked up a fierce pitcher's battle. Finally Merrill relinquished in the tenth as Hokas in relief of Stensgar picked up the win.

Although the opportunities to sew it up were all too few for the Redmen, the gates were open in the seventh. Winchester Wollard led off with a single, pilfered second and strolled to third on a passed ball. However, the yearling bats just couldn't push the run across.

Then in the tenth, after Newell crashed the go ahead circuit clout, Larry Herron walked. Rick Hanson then powered a tremendous shot up the alley in left center that centerfielder Klupchar made an incredible dive over a rope fence to save a near 380 foot two-run homer. After Moan singled, Hokas came on to put out the fire.

On Tuesday the JV's will continue search for that .500 serum as coach Ray Wilson's squad travels to Worcester Junior College for a 3 p.m. encounter.

In the sixth, Sharon Miles came on to relieve. On the first play, she fielded a bunt cleanly but overthrew first, which set the stage for some UMass heroics. With a runner on second, the next batter blooped a single into right. A long strike from right fielder Marcia Parks cut off a run at the plate aided by some fancy diving by catcher Jane Flagg.

As the next batter was thrown out at first, the WS baserunner tried to take third. Cheryl McCarthy fired the ball to Jane Marsolais who tagged out the runner as she slid over third into the coach's box. Miss Miles struck out the side in the seventh to end the game.

The next home game is against Keene State on Monday, May 3 at 3:30 behind the WOPE building.

O'Brien Praises Trackmen At Varsity M

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

At yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon lacrosse coach Dick Garber maintained that this year's team is the best ever at UMass. Garber and track coach Ken O'Brien were the featured speakers at the gathering held at the Newman Center.

Coach O'Brien speaking about this year's track team said that there is "no better balanced team in New England." He feels optimistic about the rest of the season and is looking forward to the Yankee Conference meet which will be held at UMass on May 15th.

Although UMass and Connecticut are the leading contenders for the title, Coach O'Brien thinks that Rhode Island will have a lot of influence over who will win the meet.

The meet will be held on the new all weather track which according to at least one team member has really helped the team. Jim Graves a junior, speaking at the luncheon yesterday said, "the new track has done wonders to the team." He noted that performances have been much improved and that there is "more spirit." Graves said that with the new facility the track team is a "team to be noticed and paid attention to."

Head lacrosse coach Dick Garber also spoke and upheld his earlier statement that this year's team is very likely the best ever at UMass.

Although they have lost two games this year, one a heartbreaker in double overtime at Harvard, the stickmen bounced back Tuesday with a big win over Adelphi.

Garber said yesterday "Before the season I said this was possibly the best team ever, and I still believe that." Garber and his troops hope to prove themselves May 12th at Brown. Brown has been rated number one in New England all season long which makes them a number one target for the Redmen stickers.

Redmen Showdown With Maine

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

It's now getting to the point in the UMass baseball season where the Redmen have to keep winning if they expect to have any chance of an extra long season. Right now they are still a game back of UConn in the Yankee Conference standings and it appears that these two teams could be headed for a collision course showdown at Storrs, May 19, in the last two games of the season to the decide the title.

But for the time being both have to keep winning and this weekend the Redmen have a stiff three game home set to take care of with the University of Maine. This afternoon at 3 both teams play a single game and tomorrow at 11 a.m. they begin a doubleheader at Earl E. Lorden Field.

It should be stressed that this is a BIG, BIG series for both teams. Maine is coming into this weekend with an impressive 9-2 record and in its only Yankee Conference action the Black Bears topped New Hampshire, 3-1, behind the strong pitching of Jim Chaplin, an All-District One second team choice last year and probably the starting pitcher in the first game tomorrow.

Last year Maine was second in the conference and 18-6 overall. This year the Black Bears are a team much like the Redmen in that they feature a lot of youth and solid front line pitching with a stingy defense to boot.

Maine coach, Jack Butterfield is one of the most respected baseball mentors not only in New England but in the entire country. In 1964 he took a Black Bear team that was destined for the conference cellar in pre-season to a third place in the College World Series. His teams are always well coached and prepared and in keeping with Maine baseball tradition the Redmen will have their hands full.

Chaplin will be joined on the mound for the three game set by Mike Jones and Paul Rutkiewicz, a pair of hard throwing sophomores.

Offensively the Black Bears have six hitters over the .300 mark, led by All-District One third baseman Bill West and second baseman Alan Livingston who leads the pack at .385.

For the redhot Redmen, who are now on a seven game tear without a setback coach Dick Bergquist plans to go with Tom White this afternoon, Tom King in the first game tomorrow and with the starter for the third game as yet undecided. The choice will come from Chip Baye, Jack Bernardo or John Olsen.

In the last three game series at home versus Vermont these hurlers shut the door on the Catamounts to the tune of no runs and ten hits in three games.

Vermont, like Maine, came into their series with an abundance of .30 hitters and it should be kept in mind that Maine has not faced pitching like they will see in White, King, and company as was the same case with UVM.

Tom McDermott will again be behind the plate. Dan Esposito, Jack Conroy, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau round out the infield with Charlie Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield with the third outfield position as yet undecided.

As stated, this is a big important series. Both teams have their eyes on the Conference title. Both are in hot pursuit of UConn and this should make for an interesting and exciting weekend of baseball here at UMass.

Stickmen Down F.D.

Although the footing was treacherous, it was UMass that was slippery as it eluded Farleigh Dickinson 10-7 yesterday. Playing under inclement weather the visitors applied constant pressure but UMass proved to be too much.

Paul Ritch opened the scoring with an assist from Charlie Hardy at 4:14 of the first period. F.D.U. came back and scored two successive goals to lead at the end of the first period 2-1. UMass exploded in the second period scoring three goals within 57 seconds. These goals came on a beautiful feed from Hardy to John Nagle for the first one, an assist from Hardy to Ritch for the second score, and the third came on a goal by Dana Stone off of a Hardy feed. For the next seven minutes UMass exercised ball control and finally scored at 13:27 on a Hardy assist to Stone in front of the goal.

Farleigh Dickinson made an effort to control the play by taking the first two face offs of the second half and scoring on one of them. This brought new life into the F.D. team but UMass quickly sequelched it on a Nagle score that seemed to go right through the F.D. goalie. F.D.U. scored again but UMass put two more on the board on goals by Nagle and Gannon off of Hardy assists as the third period ended with the score 8-4 UMass.

With the beginning of the final period F.D.U. started to threaten again by scoring two successive goals. A Kevin Bush goal seemed to put the game out of reach for F.D.U. but the visitors refused to give up and put another one in. As was fitting the man who started the scoring, Ritch, ended it on a beautiful score. He intercepted an F.D.U. pass and came in on a solo to beat the visitor's goalie.

Tomorrow at 2:00 p.m. the UMass lacrosse team will take on a vastly improved Connecticut team that is coached by Mr. Oseer, a former teammate of Coach Garber. The assistant coach, Joe Marrone, played his college ball here at UMass.

UConn is very aggressive and this could be their best team ever. The Huskies come into tomorrow's game sporting a 7-1 record. Their only loss was to Washington and Lee. They beat Wesleyan 7-5. At this point Connecticut is ranked number three in the Northeast Division behind Williams and UMass.

Outstanding players on the UConn team are their attackmen, goalie and defenseman.

Tracksters At Home

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team will be out to increase its win streak to five tomorrow afternoon in a home tri-meet against Springfield College and Central Connecticut. Field events will get underway at 1:00 with running events scheduled to go off at 2:00.

Last year in the same meet UMass finished second while Central Connecticut finished on top. This year the Redmen should finish on top with Springfield dropping Central Connecticut to third.

UMass is coming off its biggest meet of the year when it dumped UConn 85-69 last Tuesday. The Redmen continued to show signs of peaking 25 they broke 6 of a possible 18 meet records in their confrontation with UConn.

Tomorrow's meet may not offer the special appeal that characterized the first two home meets, but Springfield and Central Connecticut should offer the type of competition that will produce some interesting and exciting individual battles.

UMass, Springfield and Central Connecticut all have solid personnel in the throwing and jumping events. All three teams are considered to be evenly matched in these events, but the difference in the final results will lie in the running events when the Redmen have a clear edge and should dominate the scoring just as they did in the victory against UConn.

Springfield has two exceptional field men in John Healy and Mike Drayton who compete in the javelin and discus, respectively. Central Connecticut's mainstay in the throwing events is Tom Sieskie who carries the bulk of the CC scoring. Joining Sieskie in the throwing events will be Ed Trico who is the New England javelin champ. Eddie Arcaro is sure to provide a potent response for the Redmen off setting the performance of the oppostion. The jumping events will also provide some interesting match ups. Springfield's Mike Karafotias and Central Connecticut's Charlie Baldwin and Nick Ouchkoff represent three of the toughest jumpers the Redmen will face this season. All three men have recorded impressive results in the high jump, long jump and triple jump. UMass will need its best to compete with these men and will be represented by Ed Shaughnessy, Rip Dyer, Cal Carpenter, and Mark Robinson.

The UMass sprinters and hurdlers led by Ron Harris should dominate their events. Harris has been flying all season, and only last Tuesday against UConn won the 100, 220 and was a member of the winning 440 relay team.

The distance men led by Doug O'Connell are coming off their best performance of the season. The distance men took five out of a possible six places in the mile and two mile against UConn which included two first places by O'Connell, who is only a freshman.

Crewmen Race For Number One

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

Tomorrow the UMass Crew Club takes a short hop to Worcester to compete in the Rusty Callow Regatta to determine the number one crew of New England in the college and school club division. The meet, just one week before the Dad Vail, is a very important factor the Dad Vail committee uses when it chooses seatings for participating crews. UMass' performance will not only be an indication of its Vail future, but also the answer to whether or not the Redmen will be given a heat advantage of one of the Vail's top seats.

Trial heats get under way at 10 a.m. on the 2000 meter course on Lake Quinsigamond.

Redman varsity oarsmen line up against shells from Assumption, Marist, Amherst and Holy Cross, with the top three finishers qualifying for the finals scheduled for the afternoon, beginning at 2 p.m.

In the junior varsity trial run, the Redmen's opponents are Trinity, Wesleyan, Holy Cross, and Assumption. UMass has to beat two of these schools to qualify.

Finals for the freshman eights and varsity fours are both seven boat races, with no heats necessary.

The Little Redmen will probably get their hardest run from Trinity and Marist frosh in the eights.

Last year UMass captured the Callow Cup in the varsity race, but finished third in all-around competition behind first-place Trinity and second Marist. This year's Callow contenders, however, are the strongest that have ever taken part. Coach Mike Faherty has even gone as far as to predict; "all the races will be very close, especially in the varsity, where the finish could be decided by less than a second."

The closest thing to a home meet this year, it will be the best Rusty Callow Regatta, and most exciting for UMass fans who will travel to Worcester because of its importance to the Redmen.

Wayne Runs Abroad

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

International competition for the American athlete presents an opportunity that few can say that they have experienced. Ron Wayne, who over the past three and a half years has established himself as the greatest distance runner ever at UMass, gets his opportunity at international track when he competes at the Hapoel games in Israel this Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Wayne was invited by Israel to these games which take place every five years and has a participation equal to that of the Olympics. Israel pays the top athletes in the world to come to these games, but Wayne has financed the trip himself. He was invited to these games a couple of years ago but was unable to make the trip.

On Sunday he will run in the 1500 meter field which includes 1968 Olympic champion and conquerer of Jim Ryun, Kip Keino from Kenya and in any big track meet this is always the featured race.

Wayne, who won the New England cross country championship last fall, also indicated that he will run either 800 meters on Monday or the grueling 5000 meters on Tuesday.

After all that he has accomplished in a Redman uniform, Wayne calls this the "high point in his track career."

"This will be a total educational experience for me," he stated after Tuesday's UMass-UConn meet. "It's not everyday that you get an opportunity like this."

In looking back over his career he said, "I've met many people and raced in a lot of places around the country, but this will be the first time that I've run in international competition. In weighing everything, this surpasses all in my track career."

Also competing in these games will be assistant UMass track coach Gideon Ariel, the Israeli National Discus Champion.

Both track stars will be in Israel for about a week.

Golf

By ALAN WRIGHT
MDC Staff

This morning, at the early hour of 10:00 A.M. the UMass Golf Team heads for Pleasant Valley Country Club to do battle in the Yankee Conference Championships. They bring with them an 8-2 season record and a 3-1 standing in the league.

The Redmen linksters have experienced some difficulties this past week as they split two away tri-matches. On Tuesday, April 27, the golfers topped A.I.C. 5-2, but were edged by powerful UConn 4-3. Wednesday saw the unusual collegiate style of medal play take its effect as Yale had a combined team score total of 397, Massachusetts 399, and Williams 412. Most of the three team's players carded high scores that afternoon, ranging all the way up to 90. However, Ed Puzas was able to shoot a fine round of 75 while Don Langevin posted a 78 and Mike Minkos turned in an even 80.

The Great Opium War

By DAVID WILLIAMS
MDC Staff

Our hero felt somehow justified after he had had a chance to contemplate the weekend's activities. After all, it had been he who had warned the campus just a few weeks before of the impending influx of foreigners into the area. The Culture had not let him down and he savored his victory, turning it over and over in his mind until he was entirely satisfied that he had been right, and for so many reasons.

He had known he would be right and though it threw a pall on his own social plans for the occasion, he nonetheless persisted to forecast all kinds of disasters.

The big day arrived and he greeted it with a cup of instant coffee in Eric Benjamin's room. Eric was newly arrived on the corridor and clung to the same philosophies as our hero. The two sat in Benjamin's record-strewn room and discussed their respective ploys for the day. Benjamin seemed content to accompany our hero to the festivities, and actually did. Before the morning was out, however, he was to leave our hero for his radio buddies. Our hero last saw him climbing over a tangled pile of unwashed bodies on the way to Uncle Lennie, the guiding light of the local FM radio station and somewhat of a connoisseur of the absurd in his own right.

With Benjamin gone, our hero began to do what he had come to this thing to do. He carried a camera with a large lens and pointed it at indiscriminate areas of the evergrowing crowd of army-jacketed, sleeping-bag bearing teenagers who were pushing their way onto the grassy area set aside for this luau New Nation style. He watched through his camera, nodding his head whenever a sallow youth would thrust a bony finger upwards in defiance of the telescopic lens' probing and revealing eye. It was all coming true and he felt powerless before the crowd, the swelling, heaving, grunting refugees from polished high school corridors.

This day had been set aside for the Culture's most holy occasion, however, and our hero knew that the crowd would leave when it had gotten what it came for and would be quiet and orderly in the process, a very rare assurance during what the more vocal and perhaps older of these urchins would say were "troubled times."

But his peace of mind was disturbed at the thought of what was about to take place. The arrangements had been made, the crowds had gathered and the Ceremony was about to begin.

Our hero watched all of this through sympathetic, yet scornful eyes. He had seen it all happen before. For him, this gathering of the tribes had become nothing but a spectacle to watch and enjoy. But for the huddled masses in front of the loudspeakers, this was Orgasm. Well, perhaps not for these particular devotees of the Cult, but the overall picture was one of mass drinking, a typical preoccupation of the Cult neophyte, widespread smoking, and by nightfall, necking on the trampled grass around the pond.

Concerts Carried Off With Style

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Despite the odds, Poisson and Vierra carried it off. The two, this campus's latest duo of rock impresarios put together two fine concerts and managed to keep the weekend from coming apart despite the influx of high school freaks, cultural revolutionaries, hometown beeries, and anyone else who either borrowed their parent's car, took a Peter Pan, or hitched here for the free concerts.

The migration here happened much to Poisson and Vierra's dismay. They had taken great care in planning the concerts to keep them from becoming a mass gathering of the tribes from the valley and beyond. Publicity was kept at a minimum and groups were carefully considered/ by the two and their cronies in the past few months. It wasn't easy, everyone wanted their favorite groups as the two had to put up with early morning phone calls from Jerry Garcia fans and general hassles from all around before coordinating the entire event.

Nonviolent Resistance Planned By Mayday Tribe

WASHINGTON (AP)-Youth culture revolutionaries are wheeling out a new weapon in their drive to end the Indochina War-Ghandi with a clenched fist.

The celebrated Ghandi, whose use of nonviolent tactics helped win India's independence from Britain rule, is supplying the motif for the Mayday effort to shut down the U.S. government Monday and Tuesday.

His image is everywhere-on buttons, on posters, on flyers and even on the Mayday tactical manual designed to explain to would-be disrupters Mayday's special interpretation of nonviolent civil disobedience.

"Flash on Ghandi," reads the manual. "An organic food vegetarian, a stone Indian culture freak who met the English viceroy of India in a loincloth and organized civil disobedience campaigns which paralyzed entire sections of India.

"What comes to mind is thousands of us with bamboo flutes, tambourines, flowers and balloons moving out in the early light of morning to paralyze the traffic arteries of the American repressive government nerve center.

"Creativeness, joy and life against bureaucracy and grim death. That's nonviolent civil disobedience, that's Mayday."

The motif is not accidental. For over a year, revolutionaries who believe that the youth culture will provide the cutting edge for radical change, have been seeking tactics that will have dramatic appeal to the tree-wheeling and anti-authority "freak" population.

The revolutionaries, including Rennie Davis, 30, believe that the freaks have been totally disillusioned by the failure of past tactics, including mass marching and the politically ill-defined style of "Trashing" or random violence.

The theory is that if the tactics are right, the freaks will come pouring out of their communes and collectives, shedding their despair over ending the war.

But first, the theory goes, they must be convinced that the tactics are not imposed on them from the "top down," that they will not be used as "cannon fodder" in hopeless struggles against the police, and that within the limits of the over-all strategy, they'll be free to do their own thing.

Davis and his colleagues have attempted to ensure this by building an unorthodox design that dispenses with, among other things, the corps of marshals who have helped keep mass demonstrations nonviolent.

"We feel there is no way to have nonviolent civil disobedience if you use marshals in a topdown way," said Davis.

"If discipline is to be maintained, the people themselves must do it. They are making the decision to submit themselves to the ultimate risks that civil disobedience entails."

Davis is convinced that nonviolence will be accepted because nonviolence makes the most sense of any tactic available to the movement, at this time.

Room, Board Hike Proposals Made

Room and board hike recommendations to the Chancellor were delineated in a report issued by Vice Chancellors Randolph W. Bromery and Thomas B. Campion on April 29.

The fee changes, to become effective for the '71-'72 academic year, have not yet been approved by the Chancellor.

According to the recommendations, formulated by Bromery and Campion with the aid of consultations with student leaders, provisions would be made for either a ten meal per week or fifteen meal per week board plan. Under the ten meal plan, the two meals per day could be any two meals. Yearly cost of the plan would be $543, or a $13 (3%) increase over present rates. The cost for 15 meals per week would be $613, or a 16% increase. (Figures are quoted from 4/9/71 MDC article.)

Room fees will also be going up, according to Plan A, outlined in the abovementioned article. Plan A calls for a $50 increase in rent for all types of residences. Old state dorms, including Brett and Gorman but excluding Lewis and Thatcher, presently require a yearly fee of $500, which would increase rent to $550. Building Authority dorms, including Lewis and Thatcher., presently require a

Room fees will also be going up, according to Plan A, outlined in the abovementioned article. Plan A calls for a $50 increase in rent for all types of residences. Old state dorms, including Brett and Gorman but excluding Lewis and Thatcher, presently require a yearly fee of $500, which would increase rent to $550. Building Authority dorms, including Lewis and Thatcher, would be increased from the present fee of $560 to $610. Lastly, the sylvan suite-type dorms would be increased from the present $650 to $700.

Reasons for the Room and Board hikes were the increases in labor and maintenance costs, the projected increases in utilities costs, and the selling of bonds for the permanent financing of one dining commons and several residence halls. Also cited as reasons for the imminent increases were the rise in the cost of living and the approximate costs of maintaining and renovating older dorms on a two-dorm per year renovation plan, according to the 4/9/71 interview with Vice Chancellor Campion.

Drug Survey Being Taken

Fifteen hundred students selected at random will receive a questionaire in the mail this week, surveying the drinking and drug-taking behavior at UMass. Students selected will remain anonymous and are urged to respond because the validity of the report depends on the rate of response, according to a spokesman for the group.

The object of the survey is to find out accurate information about patterns and amount of drug use, and the circumstances surrounding use. Undergraduates in Prof. Peter Park's sociology seminar 391 are conducting the survey, which is one of the first student attempts on this campus to do anything to promote a realistic attitude about the issue.

"We hope to foster balanced attitudes toward student life styles and gain a better understanding on this important aspect of the college scene," one student in the class commented.

Vets To Vote, Discuss Strike

The UMass Veterans For Peace steering committee announced late last week an emergency meeting to be held at 7 p.m. tonight in Rm. 805-809 of the Campus Center. Co-chairman Bernie Lougee stated that the purpose of the meeting is to discuss the Vets role in the proposed May 5th student strike.

If the proposal is generally acceptable to the veterans plans will be made for a Veterans Workshop and other educational activities to be held on May 5th.

The committee also announced that nominations for new officers will be taken at tonight's meeting. It was stressed that both items on the agenda are extremely important to the group's continued anti-war activities and that all interested veterans are strongly urged to attend.

Placement Reports Summer Jobs

The Placement Office reports that on May 12, Smith, Batchelder and Rugg (CPA) will be holding interviews for accounting opportunities in Keene and Hanover, N.H. Appointment may be made in the Placement Office.

The office also reports the following summer job openings:

A manufacturing plant in Westfield needs a person for indoor and outdoor maintenance work. Can start on a part time basis in May and continue on a full time basis during the summer. This plant would prefer someone with a horticulture or turf management background. For an interview please inquire at the Placement Office now. Interviews will end April 30.

Wanted: a chef at a Maine resort. Room and board will be supplied, plus $850 per month.

A Hartford YMCA camp needs general counselors, a bus driver over 25 and dining hall stewards. Come to the Placement Office for more information.

Interviews are being held in Cambridge for construction workers in northern New Hampshire.

The camp in Albany, N.Y. still needs male and female counselors (water skiing, horsemanship, arts and crafts).

Grossman Stores want swimming pool salesman.

Summer Session Changes Approved

Fac. Sen. Votes CCEBS Support

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

The endorsement of the principle of faculty financial support for the CCEBS program and approval of administrative restructuring of the Summer Session were the principal actions taken by the Faculty Senate at their meeting yesterday afternoon.

The Senate also heard Chancellor Tippo announce the possibility of an increase in parking rates, raised questions concerning security on campus and in dorms, and endorsed a general policy recommendation for foreign students.

The financial support principle as endorsed recommends that faculty members pledge $1.00 or more per week through payroll deduction for one year beginning September 1971. The proceeds are to be awarded to the CCEBS program for the year 1971-72. It was noted during the course of the discussion that the pledges were entirely voluntary and that the Student Senate had already granted the CCEBS program money for next year.

Under the restructuring proposal passed by the Senate, Summer Session academic programming would be administered by the same academic units which are responsible for such programming during the rest of the year. This would mean that the academic dean of each school or division would make the decisions regarding summer programs rather than the Summer Session Commission that has done it in the past. It also recommends that all budget allocations and administrative previews be expanded so as to include the summer session. It was noted however that these moves were not intended as steps towards a trisemester plan or to requirements that faculty members teach two of the three semesters.

In making his announcement of possible parking rate increases, Chancellor Tippo noted that a study concerning increases was being made in view of rising costs for upkeep and maintenance. Proposed rates would be $24 per year for faculty and staff making over $10,000 with those below paying $16 and students $8.00 per year.

Questions were raised by many members of the Senate concerning reports of stealing and vandalism by non-students residing with students in residence halls. Vice Chancellor Bromery noted that while there was a problem steps were being taken to correct the situation. These included the filing of a request with the State legislature for an efficiency budget to provide for added personnel and that interviews had been completed for a new Director of Security and that announcement of an appointment would be forthcoming within the next two weeks. He noted that future security plans would attempt to implement students for security positions.

The foreign student policy recommendation endorsed by the Senate acknowledges that fact that knowledge has no single state or nationality and that through the admission of students on a world-wide basis the University is allowing itself to have the highest quality possible in its student body and that it allows for diversity in the student body. The policy also acknowledges the understanding and consideration which has been given to a proposal that is now under active consideration for the establishment of an International House.

Continuing Ed. Offers Expanded Opportunities

By MICHAEL McWILLIAMS
MDC Staff

The department of Continuing Education was established at the UMass Amherst campus in August of 1970. In the nine months since its formation the department has initiated a number of programs making the benefits of higher education available to anyone outside of the full time university.

Continuing education is intended for the non-student who otherwise would not be able to obtain instruction at the college level and for those who have already completed their education but would like to update their knowledge in a specific field.

The selection of courses and programs available is vast, due to the fact that they are drawn up and constructed in accordance with individual needs. Academic courses structured like the ones taught regularly in the university are available but for the most part the programs are custom made with a specific concentration in mind. These are usually the results of combined instruction by many departments.

One such program is the seminar in Nursing Home Management, recently offered through the schools of nursing, business and Public Health. Many of the courses contain no academic credit and serve only to revise knowledge in a field where technology has made important advances, since the completion of the individuals formal schooling.

Many current issues are of concern to the department. One, in particular is that of conservation which has prompted the establishment of a Conservation Education Center for the northeast. There are a number of possible programs which may be initiated in the future such as continuing education in Law and public affairs for Judges, Tax Assessors and Town Managers. According to Dr. Venman, Head of the department a "university without walls" for inmates of state prisons and other "shut ins" is in the planning. Extension courses have been set up through facilities such as the Womens Advisory Center which conducts workshops and seminars in related topics.

The Department of Continuing Education was set up by Dr. Venman who wrote the initial program and Dr. Howards, the special assistant to the chancellor as Coordinator of Public Affairs. Assisting Dr. Venman are Mr. Kevin Grennan, the program manager, Mr. William Harlow, the scheduling officer and Mr. Norm Vurco, Special Assistant. The major portion of the continuing education program is run through the faculities of the Campus Center.

Deaf Media Teaching At School of Ed.

Enjoy listening to a professor talk on...and on...and on? Probably you are bored to death. If the professor includes a few slides or transparencies, chances are you will be more interested. Now imagine being deaf and trying to lipread a teacher talking on and on. It's rough! Slides, transparencies, movies and video tapes all help make lessons more interesting and more understandable for deaf students.

The School of Education offers the only undergraduate-graduate program in the United States to prepare media specialists to work in schools for the deaf. This unique Media Specialists Program for the Deaf begins at the Junior year level. After completing the three-year program, students receive Master's Degrees in Education.

Schools for deaf children have a special need for media. Because the children cannot use their hearing effectively, visual presentations are vitally important. Media specialists in these schools produce or obtain movies, video tapes, slides, transparencies and filmstrips to teach a specific lesson. Although media specialists do not teach, they work closely with students, teachers and administrative staff.

A three year course of study has been developed, giving a wide exposure to courses in media and in deafness. Courses in general education and psychology are also included.

The second semester of the graduate year is spent entirely at a school for the deaf. Under the direction of a competent media specialist, the student would assume all the duties of a media specialist, including producing materials, budgeting, ordering and cataloging. He would also student teach for a period of three weeks.

In addition to formal coursework, students are exposed to a wide variety of experiences with the deaf. Tutoring deaf children, learning and teaching sign language and attending both local and national conventions are all included.

The Media Specialists Program for the Deaf is federally funded through the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, U.S.O.E. in cooperation with the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts. Stipends are available for qualified candidates.

Students entering the program must be committed to improving the education of hearing impaired students through media.

Fifteen students will be selected to join the program next Fall. Any sophomores interested in learning more about the specialized program should contact Miss Anita Nourse, Room 10, Thompson Hall. Telephone 545-2455.

Mr. Stanley Patrie, a deaf staff member, instructs Barrie Schwartz in the operation of a movie projector, making the sign for "picture" with his hands.

CUSP Evening Tomorrow Night

CUSP, the Council of Undergraduate Students of Psychology, is sponsoring an evening where students can meet with psychology faculty to discuss problems within the department, to be held tomorrow night from 8 to 11 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The evening is planned to give students an informal opportunity to talk with the professors in a less inhibited atmosphere. At least nine professors from the department will be at the meeting.

Student Rewards Tonight At 8

The Scrolls, Maroon Keys, and Senior Committee will present rewards for student service and honorary organizations for the first time at University at Activities Night tonight at 8 p.m. at the Campus Center Auditorium.

The evening will be attended by, among others, Chancellor Tippo, Dean of Students Field, and Pat Beharry, Vice-President of the Student Senate who will serve as master of ceremonies.

In The Nation And The World

Wash. Demonstrators Evicted From Park

WASHINGTON (AP)—A surprise, early Sunday morning police move closed the headquarters camp of militant war demonstrators. But their leaders said the coup would not prevent their planned disruption of governmental activity on Monday through massive disruption of traffic.

The real impact of the police maneuver, obviously intended to head off massive confrontations and wholesale arrests in the streets on Monday morning, remained unmeasured as the day wore on. But it obviously created confusion among the demonstrators. And for several hours at least it had produced no violence.

The order revoking the permit for use of the Potomac Park as a campsite was served about 6 a.m. EDT while most of the thousands of young, predommantly white protesters still were asleep.

Police told leaders, the demonstrators would be given a reasonable time to disperse without arrests being made. They said those who refused to leave would be jailed.

The move sent the sleepy demonstrators straggling in small groups out into city streets manned by thousands of blue-uniformed policemen.

Some apparently were heeding leaders' appeals to remain in the city for the Monday action. Hundreds of others headed for highways and the hitch-hike route back home.

It was not clear how many were in the park when the eviction order came. Police estimated that at the height of an all-day rock music concert there Saturday there were perhaps 45,000 persons in the area.

But clearly many of these were merely curious or seeking a good time on a beautiful spring day and did not spend the night with the more dedicated demonstrators.

Shortly after noon, the police swept the campsite and arrested 61 persons who refused to leave. The arrests were made peacefully.

They were charged with unlawful entry which carries a potential $300 fine.

Twenty-five to thirty more demonstrators were arrested in front of the Lincoln Memorial near the reflecting pool. The same charge was made against them.

In addition to revoking the Potomac permit, Police Chief Jerry V. Wilson told the demonstrators they would not be allowed to set up camps at other parks or public areas in the city.

Massive police presence appeared to be keeping the protesters moving as they walked in groups towards havens on the campuses of Georgetown and George Washington universities or headed out of town en route home.

Up to midday there had been no reports of violence.

After the revokation order was served, a spokesman told the demonstrators:

"We got some bad news this morning. We've just been told the permits have been revoked. The police don't want to hassle us. Let's move out.

"If you're here against the war it doesn't make any difference, it doesn't make any difference where you go as long as we stay in Washington, stay together and do our thing."

In a news conference Saturday President Nixon said in reference to the Monday plans "We will arrest those who break the law."

The eviction proceeded as police stood by buses brought in a transport law violators as necessary. Federal troops flown into Washington as a backup force for Monday's threatened traffic disruption were not in evidence.

By mid-morning 3 Sunday about 4,000 Marines and regular Army troops had arrived in the Washington area.

Another 6,000, including about 4,000 paratroopers of the Army's 82nd Airborne Division at Ft. Bragg, N.C., and about 2,000 Marines from Camp Lejoune, N.C., were due in on military transport planes during the day, landing at Andrews Air Force Base, Md.

Sec. of State Rogers Makes Mid-East Tour

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers arrived there on a mission Saturday with a message from President Nixon expressing U.S. willingness "to play any reasonable and useful role toward achieving a durable peace."

Flying into this desert kingdome capital from Ankara, Rogers spoke of the peace efforts that will take him to Jordan, then to Lebanon, Egypt and Israel.

Rogers said at the airport on his arrival the major aim of his visit is to advance the cause of peace and stability in the area "but no one can underestimate the obstacles that lie ahead."

Rogers told Arab dignitaries, dressed in their traditional flowing robes, that he is delivering a personal letter of best wishes from Nixon to King Faisal.

"The people of the Middle East must find ways to achieve peace, a real and just peace and a durable peace," he said, "and the United States is willing to play any reasonable and useful role in helping to achieve those worth objectives."

"That is the message that President Nixon has asked me to convey on the Middle East."

The presidential jetliner set down after its 1,600 mile flight from Turkey at an airport guarded by steel-helmeted military police with machine guns mounted on jeeps.

Rogers and his party stepped into royal hospitality which was cordial and warm as was the 93 degrees of heat.

Papers barely mentioned Rogers visit, however, and Rogers drove to the state palace virtually unnoticed.

The secretary of state is stopping here slightly less than 24 hours, missing private talks with ceremonial functions in his honor by his lavishly hospitable royal host, Faisal.

Ways to narrow Israel-Egyptian differences over re-opening the Suez Canal are a main item in Rogers' discussions with Mideast leaders and the news out of Egypt indicated the road ahead is a rocky one.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt in a May Day speech declared he had no interest in Israel's plan but I am interested in the U.S. stand and I shall press Mr. Rogers to define it in frank, clear cut terms."

Sadat emphasized that Egyptian forces must cross the Suez Canal to maintain sovereignty when Israel troops make a partial withdrawal.

Israel insists that the Egyptians must remain on the west bank with clearning operations to proceed in the waterway. In Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Abba Eban said Washington had not rejected Israel's plan but there were differences in views.

Saudi Arabia, proud of its role in the Arab and Moslem worlds as protector of the holy places and tenets of Islam, is particularly interested in the status of East Jerusalem, which Israel took in the 1967 war. East Jerusalem is one of the Moslem holy places.

As an example of Rogers' difficulties on this trip, while he was preparing for the three-hour flight from Ankara to Riyadh, word came of an "overwhelming resolve" by the Jerusalem municipality that the Holy City should remain under Israel sovereignty, "forever and ever."

The Saudi Arabian stop was of importance to Rogers not only because of the influence which Faisal wields in parts of the Arab world. Washington has a big stake in friendly relations with this desert kingdom.

Peace Corps, VISTA Merger Opposed

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon's plan to merge the Peace Corps, VISTA, and a number of other volunteer groups into a single agency is running into opposition from key Senate Democrats.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr., D—N.J., said Saturday he fears the plan would mark the end of VISTA and would not promote economy and efficiency as the President claims.

Williams is chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee which has jurisdiction over several of the programs Nixon included in his reorganization plan.

Members of this committee have often said they regard VISTA—Volunteers in Service to America-as one of the most imaginative and successful of the antipoverty programs. Williams said he is proud that he helped create VISTA.

The New Jersey Senator has introduced a resolution of disapproval of the plan on which a Government Operations subcommittee will open hearings Wednesday. Similar hearings are under way in the House. The plan goes into effect automatically June 5 unless vetoed by a majority vote in one branch of Congress.

Balloon New Cure For Heart Victims

BOSTON (AP) Surgeons at Massachusetts General Hospital, using a 10-inch-long balloon, have developed a new way to combat one of the most severe forms of heart attack, the hospital reported Sunday. Three of nine persons treated in the new way have survived cardiogenic shock, termed by the hospital as an "essentially 100 per cent fatal condition."

Three of nine is a highly gratifying percentage for patients who almost certainly would have died without this new combination of procedures," said Dr. W. Gerald Austen, the hospital's chief of surgery.

The procedure was described in an issue of the hospital's publication, "MGH News."

The first patient to survive the procedure is a 50-year-old Massachusetts lawyer. He has survived almost a year and has returned to his practice, the hospital stated.

The first portion of the procedure involves inserting a balloon into the aorta, the main artery from the heart. The balloon inflates and deflates with the heart to help in the pumping, and to lower resistance in the artery. It is deflated by the pressure of the blood being pumped into the artery then expands as the heart contracts.

The second portion of the procedure involves surgery to replace a blocked portion of arteries carrying blood to the heart. In one of the cases reported, surgeons took a vein from the patient's leg to bypass the blocked artery.

The hospital said the procedure is more effective than a heart transplant for some patients.

"We're still learning," said Dr. Charles A. Sanders, director of the hospital's myocardial infarction research unit. "We're trying to separate the type of patient who can be benefited by this surgery from the patient with no chance of survival short of transplantation."

Taiwan Warns Tourists China Visas Invalid

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—The Nationalist Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman, Wei Yu-sun said yesterday he had no information on the invalidation of Formosan visas issued to Americans if they travel to Mainland China.

"I have no information on this yet," Wei said, when asked whether the move would become government policy.

He said he would investigate and, in a statement Saturday by the Nationalist Embassy in Tokyo, that beginning in April all Formosa visas issued to Americans bore a red-ink warning saying: "Attention: any travel into or through the Chinese mainland on the part of the bearer will invalidate this visa."

American travelers arriving Saturday and Sunday in Formosa from Tokyo confirmed their visas bore the stamp if they had been issued in April.

Skepicism Greets Big Three Reform

DETROIT (AP)—Under the growing pressure of consumerism, "Chrysler Corp. cares" and "Ford listens better" have become the new by-words of the auto industry.

To repair an image, tarnished by public complaints about safety, pollution, product quality and service, the Big Three automakers have in recent months started programs to speed up the handling of consumer complaints. Their efforts have won guarded praise mixed with cynicism from some of the industry's harshest critics.

At Chrysler, whose program is supported by extensive advertising, Vice President Byron J. Nichols has been serving since March 3 as an ombudsman for all complaints.

Ford, through its five-month-old "We Listen Better" campaign, has been encouraging customers to write to corporate headquarters with complaints or suggestions about their cars.

At the same time, Ford has established a new customer service division, to improve its service operation.

GM's experimental program allows consumers in the Chicago area to call Detroit toll-free with their complaints. The program, started April 1, is to run through June.

Operation of all the programs is similar. The car owner's complaints are relayed to the regional service office nearest the customer. A regional representative then gets together with the customer and his dealer in an effort to solve the problem.

Lowell Dodge, a director of the private Center for Auto Safety in Washington, and co-author, with Ralph Nader, of the book "What To Do With Your Bad Car," said that while he has some strong reservations he thinks the programs have potential.

"We're frankly encouraging an honest go-round" with the programs, Dodge said. He also expressed some cynicism, saying, "Up to this point, they appear to be little more than public-relations window-dressings.

"They should come here and see what we're doing," Nichols said of critics.

"Listen better is a philosophy for doing business," said John Morrissey, vice president and director of advertising for Ford Marketing Corp. and director of its complaint program. "It is a long-term re-organization of the business."

At Chrysler, the "Man in Detroit" program has been receiving about 400 letters and 100 telephone calls a day, about what was expected. Ford refuses to disclose the volume of letters, except to say that it has received "thousands" since inception of the program.

Only at GM has the volume of complaints been less than expected, with phone calls now running at about 100 a day, down from 300 the first day.

Life in Saigon

You Won't Get Mugged But You May Get Shot

SAIGON (AP)—"From a standpoint of personal safety," says the head of the U.S. Military Police in Saigon, "this is a very safe city.

"Some cities in the United States," adds Col. George S. Black, "have more acts of terrorism than Saigon."

The record bears him out.

Viet Cong terrorism has almost vanished in this capital of 3 million people. Only one terrorist bombing or grenade blast has been recorded in the past five months and only one rocket attack has hit the city in the same period.

There appears no easing, however, in the usual big city crime and Col. Black, U.S. provost marshal in Saigon, says there's an upsurge in armed robberies.

"This involves a fairly small group of people," Black said. "They are mostly young hoodlums, although we had one case recently of an American soldier who was AWOL working with the Vietnamese."

On terrorism, Black agrees with the recent assessment by Sir Robert Thompson, the British counter-insurgency expert who is an adviser to President Nixon on Vietnam.

Thompson said last month on his return to England after his 25th visit to Vietnam: "Saigon is safer at night than any American city, and many other cities around the world. Other than the usual snatch merchants, who have nothing to fear now in Saigon. You aren't going to get mugged."

Kent State Memorials Quiet

KENT, Ohio (AP)—A second day of memorial activities was held yesterday for four Kent State University students killed in a confrontation with National Guardsmen during an anti-war demonstration last year.

The activities so far, a play, a dance recital and two rock concerts, have been plagued by drizzling rain and poor attendance.

The campus was reported generally quiet.

University officials said most of the school's anti-war leaders were in Washington, D.C., where war protest demonstrations are under way.

About 200 Kent State students left here in trucks and private cars Friday but promised to return by Tuesday, the first anniversary of the student deaths.

At both rock concerts, there were large numbers of campus police on hand. Neither concert drew more than a few hundred students.

University-sponsored activities end Tuesday with a memorial on the commons, where four students were killed and nine others wounded in a volley of National Guard gunfire.

Classics Courses Offered In Fall

The Department of French, Italian and Classics announces the appointment of Robert Dyer as a full professor of Classics. Professor Dyer has taught at the University of Indiana and Oakland University. His interests include cultural dynamics, a new humanistic approach to the study of ancient and modern civilizations, rhetoric, linguistics, and computer applications to humanistic studies. He will teach Classics 100, Greek Civilization and Literature, which this fall will incorporate special seminar-type discussion sessions on topics chosen by the students in the course. He will also teach Classical Rhetorical Theory.

Vincent Cleary from Ohio State University will also join the Classics Department as an Associate Professor. With a special interest in new ways of teaching the Latin language and Latin literature, Professor Cleary will teach Intermediate Latin, Latin Didactic Epic, and a teacher training course.

Elementary and Intermediate Latin courses will again be offered on an intensive basis allowing students to complete the foreign language requirement in two semesters. The courses meet for 3 regular class meetings per week accompanied by 2 small group practice sessions. Optional laboratory periods have been scheduled and are designed as convenient opportunities for homework study and practice. Attendance is not required at these laboratory periods, and there is no lab fee. These elementary and intermediate courses receive 4 credits apiece, and the student moves directly from 110 to 140.

A similar arrangement is in effect for Elementary Greek. The class meets 5 times a week for 4 credits, and optional laboratory sessions have been scheduled for homework and additional opportunities to hear and use the language.

On an experimental basis the following option will be available to students in Latin. Latin 110 or 140 can be taken on an independent basis. Class attendance would not be expected. The text being used is ideally suited for this purpose; it was composed in Europe to be used in a correspondence course and is designed to be completely self-explanatory without the aid of a teacher. Students electing to complete the course in this way would be assigned to an advisor who would help with any problems and check each week on the progress being made by the students. The grade for the course would be based on a mid-term and final examination. Examinations would consist of a selection of exercises taken from the book itself plus passages from the book to translate from Latin to English.

In the fall of 1971 this option will be limited to 20 students at the elementary level and 20 at the intermediate level. Those wishing to complete either course in this way must inform Professor Gilbert Lawall during Counseling Period (May 3-7) Herter 403 (545-0512).

A new course, Classics 385, Roman Views of Women, will be offered, with all readings done in English translation. No prerequisites. It will be taught by Professor Anne Parry, who is presently teaching a graduate Latin seminar on the same subject.

The Classics program will also offer elementary Arabic (MWF 2-30 and labs conducted in the classroom on TuTh at 4:35, one of which may be optional), and elementary and intermediate Hebrew. Students wishing to take Hebrew must take a placement test to be administered only on Tuesday, May 4, 6-7:00 p.m., in Thompson 104.

Contraception, Abortion DVP Topic Tonight

Dr. Alan F. Guttmacher, the President of Planned Parenthood-World Population, will speak tonight on Contraception and Abortion in Thompson 104 at 8 p.m. in a DVP-sponsored talk. A Coffee Hour will follow in the Colonial Lounge.

Dr. Guttmacher is a diplomate in Obstetrics and Gynecology, a member of the faculty of the Albert Einstein School of Medicine, and Emritus Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology at New York's Mount Sinai School of Physicians and Surgeons and lecturer at the Harvard School of Public Health.

He is the author of many scientific and popular books and articles on contraception, infertility, pregnancy, twinning, and the history of medicine.

His most recent books are "Birth Control and Love", in which he recounts the history of contraception and offers a glimpse into the future, and "Understanding Sex: a Young Person's Guide," in which he discusses the physiology of human reproduction and attitudes and behavior related to sexuality.

A native of Baltimore and a graduate of the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, he taught anatomy at his alma mater and at the University of Rochester. After residency-training he rose to the rank of Associate Professor of Obstetrics at the Johns Hopkins. Later he became Director of the Combined Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at New York's Mount Sinai Hospitl, a post he held until 1962 when he assumed leadership of Planned Parenthood-World Population, the U.S. national voluntary birth control organization.

He is past President of the New York Obstetrical Society and formerly Chairman of the Central Medical Committee of International Planned Parenthood Federation in London. He holds honorary degrees from Dartmouth College and Brandeis University.

Y.S.A. Hears Marxist Speaker

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

George Novack, self-described "classic-Marxist" and author of Introduction To The Logic of Marxism, addressed the assembly of the Young Socialists' Alliance Thursday night.

Novack developed his topic "Reform and Revolution in U.S. History" by saying that there have been three "revolutions in the United States in the past three hundred years", and described revolution as "American as apple pie."

He also urged his audience: "All you have to have is a campus struggle, until the Administration intervenes," comparing the present student-administration relationship to "an unhappy marriage".

About the "working class' he insisted: "When the time is right, they will rise up and show their full strength", and emphasizing this with a quotation by Malcom X: "After failure of the ballots come the bullets."

"The classes of people reach the point of revolution hesitantly," he continued, and proceeded to examine the five most recent Democratic Administrations for their overlapping states of war. He called these Presidents, Wilson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Truman, Kennedy, and Johnson as: "Misters Clean", and "war-makers".

Novack made a point not to exclude the social minorities, especially Women's Lib., The Third World, and Gay Lib, conceding the problem as "how can an immovable force be changed into an irresistable force."

"The potentially anti-capitalists are gaining momentum," Novack warned, and praised the end of the "silent generation".

Socialist League Meets Plans Ed. Conference

By LISA CHERNICK
MDC Staff

YPSL, The Young People's Socialist League held an organizational meeting Thursday night in the Campus Center. Featured by Jack Clark the main topic of the meeting centered around the May 8 Educational Conference to be co-sponsored by YPSL and the Western Massachusetts A Phillip Randolph Institute.

There will be a morning panel at 10:00 A.M. in the Council Chambers of the Student Union including panelists Julius Bernstein, Socialist Party vice-chairman, Harvey Friedman, member of the Mass Labor Relations Center, and Earl Bourdon of the United Steel Workers. Bernstein will be co-ordinator of the morning panel.

There will be three 2:00 workshops. One on "Students, Labor and Electoral Action," the second on "Ecology and the Labor Movement," and the last on "Labor Problems on Campus."

At 3:30 the concluding address will be given by Ezarim Kohak on "Toward a Democratic Foreign Policy."

Unions expected to attend the conference include the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, International Association of Machinists, United Steel Workers, and American Federation of Teachers.

The rest of the meeting was concerned with discussing plans for an after conference party and means to publicize the conference.

"First Woodstock, then Altamont...now this"

"Our hero sat through all of this with his head in his hands. He listened, for the particular priest was a favorite. But he did not nudge the person next to him or turn to someone to exclaim when the priest performed his best works."

They were young and our hero could easily pass all of this off. But he knew that this was nothing but preparation for the eventual climax of the Ceremony. The priest comes out on stage and is greeted by the worshippers. He acknowledges them, though they do not enter his mind. He ignores and scorns them. He plays his music and the worshippers are fulfilled. The Ceremony is completed and the priest wobbles off stage, woozy and punchy from the music and drugs.

ELECTRIC EGO

They sit in front of him in awe. They do not question his skill, or his taste. For them, the experience is complete when at that magic moment, when the excitement of the trip, the drugs, the music, the atmosphere all congeal into one, and they sag to the ground, drained, and talk of nothing but the Ceremony. They review it in their minds. They discuss it. They do not let it lie dormant to work on the sub conscious to make a more pleasing and lasting memory.

Our hero sat through all of this with his head in his hands. He listened, for the particular priest was a favorite of his. But he did not nudge the person next to him or turn to someone and exclaim when the priest performed his best works. No, he sat and enjoyed, silent in the knowledge that the sweating masses in front of the loudspeakers could not destroy or take it away from him.

They tried, though. The schedule performers came and the crowd prostrated itself in front of them. Then the artists went away, their egos and their pocketbooks satisfied. The crowd panted and drank and smoked its way through the later part of the first afternoon and into the evening. Evening held a promise of more local entertainment and, for many, a chance to sleep under the stars. Our hero went back to his room to relax, passing on his way to Southwest more of the young people to whom this was Mecca. He arrived at his room in time to hear the beginnings of the Al Jagoda show, a miscarriage presented weekly by the local FM radio station. Al and our hero are well acquainted with each other, having once tried to stand each other for a weekend in New York with another mutual friend and not succeeding.

Al's guests on this particular show included Fat Cynthia Frankinfield, the Phantom of Pierpont, who called our hero "the eunuch of Moore House" with all the emphasis she could get out of the station's ten watts. Our hero sat in silence and listened as his name and reputation were bandied about by Miss Frankinfield and a few others. His relationship to the Phantom, who tried for a while to get it together in the bowels of Pierpont and then moved elsewhere to achieve her full potential, was non-existent. Cynthia, as they say was really flaming on that afternoon.

But our hero let all this pass off his back like so much water running off a duck in the rain. He was not known for building his life around trivialities, and wasn't going to start by shooting Jagoda on sight.

Jagoda and Frankinfield were merely some of the more apparent pimples on the otherwise unblemished face of the place that weekend. However, as pimples, they were indicative of a more insidious festering from within. As the crowds swelled by the pond and the local entertainment, a band named Steel which always seems to show up like a vulture at the remains of somebody elses' boogie, began to warm up, our hero began to be more and more sure in his feeling that the crowd was, by now, little more than an unthinking and allfeeling organism that swayed and moved to the music which it no longer heard, and barely perceived. The largely green-jacketed crowd around the stage began to press in to feel the vibrations deeper within its body. Individual members of the crowd could be seen through the mercury vapor and wood fire light as they writhed in tune to the driving music, spurred on by some drug or combination of drugs that would somehow distort and enlarge the evening, making the dancers feel later that they had been in the grip of something that could only be spoken about in awed tones.

Our hero had spent some time wandering around behind the stage that had been set up beside the pond. He knew the people who were behind Poisson-Vierra Productions and at various times during the course of the afternoon stopped by to watch them deal with the pressure and to offer his condolences. They were jokingly accepted and our hero wandered from the pond to the Union. At least the people who had put this debaucherie together had apparently known what they were in for and were taking it with good grace.

THE PRIEST

Meanwhile, rumors were floating back via the new arrivals that radio stations to the East were broadcasting news of the event. The groups that were to appear at the demonstrations in Washington were supposed to be heading for the area. The promoters were a little nervous, figuring that a forty cent phone call could bring hordes more of the brats. The crowd seemed to gain a little momentum and then slack off, then repeat the process. By nightfall, the crowd had dwindled. Now it only filled the area around where the stage had been and the large windswept stretches to the road were again left empty.

As the night wore on, more and more sleeping bags were unrolled and the now befuddled and tired youths stretched out to sleep, awaiting eagerly the next day.

Sunday found the place invaded by even more people, though the streams which now meandered through campus now were beginning to change their consistency; they were becoming more diversified, more complex. Now it wasn't simply a case of idle teenagers with nothing better to do who swarmed over the campus; now it was a full-scale Occasion and the veterans were turning out in force.

The veterans had been present when other battles were fought. They had created first Woodstock, then Altamont, the paragons of the Cult's mad quest for the blessed sacrament. And now they had created this. Our hero walked aimlessly through the encampment for hours, watching with a little bit of awe, tinged with disgust, marvelling at the ingenuity of these elder statesmen of the Cult. They had begun to set up a semi-permanent home of pup tents, propped-up ponchos, spread-out sleeping bags, and the inevitable stick with the feathers and balloons. He felt overwhelmed. He felt as if he were walking through the used camping equipment section of an Army-Navy store. What an assortment of paraphernalia there was. Canteens, sleeping bags, neat little aluminum cook stoves, knapsacks, pack frames, his head reeled at the sight of all this merchandise. What an investment it represented. And here they were, squatting on their heels grinding dirt and grass deep into the water resistant covers of their beds, and rolling marijuana into crooked little cigarettes and smoking it. The fumes were making his eyes water and he was beginning to stumble on tufts of dried grass and trip in little chuckholes. He was fast becoming sick at the sight of the crowds and wished he were far away.

But he stayed on and watched, fascinated with the behavior of the eager fans sitting in front of the loudspeakers. This was not like the day before. The predominantly teenage crowd had been supplemented by an older element that really knew the ropes, they knew what was expected of them and the afternoon, though plagued with the usual delays, mostly caused by the tempermental prima donna performers, moved on surprisingly smoothly and the crowd was not tired, but rather it anticipated every new move on stage. The performers came and went and still the worshippers were enthusiastic, applauding and cheering each of the priests as he aided in the rite.

When it was all over, our hero realized that he harbored no regrets about having been a part of it. But to ask him during the actual thing itself would have been foolhardy and inviting trouble.

UNCLE LENNIE

The weather, which was threatening rain to begin with, did not hold for the entire afternoon, and by the time the final sacrifice was ready, raindrops were spattering on the crowd and people began to seek shelter under whatever shelter they could find. Our hero saw people duck under blankets, under parked trucks, and in one case, under white silk parachute. This again disgusted him somehow and he began to wonder if these people had no more sense then to just sit there. For his own part he was tired and hungry and saw no reason why he should not leave the arena and seek solace for his worries in a warm dry spot.

As he walked past the Little Hatch on his way back to Moore House, he saw a familiar figure. He walked up to it and tapped it on the shoulder. It was Silverman, licking away on a soft ice cream cone with a silenced Beretta in his hand.

"Watch this" said Silverman, and took careful aim and shot a student who was walking across the patio.

He turned back to our hero and, blowing away the little curl of smoke that was rising out of the gun barrel, asked "Where have you been all weekend?"

"Only a glutton wouldn't be satisfied with the afternoon of music presented on Sunday. Poisson-Vierra Productions went beyond what was to be expected of students here and put on a group of concerts which finally showed that a concert could be handled will at this school."

Rumors were rampant, on campus and off. The Dead, Poco, you name them, they were coming for a weekend that would pale Powder Ridge or Mountaindale or any other immemoriable rock festival from the past.

Some of the rumors made it in print, in the Phoenix for example, and over the weekend AM and FM radio stations good-naturedly picked up more rumors and spread them as far as their 50,000 watts could travel.

Friday night knapsacks and sleeping bags began to appear on people's backs. A very stoned and hungry young man accosted me in the Student Union wanting to know how he ended up in this god-forsaken place. He had heard on a New York radio station that the Dead were here this weekend and with some friends he had made his way here; now for no reason.

Poisson and Vierra Productions had booked Al Kooper on Saturday, plus two local bands, Bloodstone and The Jones. The crowd which gathered about the pond was a curious mixture of UMass students and youngsters from the area. Youngsters. Kids fourteen and fifteen passing around joints and drinking the old standby apple wine just like the big guys.

Anyone with sense left with Kooper, the local bands should stick to the Friday night high school circuit. Bloodstone are probably the most hollow-sounding group around and the Joneses should play their sets in a vacuum somewhere east of Worcester. Maybe, just maybe, then it could be tolerable.

It was the music which made the difference between the two age groups. While Kooper was enjoyed by a more sophisticated, older audience, the Joneses were what the kids got off on.

It was disgruntining to say the least for Al Kooper put on an excellent set. He began with a couple of numbers at the organ, showing his virtuosity as one of rock's finest keyboard artists.

His acoustical guitar songs didn't come off as well and he had to depend on his affalable stage manner to get him through. His monologue about losing one's virginity was much, much funnier than the song about it.

He finished up at the keyboard doing some standards such as "Last Time" and his Blood, Sweat, and Tears hit from some years back, "I Can't Quit Her." The crowd finally began to move towards the end of Kooper's set but it was erratic and came a bit too late to be truly appreciated. Kooper left without doing encores leaving the crowd for the local bands.

People began wandering down towards the fields by the stadium as early as five-thrity in the morning. It wasn't until six hours later that a local band began to play and the drowd grew to a gigantic size. Poisson-Vierra Productions had succeeded in creating a major rock concert without really trying. The rub was whether they could handle it.

They did. Boz Scaggs, the first major act of the afternoon was moved on the stage efficiently and on time. The marshalls did their best to clear the stage before the seven-man ensemble played.

Boz Scaggs played lead guitar with Steve Miller a few years back before forming this group. He was featured up front throughout their erratic set. Their performance was tight and the songs were adequate, but the group would often lost their perspective, with the solos seeming more like ego-trips then anything else.

Still, though, Boz Scaggs made good listening and Poisson-Vierra Productions had a fine start to the afternoon. Poisson, who acted as Master of Ceremonies, put on a show in his own right as he introduced groups and made announcements in a mock-Woodstock style.

The crowd, though, greeted these groups with an uncommon fervor. I guess it must have felt good to see your favorite local band make it big time and clappin' those hands shows your gratitude to Poisson--Vierra Productions for being responsible for this big break.

At least that's the way four no more than fifteen year old girls expressed late in the afternoon as the crowd began to clear out and a maniac on a motorcycle sped through the crowd nearly killing a number of unassuming spectators. The girls were groupies for the local groups, a thought which thoroughly pales the mind, although one would have a nice smile if she had her braces removed.

Nonetheless Poisson-Vierra Productions carried the first day off with a minimum of hassles. The crowd was large and quiet, the music kept them happy, and the weather, for once, was nice.

Throughout the afternoon rumors of the rumors began filtering through the crowd. Poisson and Vierra began to anticipate the worst as someone told of the Mass Pike being covered with hitchhikers all heading this way.

Saturday night it became apparent that people were arriving for Sunday. People were wandering everywhere, many in pretty tough shape. Acid seemed to be the vogue and many had dropped to take advantage of the first decent night in a long time. It wasn't too cool, but was to be expected. Nonsense made sense.

The group transistions were made with ease as Brewer and Shipley followed doug, their acoustical guitar set up the front of the stage. Brewer and Shipley are one of the best two man duos singing today. They have pleasant and subtle harmonies along with excellent guitar work. If any group will be moving up to the omnipotent super-star status in the next year, may it be Brewer and Shipley.

After doing a far better version of "One Toke Over The Line" than currently available on record, they did a pseudo-country number before doing some Dylan. They finished off with their best material, the Indian songs which they have made their private domain.

The crowd, who were only mild to Boz Scaggs--not getting an encore--went wild with these two. They came back and did three more emjoyable numbers ending with an impressive version of Dylan's "Mighty Quinn."

Brewer and Shipley tried to stave off the rain, but it began to sprinkle towards the end of their set. The crowd, now about ten thousand, didn't seem to mind much. the music was so good. It wasn't the greatest day for an outdoor concert but people were obviously enjoying themselves despite the weather which looked darker by the minute.

The stage crew did a more than commendable job clearing the stage between acts. Curtis Mayfield moved right on with his group, called the experience. His was a most pleasant soft, mellow voice blended with what had come before.

It seemed most of the crowd hadn't been acquainted with Mayfield. He easily won them over. His best number was a very long version of "Get On Up" which he did with some unexpected yet very nice back-up from some people in the crowd.

The music peaked early and Mayfield only continued it on this high level.

The clouds which had mercifully held off most of the day finally gave way as Seatrain set up. Here Poisson Vierra Productions began to have hassles. Hassles with the crowd who wouldn't move off the stage or away from it. Seatrain had in their contract that no one--not a soul--should be on the stage when they perform and they were holding to it. The Marshalls did their best to move some of the boorish crowd out into the rain and move the group's large itinerary onto the stage.

They did and Seatrain played, to those who stayed in the rain. As one freakie girl in farmer's overalls told me, "they were worth their weight in water." A rather bad joke but a nice way of summing up the group's performance.

The crowd began to break up. It had been rumored that another group would play, they didn't. Only a glutton wouldn't be satisfied with the afternoon of music presented on Sunday. Poisson-Vierra Productions went beyond what was to be expected of students here and put on a group of concerts which finally showed that a concert could be handled well at this school.

A Massachusetts SUNY

It seems that there is a bit of executive idea reshuffling going on in Boston concerning what might become a State University system for Massachusetts, strangely similar to the nation's largest University system in neighboring New York, SUNY.

Last week Governor Sargent told students and faculty at Salem State College that "the role of state colleges in relation to the University of Massachusetts, Southeastern Massachusetts University and Lowell Tech must be reassessed." Even though reliable sources indicate that he "did not intend" to mention the State University of New York in his call for a study of a "single unified state University system", he did.

The Governor called for "public debate" on the issue and promised to ask Ed Moore's State Board of Higher Education "to conduct an in depth study" of the advisability of such a unification.

Sargent argues in his speech that the present system of Higher Education in Massachusetts lacks "flexibility" and "in fact is actually regressive". He is correct about the whole state and community college system; still the political pawns of a Legislature, conscious of that fact that they lost direct links to the prize of Massachusetts higher education here in Amherst some ten years ago, when UMass was granted fiscal autonomy.

When UMass President Wood's office heard about Sargent's speech they reportedly went through a few hours of worry, cancelling scheduled appointments and generally trying to find out why Wood wasn't brought in on the deal before the Governor made his speech. One fairly knowledgable observer commented that President Wood "doesn't like to operate that way."

The reaction from the President's office according to Joe Ryan, Wood's Public Relations man, was that the speech was "viewed as interesting" and that changes in the University system are being contemplated. Ryan pointed out that the Governor had not "officially proposed" any changes so President Wood really didn't have any comment."

From the Board of Higher Education there was word that they are already about to take a close look at the possibility of adding a combined Lowell State-Lowell Tech to the University as a fourth University, if SMU would join there might even be a five-center system. Sources indicate that this is in the Governor's mind for the future of Massachusetts higher education.

Taking for granted that President Wood's office is not filling the Governor with all these ideas of reform at this particular time, the next obvious source might be former-Dean of the UMass Graduate School and now Chancellor of the Board of Higher Education Edward Moore himself.

Moore left UMass to become the Vice-President for Graduate Studies and Research at the State University of New York in Binghamton. With the position of Secretary of Education within the Governor's new cabinet system still open for upwardly mobile educators, there is a good possibility that Ed Moore has been at the Governor's ear.

One source close to Moore quoted him as saying it's no coincidence that the SUNY is the model that was most familiar to the Governor. But I wouldn't want to embarrass him."

One can be sure that President Wood, rumored to be having some trouble within his own domain, is watching the politics of Massachusetts education just as close as he used to be watched while running the MBTA.

Your Narrow Interests

BY PUTNAM BARBER
Sociology Department

It is unjust as well as extravagant to require the overburdened taxpayers of the Commonwealth to continue subsidizing the college education of students who can perfectly well afford to pay the full costs of the educational benefits they receive. No doubt there are many in the state who cannot afford higher education at present costs. Our ability to assist them more adequately in the future depends on discoverng new sources of revenue, not on preserving the unfair advantages some now receive.

A bill calling for across-the-board tuition increases was recently defeated in the Senate in Boston. Rightly so. What is needed is a sliding scale of tuition charges, set by law and administered by the financial aid officers of the various schools in the state. At the same time, financial aid funds must be available to allow support for students who cannot meet fees and other costs of attending the University or State Colleges. The formulas involved will be complex, in order to deal with the various possibilities that arise as young people move out from under their parents' financial wings. But the Commonwealth need not fear complexity - somehow everyone gets through the State Income Tax forms, which speaks highly of the native intelligence of all of our citizens.

In the long run, the burden of financing higher education must be placed upon those who benefit from it, in the form of a lifetime surtax against earnings for those who attend college (something like this has just been instituted at Yale). Under such a scheme, a revolving fund would be set up by the State and sustained by payments made along with income tax returns calculated on the basis of amount of support received while in school. The plan receives co-operation of the Federal government and has several unresolved questions implicit in it (what, for example, of the costs incurred by women who subsequently marry?). But it will, when instituted, provide a stable source of funds for higher education which places the burden on the appropriate portion of the population - those who have benefited from the University's services.

But for the moment, the enormous subsidy of middle- and upper-income families which is provided by the unreasonably low tuition charged at state institutions must be eliminated. That can be done, in fairness to present students, by instituting a sliding-scale tuition charge to be paid by students enrolling for the first time in the Fall of 1972 and later. Calls for the University to involve itself in the welfare of those outside its walls will not be plausible so long as the students at the University are a major burden on the resources of the state. Future letter writing campaigns should reflect awareness of our responsibilities to our fellow citizens, rather than narrow self interest.

Most Of Them Just Talk...

BY KENNETH E. EBLE

One of my most memorable classroom experiences was watching a college professor bet his brains against the laws of physics. Standing on one side of a cavernous auditorium, he held to his forehead an iron ball attached by a long cable to the ceiling. Then he let it go and stood unmoving as the ball swung across the room and back. It did not, as the laws of motion said it would not, bash his brains out. The students were tremendously impressed, both relieved and faintly disappointed.

I was thinking about this as I watched a recent class in introductory physics. The auditorium was smaller, more comfortable, better-equipped. The lecturer was competent, and he did turn to the blackboard occasionally. But not once during the 50-minute hour did he suggest that physics can be a visual, physical subject. He did not, as I had seen another lecturer do, reach into his pocket and bring out various colored balls identified as atomic and subatomic particles. He did not bring out the mouse traps and Ping-Pong balls that illustrated nuclear fission in a more innocent day.

What he did was what most university lecturers do when faced with a big class: talk, talk, talk. Lecturers do, of course, read from books and other printed materials, make assignments, work out tests and exercises.

For the committed student, the "major," such rudimentary techniques may work well enough. The sciences, after all, have their labs, and most campuses provide students with opportunities for close-at-hand relationships with art, music, ideas, other minds and sensibilities. But for the student just coming into college, too little is done to catch and engage his attention.

The introductory physics course is a case in point. Physicists tell me that the "magic show" is on the wane. To some degree, there are valid pedagogic objections to such a course. Demonstrations get in the way, one physicist told me. Students remember the gimmicks, but don't grasp the principles.

Suspicions of Popularity

Yet many of the physicists I have talked [illegible] at it differently. "Only the older generation of professors are interested," an associate dean told me. "The new men can't afford to work up the introductory course. No pay-off."

Such attitudes help explain the lack of attention shown for the beginning student, the non-major, the general course. A suspicion toward popularity is a related academic attitude. Faculty members who are quick to find apologies for the dry-as-dust teacher who "knows his field," show less charity toward the professor who attracts flocks of students from across the university.

Perhaps such response grows out of the respect a scholar has for the truth of his discipline. Ideally, a man's subject may need no ornamentation. Yet, Whitehead is surely right when he says, "Knowledge does not keep any better than fish.....Somehow or other it must come to the student, as it were, just drawn out of the sea."

But it is not the philosophic position which keeps teachers from making an impact on the uncommitted student. It is easier to read from old notes than to bring in fresh ideas, to keep the 50-minute classroom format than to seek new modes of teaching, to work with one's office door closed than to leave it open, to take truth from the graduate school and mete it out sparingly than to test it out before a large and often unappreciative audience.

The Professor as Example

Nevertheless, American higher education has great need for professors who have the ability to speak in terms the student can understand, to arouse and hold interest, to exemplify and illustrate and demonstrate. The greatly skilled teacher of this kind may embody the larger example: the professor as a being worthy of emulation. Students need the kind of professor who is willing to bet his skull against the knowledge he possesses, willing too to make the test in public, and to risk that his students may be entertained at the same time they are edified.

Shared thoughts like of mutant babies born of chemical mothers. Anger mounting flashing white teeth split like lightening hoping fate opens vaginal lips of mud-caked trench holes open to swallow the swollen deaf ears enclosing them in the viscous mucose of their immorality to silence their indifference

Letters To The Editor

Legitimate Fears?

To the Editor:

An unsigned letter concerning Teacher/Course Evaluation appeared in the April 29 Collegian under the headline "Student-Faculty Cooperation?" That letter is obviously not a letter to the editor at all, but the text of a memo from a faculty member to the other members of his department. Let me identify myself as the author of that memo, which I sent, signed, to my colleagues in the Mathematics and Statistics Department.

I must object to the form of publication of my memo. It appeared without my signature; I never hide under a cloak of anonymity. Your headline may give the erroneous impression that I or my colleagues have unfairly refused to cooperate with students in teacher evaluation. Let me set the record straight.

Last Spring some students approached our faculty about instituting a departmental teacher evaluation, and an informal student-faculty committee was formed. This Fall that committee became official. This Spring the committee's proposal on student evaluation of teaching was endorsed by our faculty and approved by both faculty and student members of our Council. Our teacher evaluation questionnaire is to be administered in all our undergraduate courses beginning this semester. Beginning next Fall, the results will be given to our Personnel Committee which includes students as voting members.

Our separate departmental evaluation is being conducted to obtain data specifically relevant to evaluating and improving the teaching of mathematics and statistics. Both students and faculty on our teacher evaluation committee considered and rejected the idea of using the Student Senate questionnaire. The committee conducting the Student Senate evaluation does not inspire confidence in the value of its work. For several semesters it has ignored requests from our faculty (which includes professional statisticians) for more information about its questionnaire. Its letter requesting faculty participation this Spring does not list the questions to be asked and says nothing about how the raw data is to be analyzed.

Were the Student Senate committee to begin cooperating with faculty by freely providing the information we need about its questionnaire, we could then consider what role its questionnaire should play in our department.

A Safe Fast

To the Editor:

In reference to the plans of several students to undergo a voluntary fast for five days between May 1 and May 5, the following information may be of some interest. There have been many studies to show that fasting up to periods of 40 days have minimal undesirable effects. In general, hunger is no problem if there is free access to water. A weight loss may be expected. The average individual would expend about 1800 calories per day assuming that he spend the day in sitting or standing and did not exercise. Over a 5-day period a weight loss of approximately 12 pounds might be expected.

On the other hand, several important aspects of fasting should be borne in mind. There is considerable loss of both water and salts from the body and, therefore, it is important that the intake of water and salts be maintained. The average individual should have abgut 2 1/2 quarts of fluid per day. It is also desirable to have some of that fluid in the form of salt-containing soups or broth. Because there is weight loss, fluctuations in blood pressure may be experienced and, therefore, sudden changes of position may be accompanied by feelings of faintness. Many individuals experience muscle weakness and, therefore, activities should be kept at a minimum. Patients with chronic diseases such as diabetes, kidney stones, gout, and chronic kidney disease should not fast.

Ha, Ha

To the Editor:

I would like to give my comments on something which took place outside of Kennedy Tower in Southwest Tuesday evening. What started out as a good time turned into one of the worst things I have ever witnessed. Apparently, it all began with the idea of throwing a softball up from one lounge window to the one above it in an attempt to reach the top floor lounge window. A large group, meanwhile, had gathered in the mall in front of Hampshire commons to watch plus many residents of both Kennedy and Coolidge who were looking out their windows. Suddenly, someone from one of the upper floors threw a full size, stuffed dummy out of the window. It must have scared the shit out everyone watching. I saw the body of the student who jumped from my tower, Washington, a couple of weeks ago. Believe me, anyone who saw Phillip Burke after his fall did not think that what happened Tuesday evening was at all funny. All I can say is that I hope people will think a little more before acting like this again.

WE are Sincere

To the Editor:

This is in reference to Mark Silverman's editorial of Friday, April 30th-"Starving For Nothing".

Those of us of conscience have attempted these past years to bring attention to the war in Indo-China and to seek meaningful ways in which to end it. I and my fellow officers are not trying to organize a mass "fast" on campus, but to simply indicate to everyone concerned where we stand in terms of opposing the War In Indo-China in our day-to-day lives. Mainly it will give the other three officers, who will be unable to be in Washington with me, to show their strong support for what I and others will be doing May Week.

In no way can this discredit "more viable protests" as M. Silverman puts it. Only his cynicism about my personal motives can do this. If his editorials are the public announcements of his personal style of life (like my fasting), then he is not truly concerned with returning "spring to the rice paddies". Simply, his, is the insecure need to question others motives.

Why not resign from the Collegian and enact your fantasies in the real world, Mark?

Wasteful Insurance

To the Editor:

As an attorney who has many university students for clients, I find that many students have been victimized by the aggressive sales tactics of local life insurance salesmen.

It is possibly true that a life insurance investment at a young age is a good investment as one is never assured of good health at the time the need for insurance arises. I am aware though, that many of the salesmen provide students with policies that are not consistant with their needs.

Many students have purchased five year term insurance, which is unnecessary with most students needs, therefore a wasteful expenditure.

I would advise all students interested in the purchase of life insurance, that they see many different insurance men to compare the different plans that they offer. It is also important to remember that insurance companies are regulated in Massachusetts, but that insurance policies differ greatly as to benefit and cost.

It is also important to note that an insurance contract in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts cannot be disaffirmed unless the insured is under 15 years of age.

I hope you will acquire a specialist in the field of insurance to write an article for your newspaper providing students as to how their insurance needs may be fulfilled.

Conference

To the Editor:

Recently, a letter was sent to you informing you about a Pan-African conference that will be held on the week-end of May 7-9. Due to the fact a lot of brothers and sisters will be coming in from other universities, we had asked you to accomodate some of them.

Unfortunately the response has been exceedingly poor. As a consequence we will be setting up desks at the various dining commons where you can respond.

We would also like to inform you that the tickets for the dinner and dance will be going on sale shortly, so please pick your up.

Kids' Complacency

To the Editor:

This article is an appeal of the Children's Lib letter, which was published on Thursday, the twenty ninth of April, in the Daily Collegian.

The letter in Thursday's edition involved three people, Michael Forget, Nina and Eric Mankin, the only three people involved in Children's Lib. They are giving a false impression of the students at Marks Meadow School. They are against, what they call, "being brutalized by teachers." In our opinion, "teachers are not brutalizing us, they are correcting us for our wrong". The teachers are giving us the education that they are paid to do.

They also mentioned something about the operetta being a waste of time. In our opinion, it's just about the biggest project Marks Meadow has done all year. Thanks to Mrs. Cowell, our music teacher, we are able to perform this operetta. Mrs. Cowell has devoted much of her time to make this operetta a success. We are glad to have the excellent music teacher that we have now.

We have so many priviledges now that we should not be pushing for more!!

What Is It, Anyway?

To the Editor:

Mr. Rosemont's blanket indictment of our Dada/Surrealist Festival fills me with real grief and an about to be vented anger. Why does he call it a "thoroughly reprehensible undertaking?" and what prompts him to urge students to "greet it with anything less than the fullest disdain and defiance"?

Last Wednesday night an audience of about one hundred listened to surrealist poetry, read in English, French, German and various non-languages. I came away from the recital feeling elated, excited and exhilirated. I don't think Mr. Rosemont was there.

We are not unaware of the serious problems confronting our country, our campus and our conscience, but if the Dada/Surrealist otterings provide an escape into a different sensibility, aren't we all the happier for it? And when it comes to "abject confusion", does Mr. Rosemont really think that the "enemies of surrealism" are free from it?

Have A Drink

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the Massachusetts State Senate for their "just" decision this week concerning the lowering of the drinking age. They have confirmed the fact that the young person is a second class citizen and they have given the young further cause to be disillusioned with their supposedly free country. I question the integrity of any Senator or Representative (especially my "representatives" Willfrid Driscoll and Matt Kuss of Fall River) who voted for this bill. I hate to quote cliche but if a man is old enough to be screwed by the Selective Service System he is certainly old enough to go drown his troubles in a bar room. You might say that this letter is just sour grapes but it is not. I don't particularly want to drink I just want to have the fact that I am a citizen and am therefore entitled to equal protection under the laws recognized denying a eighteen year old the right to drink is no different than denying a Black or a Puerto Rican the right to drink. This law is outright discrimination and we will not allow this any more. I would urge all young voters to check the voting records of their Reps and to screw them at the polls if they have screwed us, in their legislation. We have the vote now they can't take that away from us-lets use it.

Remember

To the Editor:

May 5 will soon be upon us. Here at UMass the day will be marked by a Moratorium in remembrance of those killed and injured last year at Kent State and Jackson State. There is also one other place that should be included at this time.

On May 8, 1970 the National Guard was called in to the University of New Mexico for some unknown reason. Fortunately no one was killed; however, eleven people were stabbed by bayonets, seven students, one reporter and three guardsmen. One student will never walk again. The guardsmen stabbed themselves while getting back into their trucks.

Strangely enough no one outside of Albuquerque ever heard about this event. Now you know. So let remember these people on May 5 and keep it in mind that if it can happen in New Mexico it can happen anywhere.

"Bounce For Beats" To Be Held May 5-8

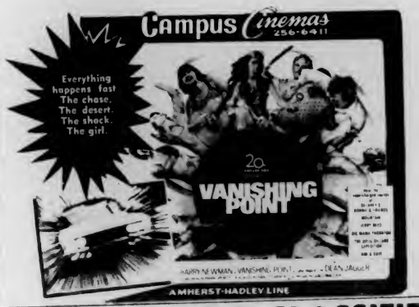
A variety of activities is currently planned by Sigma Alpha Mu in conjunction with its annual drive for the Western Massachusetts Heart Association. The drive itself is referred to as "Bounce for Beats", and is characterized by the bouncing of a basketball, symbolic of the vital function of the heart. The campaign period this year will be from May 5 through May 8.

The drive will open as SAM, through the courtesy of the University Food Services, will sponsor the weekly Coffee House in the Blue Wall Cafeteria of the Campus Center from 9 PM until 1 AM. For any reasonable contribution to the Heart Fund, a person will receive a small heart which will entitle him to obtain free popcorn at any time during the course of the evening. The actual bouncing of the symbolic basketball by the brothers and sisters of SAM will be conducted from 12 to 5 PM on Thursday at a booth near the entrance of the Campus Center Book Store. The events on Thursday will conclude with a Folk Festival in the Hatch from 7 to 11 PM, featuring many local entertainers.

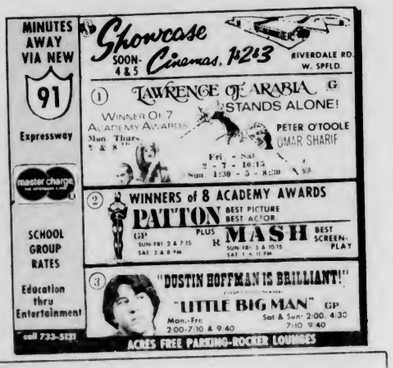
Music again will be the main attraction to the University community on Friday. A concert featuring "Clear Sky" will be held in front of the Little Hatch in Southwest from 4:30 to 7 PM. The music will continue at an open concert at the Campus Pond from 8 PM to 1 AM featuring "Clear Sky", "Boston Latin", and "Vitamin Springs".

The University community is cordially invited to attend all the events which will be held during the course of the "Bounce for Beats" Drive. It is also stressed that all activities will be free, although contributions will gladly be accepted on behalf of the Western Massachusetts Heart Association, to help finance its attempt to research a cure for heart disease. Before the finals period bring you down, bring yourself up for a good time.

Frost's Poetry Discussed Tonight



Professor Lawrance Thompson of Princeton University will give a lecture entitled "Robert Frost's Poetry: the Cryptic Side" at 8:00 p.m., tonight in Herter Hall 231.



Mr. Thompson, a distinguished teacher and critic, is the poet's biographer, having published two volumes that tell the story of Robert Frost's life from the time of his birth to the year 1938.

At the present time Professor Thompson is completing his research preparatory to the writing of the third volume exploring Frost's life and writings in the years from 1938 to 1963.

The talk which is open to the public, will concentrate upon a group of familiar but difficult Frost poems. Following the lecture there will be a coffee hour and discussion period in the Memorial Building, at which Mr. Thompson will answer questions concerning both the poetry and the biography of Robert Frost.

Huntsville Strike Is Topic on "Focus"

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will examine the little-publicized strike presently being waged by sanitation workers in Huntsville, Alabama.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's special guest for tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be VISTA worker Russ Coggswell, who for the past 15 months has been stationed in Huntsville. Operating in a section of the city known as Lincoln, Mr. Coggswell has been working with both poor white and poor black people, trying to help develop local leadership and community economic-political power.

Over the last few years, Alabama, the political home of Governor George C. Wallace and the American Independent Party, has been the scene of now almost-legendary civil rights protests led by Stokely Carmichael, the late Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, and others.

Tonight's program will also include a segment of editorial commentary on the present offensive of anti-war protests being conducted in Washington, D.C.

Sox Sweep Two from Twins; Culp Hurls Shutout In Opener

BOSTON (AP) George Scott drove in the tying run with a ninth inning triple and scored on George Thomas' first hit of the season, giving the Boston Red Sox a 9-8 victory over Minnesota for a sweep of their yesterday doubleheader.

Ray Culp stymied the Twins on two hits as the Red Sox took the opener 1-0.

Culp, 3-1, struck out three and walked none in outdueling Minnesota's Bert Blyleven.

The only Minnesota hits were a first-inning leadoff double to left center by Cesar Tovar and a double by Lee Cardenas in the sixth.

Boston nicked Blyleven for an unearned run in the third. Luis Aparicio doubled and, with two out, came around to score as second baseman Steve Braun grounded for an error.

Blyleven, 2-4, allowed six hits.

Harmon Killebrew's fourth hit in the nightcap a run-scoring single in the top of the ninth sent the Twins ahead 8-7.

But the Red Sox, who had overcame a 7-2 Minnesota lead before falling behind again, quickly countered against Twins' relief ace Ron Perranoski.

Carl Yastrzemski walked, Rico Petrocelli sacrificed and Scott laced a triple to right center, tying it. Perranoski then walked Billy Conigliaro and pinch hitter Phil Gagliano, filling the bases.

Thomas, hitless in six previous trips to the plate this spring, batted for rookie Doug Griffin and delivered the winning run with a single to left through the Twins' drawn-in infield.

The Red Six, who stranded 16 base-runners through the eighth and had a total of 19 left on base, struck for four runs in the seventh and then tied it 7-7 in the eighth on Don Pavletich's double followed by a wild pitch and throwing error by Perranoski.

Killebrew singled and scored in the second, then doubled and scored in the fourth as the Twins erased an early 2-0 deficit.

They moved ahead 3-2 with a run in the sixth. Killebrew contributing another single, then tallied four times in the top of the seventh for a five-run lead. Culp, bombed for 16 runs in three previous starts, regained his old touch in outduelling Minnesota's Bert Blyleven in the opener.

Canonero II Derby Winner

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)- Canonero II first left Kentucky as a $1,200 yearling purchase. Now he will leave as the Kentucky Derby winner and a colt whose value is many times $1,200.

And he will leave Monday as a first class equine citizen, a status it took him a little more than two minutes to earn Saturday.

"He was going to be bumped," said Alex Nichols, whose agency flies thoroughbreds to various tracks in the nation. "We had too many horses for the plane and we decided Canonero II was the one to be dropped. But now we'll have to add another plane."

Canonero II came here from Venezuela where he has raced mostly since his purchase by Edgar Caibett, a Caracas plumbing and heating supplies manufacturer.

His destination today will be Baltimore, the home of the Preakness, a race in which he is expected to be joined by at least the second, third and fourth finishers in the 20-horse derby and a bunch of 3-year-olds who did not run the Churchill Downs classic.

Chick Lang, general manager of Pimlico, said he expected at least 14 for the May 15 Preakness. This could cause traffic problems similar to those experienced by and complained about by some jockeys and trainers in the Derby.

John Campo, the trainer of runnerup Jim French, said Sunday he felt Frank Caldwell's colt would have won if there had not been so many horses. He added Jim French came out of the race with cuts on three legs, but would be ready for the Preakness.

"I was bumped so hard I thought I would fall off," said Angel Cordero, Jr., of his ride on Jim French. "The field was too big. He could have won."

Hawks Win; Take Series

CHICAGO (AP)-Bobby Hull's tie breaking goal early in the third period lifted the Chicago Black Hawks to a 4-2 victory over the New York Rangers yesterday and sent them into the Stanley Cup finals against the Montreal Canadiens.

Hull's goal came at 8:25 after Tom Angotti won a faceoff from Walt Tkaczuk and denied one of the most hotly contested series in cup history as three of the seven games went into sudden death overtime.

Chico Maki tied the nationally televised game when he scored into an empty net with less than a half minute to play.

The Hawks now open the final best of 7 game series at home tomorrow night against the Canadiens, who have been resting since Thursday after defeating the Minnesota North Stars in six games of the other semifinal.

For the sixth time in the series the Hawks scored the first goal of the game. Dave Balon of New York drew a tripping penalty at 3:42 and a little more than a minute later, Chicago's Jim Pappin took a pass from behind the net from Maki and back-handed the puck past Ranger goalie Ed Giacomin at 14:49.

Esposito kept smothering Ranger shots but finally yielded the tying goal with Pete Stemkowski scoring by shoving the puck into the Chicago net.

New York remained in command throughout most of the second period.

Chicago finally took the lead when Stapleton fired a perfect pass to Hull, who unloaded his famous slap shot. The puck bounced off Giacomin, but Cliff Koroll punched the rebound into the net to tie the score 2-2.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo wants to gain power, reward and recognition. These persons don't play games where tame, prestige are involved. Leo is especially good, in financial sense, for those born under Cancer. Leo harmonizes with Libra, Aries and Sagittarius. There are likely to be problems with Taurus and Scorpio.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stand up for your rights. Associate or co-worker may be seeing how far you can be pushed. Display natural sense of originality, independence. You will finish important project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now is indicative of romantic interlude. One who whispers sweet nothings may have just that to offer nothing. Act accordingly. Sweeping change is upcoming.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Trust intuition. One who needs your aid will repay favor. What you do now can have profound effect on future. Stress practicality. Check property values. Compare and bargain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on dealings with relatives, short journeys. Ideas need more complete development. Don't overlook important details. Avoid scattering your forces. Sense of humor is now vital.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money angle of chart is emphasized. Obtain hint from Gemini message. Arrange budget which is practical. Avoid committing yourself to financial program which drains basic resources.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Outlook, personal appearance both improve. You are more vital. Many are drawn to you. You succeed in new enterprise. Leo individual can show you way now to obtain needed funds.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Protect assets. Refuse to sell yourself short. Special organizational assignment is in offing. One who is temporarily incapacitated would appreciate message, call or visit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A friend who means well could be steering you off course. Stress greater self reliance. Don't settle for second best. Insist on quality. Set your own pace, create your own style.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relations with employer are emphasized. You may be given overtime assignment. Don't shirk duty, responsibility. You are given a test. Outcome can be extremely favorable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Add to knowledge. Gain shown through written word. Open lines of communication. Prepare for journey. Check belongings, requirements. Publish and advertise. Spread influence.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Personal magnetism soars; you get meaningful compliment from member of opposite sex. Money situation involving mate, partner can be amicably settled. Be frank in stating your desires.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Lie low. Do more listening than asserting. Study methods of opposition. Size up one who is lavish with promises. Member of legal firm plays important role. Be a shrewd observer.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can look forward to productive, exciting and creative period. If single, marriage is on horizon. If married, you can expect added source of income. You surprise many with your sense of humor. You are a passionate, giving person. But if you feel others are taking advantage, you are ready to battle for rights.

Crewmen Second at Callow Cup Regatta

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

WORCESTER——In the events that counted toward overall grading, UMass crews finished once in first place and twice in third, and Trinity's finished with two firsts and one fourth. Final tabulation: Trinity 17, UMass 16. The T-boats will keep the Rusty Callow Cup for another year.

Both Redman varsity and jv's rowed easily for first place in their respective Saturday morning qualifying heats. When the afternoon came, things were still looking good for UMass after one of the freshman fours came in second place, the frosh eight in a good third, out of seven and the jv's won the cup for their event. Another new combination of varsity rowers, however, were just edged out by Trinity and Coast Guard in a very close contest. It turned out to be the race that counted.

This varsity race was sweat-around-the-collar close for seven shells for most of Lake Quinsigamond's 2000 meters. Trinity was out in front, but slimly. The Redmen were making for the second position over Coast Guard, but when they crossed the finishline, CG had gained to a half-second over UMass for number two completion. This .5 made the difference in final points.

"We made some mistakes. We let them (Trinity) get alittle too much ahead," said coach Mike Faherty. "Today Trinity just rowed better than we did."

Though the day ended on a somewhat sour note, it began very well, and there was a lot to be proud of.

The junior varsity eight were rewarded with another trophy after driving out of a packed field of six and surviving a Marist spring at the finish. The Redmen masterfully handled themselves at regular tempo while second place Marist was desperately increasing their pace, trying to make up for their loss to the UMass jv's last week. Trinity here was not as strong in a fourth-spot finish behind Coast Guard.

In the freshman event, the Little Redmen continually pulled ahead from the back part of the field to move strongly into third position in back of Trinity and Wesleyan. Kurt Betchick's students rowed really well.

Lowell Tech's four-boat was the only one ahead of the UMass A-entry, made up of freshmen, in a varsity and mixed competition. With about 800 meters to go, the UMass foursome were biting out of fourth into second, where they stayed until the end. The UMass B-shell unfortunately had equipment trouble at the bow, were rowing at times with only three men, and finished last out of six.

Coach Faherty was extremely pleased with the jv's and frosh. "The freshmen performed tremendously for the competition they were facing. And who could ask for anything more from the jv's? The only problem is that I have no idea how the Dad Vail committee is going to seat us."

Tracksters Romp In Tri-Meet

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team continued its winning ways whipping Springfield and Central Connecticut at home, Saturday. The Redmen in finishing on top scored 82 points while Springfield, the second place finisher, totaled 61 points. Central Connecticut finished out the scoring with 49 points. The trackmen improved their record to 5-1, and have not suffered a defeat since their opening day loss to Northeastern.

Highlights in the meet were provided by the record shattering performances of Tony Pendleton, Eddie Arcaro and Rocco Petitto. Pendleton led the onslaught of the record books as he posted a 9.7 in the 100. The sprinters, led by Pendleton, also continued to dominate the action as they recorded a one-two-three finish in the 100.

Aracaro for the third time this Spring broke the school record in the shotput. He responded to the stiff shotput competition in spectacular fashion as he broke his old record with a victory toss of 55 feet. His record breaking throw breaks the old record by almost 3 1/2 feet. Aracaro also finished second in the hammer to cap off a brilliant performance.

Petitto added to the rewriting of the record books with his throw of 20'5" in the javelin. His throw breaks his old record by exactly eight feet. Petitto still finished second to Tom Drayton, the New England javeline champ, despite his record breaking throw.

Jim Graves took command in the hurdle events as he ran for victories in the 120 high hurdles and 440 intermediate hurdles. He was also the only double winner in the meet.

The runners for the second consecutive meet provided the decisive factor in the Redmen victory. Ron Harris won his fourth consecutive 220, placed second in the 100 and was a member of the victorious 440 relay team.

Doug O'Connell continued to play a major role in the success of the distance team as he finished second in the mile and two-mile. Both of O'Connell's performances broke freshman records. The Redmen also captured the relay double with victories in the 440 and mile relay.

New Track Facility Big Bonus To UMass

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

In the circles of track, and field, just as in competitive sports of football and the like, there is always such a thing as a home court advantage. Lacking one is almost absurd and unheard of. For without the proper facilities and tools of the trade, the chances are great that you won't make it.

One of the rare and unique exceptions from out of the pages of New England collegiate track history is the case of UMass. Without a track of which they could call their very own, the Redmen were forced to improvise in order to mold a respectable contingent.

They did so for five years prior to now. And the obstacles they encountered along the way took quite a toll. To compensate lost time for the runners, truck trips to Amherst College's cinder track was the next best thing to home. When these arrangements could not otherwise be made, running was confined to the intramural fields behind Boyden.

Weightmen relegated their practice sessions strictly to the Boyden fields while the jumpers traveled to Amherst College Cage. If practice demands could not be met in this manner, it was usually left up to the athlete to gradually work himself into condition with each meet.

The impact of unconventional practice style attributed greatly to the breakdown in the team togetherness amongst the coaches and athletes. Quite often they had to split themselves into six or seven different places for workouts.

Track Coach Ken O'Brien commented that the lack of team unity was quite indeed a major problem, but insisted that it was the crux of a few other hardships and incapabilities.

"Sprinters rarely acquainted themselves with distance runners and the gap of communication was simply greater between runners and weightmen. When it was time to get on the bus and head for the meet there was no kind of awareness or development of any kind of bond of team togetherness.

"Obviously the disadvantage of all meets being scheduled away posed other problems. Traveling caused many of our athletes to miss a lot of class time. Some of the guys became pretty uncomfortable to make it up. In many instances during any one given meet we had to leave several members at home because of academic pressures of missing tests and what not.

"There were other small things--everybody likes to run infront of people they know. There's a home court advantage in any sport. Also, there was the obvious disadvantage in recruiting since we didn't have anything to show the aspiring student athlete."

Despite the poor conditions which hovered about the track team in their years without a track, success was with them. In '66, and '69 they landed YanCon crowns in spring track. In so doing they boasted such standout athletes as middle distance men John Anderson, Greg Bowman, Terry Carpenter; distance runners Paul Hoss, Charley Long, Ronnie Wayne' jumpers Bill Tindall, Cal Carpenter; weightmen Eddie Arcaro and Dick Ward; and many more.

As O'Brien puts it: "We had good success even in those years. I think when people are put in a situation like that inspite of all those particular hardships, you know that their enthusiasm and interest in the sport are very genuine.

"It's almost guaranteed in knowing that the people on the team are going to be champions. The marginal type athlete most often dropped off the team and those who remained were possessors of championship caliber attitude."

With the completion of an all purpose-all weather track this past October, the implicated problems have been overcome and so much the better for the UMass track squad. It was about a five year delay from the time the initial idea was proposed until its actual completion. Reasons for delay stem from the length of time it took the state legislature to okay the appropriation of money and several revisions made in the original blue prints so that the track could meet olympic standards.

Some of the features of the new complex include a 440yd. running oval comprised of eight lanes, each are four feet in length. The 120 yd. sprint and hurdle straight-away is lined with bleachers for the fans' convenience. The infield includes a 55 foot apron area which accomodates all the latest styles of high jumping.

Two runways with long jump landing pits on either end are of advantage in the event of a change in wind direction. The steeple chase water jump is situated on infield located on a field adjacent to the track. It's easy for the spectators to view and assists the administration in coverage.

The synthetic "all weather sports surface", customized by American Biltrite Company of Boston, was built to withstand the extremes of New England weather and enables the athletes to start competition at any time.

O'Brien regards the new facility as the best in New England and one of the best in the east. "Dozens of coaches rave about the track and haven't even seen it. If word travels around that fast in a week then I'm very optimistic about its future potential," he declared.

In the short space of time that the track has been in use a number of favorable changes have taken place. There has been a marked increase in the turnout for track this year, the recruiting aspect has looked as favorable as ever, and the Redmen have been impressive at home particularly in their big win last week against UConn. It all goes to show you that if you work with something better, your performance will be enhanced in all directions.

This spring the Yankee Conference Championships will be held here in Amherst for the first time since 1960. Plans are also being unveiled for the state high school championships, New England meet and New England A.A.U. Championships. O'Brien also hopes that future programs available to young athletes of the state in the summer will generate a greater interest in the track program.

"I think that this is one of the best track facilities in Massachusetts, New England, or the east for that matter. Therefore, being a state university it's one of our functions to serve Massachusetts, whether secondary school or college wise. It's our obligation to encourage the students to utilize this facility in track and field by developing special programs. We can service the entire state itself by offering a finer facility to compete on."

What exactly does the track facility offer to the up and coming harriers? O'Brien answers that with a snap. "There will be a marked increase in the people who want to compete against us, namely schools like Brown, Dartmouth, Harvard, Yale, and Syracuse. By competing against better schools the athlete will achieve higher, in so doing we're creating a better medium.

"With the new track we'll expose the university to more prople. This is a step in the positive direction. I think by having the facility track can become a more socially satisfying experience, as well as satisfying the individual needs and accomplishments."

Redmen Sweep Three

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

Showing overall team balance and depth the UMass varsity baseball team took three games from Maine at Earl Lorden Field this past weekend by scores of 12-1, 7-3, and 5-3. The wins upped UMass' record to 15-4 and boosted them into first place in the Yankee Conference as Connecticut split its Saturday doubleheader with UNH.

In the first game on Friday afternoon it was Tom White going the distance as the Redmen exploded for twelve runs while Maine's only score came on a home run by thirdbaseman Bill West in the fourth. White was not as sharp as usual but nevertheless struck out fourteen Black Bears while giving up nine hits.

Aside from the homerun by West, White's only trouble spot came in the second inning. Shortstop Dennis Libby and West led the inning off with singles to give Maine runners on first and third with no outs. But White struck out the next two batters and got the last man on a grounder to third.

Batting stars in Friday's game were Dan Esposito, Jack Conroy, and Mark Palau. Esposito went three for four including two home runs one of which cleared the fence in centerfield at the 405 mark.

Palau was three for three and Conroy went two for three. The swift second baseman also stole two bases as did Centerfielder Charlie Manley.

Tom King was the winner in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader going five innings and giving up three runs, all unearned.

With the score tied 3-3 in the sixth Jack Bernardo came in to pitch and held Maine scoreless for the last four innings while the Redmen scored four times to ice their 7-3 decision.

Providing the offensive punch in this game were Esposito with two singles and a triple, Conroy with two singles, and Tom McDermott with a double and a triple.

The third game was the only really close game of the series and the only game in which the Redmen were ever behind. After scoring single runs in the second and third UMass fell behind 3-2 in the fourth when starter Chip Baye lost his control.

Baye walked three batters, hit one, and threw a wild pitch before being rescued by freshman John Olson. Olson held the Black Bears in check while the Redmen came back.

In the bottom of the fifth with the bases loaded Brian Martin laced a single to left with two runs scoring to give UMass a 4-3 lead.

The Redmen got an insurance run in the eighth when Ed McMahon walked, stole second, and came home on Olson's single.

MIGHTY WHITE-Tom White delivers one of his many blazers in Friday's complete game, 14-strikeout performance over Maine. The sophomore lefty went the route for the third straight time. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

Olson held down the Black Bears until the ninth inning when with one out he walked two batters. Then for the second time that day Bernardo came in and finished up, getting Livingston on strikes and Corey on a grounder to second.

DIAMOND DUST—First baseman Dan Esposito was 7 for 11 over the weekend with a triple, two homeruns, and six runs batted in....Jack Conroy sprained his ankle in the second game on Saturday and is doubtful for Monday's game at Williams....Coach Dick Berquist was pleased with his team's performance and felt that the wins showed UMass' depth, especially in pitching and catching...Monday the starting pitcher will be either Lou Colabello or Tom Austin.

Golfers Capture YanCon

By ALAN WRIGHT
MDC Staff

Probably every coach's primary objective is to win his league championship and Golf Coach Dick Page has been no exception, as his group of varsity linksters successfully defended their Yankee Conference crown last Friday by compiling the low team medal score of 479.

UConn, the team that defeated the Redmen golfers in a tri match just one week before this 23rd annual Yankee Conference Championships, was a distant second with a team total score of 489. The other state teams turned this year's tournament into the closest ever, though, as Rhode Island submitted a team score of 490 while Maine posted a 491 and New Hampshire and Vermont both turned in a 495.

Pleasant Valley Country Club, a long layout with enormous greens, was playing tough for every member of the 42 man field on Friday. The 17th hole was especially difficult for UMass, as none of the Redmen linksters were able to manage a par of 4 on it. Junior Rick Towle was almost ready to throw his clubs away on that impossible hole, as he hit into water as well as being penalized a couple of strokes out of bounds. He ended up with a nine on the hole and an 85 for the round, which is much higher than his average for the season.

George Perry of Rhode Island was the tournament's medalist with a 75. For UMass, medalist honors went to Dick King, who shot a 77. Art Ceconi and Ed Puzas were close behind with scores of 78 and 79 respectively, while Mike Minkos and Dave Salter had 80's. Dave Salter really provided the spark that the team needed, as he finished off the front nine with an 8 over par 44, but really got hot on the back nine with a 36.

On Saturday, the golfers continued their winning ways by defeating St. Anselm's away 6-1. Mike Minkos and Dick King were really hitting the ball well that afternoon. They both shot rounds of 73, the lowest team scores recorded in match play this year.

Today, UMass takes on Worcester Polytechnical Institute and M.I.T. at 2:00 in Worcester. This will be their last tri-match before the New England Championships, which will be held on Thursday at Ellington Ridge C.C. in Vernon, Conn. This tournament gets under way at 8:00 in the morning and involves 36-hole medal play. Coach Page will be in quite a dilemma as he has to choose only 5 golfers out of his starting seven to send down.

Netmen Edge URI For YanCon Title

MDC Staff

ORONO, MAINE-Up went the URI lob, and as the ball drifted back towards the baseline, Fred Braley and Steve Ferber raced back with it just to make sure. As the ball bounced some five feet past the endline, seven UMass netmen let the rest of Orono know who had won the title. The UMass netmen had themselves the 1971 Yankee Conference Championships, and it couldn't have been closer as the final match of the tournament decided the 19-18 UMass win over URI.

The weekend tournament saw a superlative team effort combine to give Coach Stephen Kosakowski yet another conference title, and this one point victory was perhaps the sweetest of them all.

No one player could take the credit for this win, as Kosakowski commented, "It was truly a team performance. Every man down the line came through, and we needed every single point. They did a great job."

In dethroning the URI Rams, the Redmen never had breathing room, and in fact the UConn coach, upon leaving early Saturday morning, before the tournament was over, had congratulated the URI coach upon his victory.

But such was not to be the outcome, as the match stood at URI 18, UMass 17 going into the final rounds of second and third doubles. Both matches pitted UMass against URI, and had the Rams won either they would have taken the championship back to Kingston.

John Bloom and Chris Coffin extended their unbeaten string at second doubles, and the 6-4, 6-2 win tied the match. Then Braley and Ferber, the last UMies out on the courts triumphed 6-3, 6-4 as the players ran out onto the court to celebrate the upset.

If any one individual could be singled out as doing an extraordinary job, it would have to be Captain Al Goldberg. Goldberg has had a relatively poor season and has been hampered by numerous injuries and interruptions all season long. But last Friday and Saturday he put on a truly spectacular performance. Last year Goldberg also captured the number one singles spot in the championships, but this year it meant quite a bit more.

The first match for Goldbeg was a pushover, but from there it was murder. TedConnertona URI boy, was next in line. Earlier this season Goldberg lost to Connerton in straight sets, but nothing of the like was to happen up in Maine. Winning 6-1, 4-6, 6-2 Goldberg had done more than advance himself into the finals; he had shut off URI, giving them no points in the first singles position.

Robert Webman, playing at second singles, chipped in beautifully with a first round win, and subsequently dropped a close three setter. Then the remaining four positions found UMass with byes, and in the second round of play John Bloom, Fred Braley, and Mark Brass advanced. Steve Ferber at fourth singles, came out short of a 6-3, 0-6, 6-1 decision, leaving the Redmen with four men in the finals.

Doubles time, and Goldberg and Brass put UConn under in straight sets. The second round put the first doubles pair against two URI toughies, as Connerton got partial revenge for his earlier loss in singles.

UConn got knocked off twice by Redmen doubles teams. First the powerhouse combo of Bloom and Coffin, then the third doubles pair of Braley and Ferber, made shambles of the Huskies.

As Friday came to a close the Rams and the Redmen were knotted at 14 points. Vermont was a surprising third with 9 points, but they were mathematically eliminated come Friday night.

Four men from UMass, and four men from URI had reached the finals, and in two matches the frontrunners were to meet in head-on matches. Doubles found all three URI teams in the last round, while UMass sent two teams out on the courts for the Saturday afternoon finale.

With early morning rain threats, much akin to the late Friday aftermoon showers that temporarily interrupted play, seven Redmen headed out to the Maine campus with one thought on their minds, win that championship.

The rhetoric between UMass' Kosakowski, and URI's Norris, was as heavy as ever. Kosakowski, the old pro, was giving Norris bits as the match tightened. With the two coaches joking back and torth the Saturday matches began. First Kelly Luba of the Rams won, followed by Goldberg of UMass, Nesbitt of URI, and Braley of UMass. The match was still knotted, now at 16and the two singles confrontations were still in progress.

Third singles saw URI capture the lead as D'Amber squeaked by Bloom 7-5, 6-4. Then Brass came to the rescue, and recovering from a second set deficit of five games to two, roared back to take the 6-3, 7-5 decision.

All even again, and both Norris and Kosakowski were getting pretty edgy, to say nothing of the players. Doubles began in the brilliant sunshine at 12 noon, and as URI's powerhouse first doubles team won handily, UMassrealizedthat both doubles matches were necessary for victory. And that's exactly what they got.

Emotions were high, and cries of bliss rang out over the Orono campus as URI's Moscowitz lobbed the ball deep of the baseline. As Braley and Ferber hopped over the net, the entire UMass squad came out to congratulate them, in the sweetest of wins.

What made the victory that much nicer was the fact that URI knocked off UMass in their duel meet 11 days ago 6-3, and the Rams currently have a 21 duel meet streak going.

But the Yankee Conference Championships left the Rhody Rams one point shy, and those 21 straight wins don't mean too much without the title.

The Redmen had it when they needed it, as one clutch victory after another made the long ride back from Orono a beautiful trip. How sweet it is.

Weather: Rain, rain, will it go away?

VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 136 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS TUESDAY, MAY 4, 1971

Fail To Halt Government

7000 Arrested In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP)-Young antiwar demonstrators failed to halt the pulse of government with traffic-stalling tactics Monday and were arrested in record numbers. Police said most still would be in jail Tuesday, unable to participate in the planned renewal of the protests.

Police Chief Jerry V. Wilson said in mid-afternoon that 7,000 had been arrested. A football practice field and a jail exercise yard were used to detain the prisoners while corrections officials looked for suitable accomodations. Their dinner was C-rations, supplied by the Pentagon.

The temporary jails were out-of-doors. The temperature was expected to drop into the 30's Monday night.

Disruption Not Heavy

"The disruption of the morning rush hour was not any more than a heavy rain," Wilson said.

Except for one trouble spot, in the vicinity of American University, homebound traffic was, if anything, faster and lighter than usual with police everywhere-and federal troops at the bridges-seeing to it that traffic kept moving.

At Ward Circle, at the edge of the university, there was an abortive attempt to stall cars, but police intervened quickly.

Rennie Davis Arrested

Rennie Davis, one of the Chicago 7 defendants and coordinator of the day's activities, was arrested by FBI agents Monday afternoon, charged with conspiring to interfere with the exercise of constitutional rights by citizens of the capital and its suburbs.

Earlier he had told a news conference "We feel that we failed this morning to stop the United States government. In no way did we outmaneuver the police." He said, however, he saw something more profound, "The development of a people's organization."

Government agencies were hampered little, if any, increase in absenteeism. In many cases th demonstrations failed even to slow workbound employees.

Some Tactics Bomb

The tactics of standing on roads, blocking them with cars or construction materials, often resulted in tear gassings and some clubbing of young people. More than 100 were treated at area hospitals mostly for tear-gas related injuries.

The city's courts, resuming round-the-clock operations with eight judges sitting in as many rooms, were hard on the protestors.

$250 Bail

Judge Charles W. Halleck set bail at $250 for most of the first 20 to come before him. In other antiwar demonstrations the last two weeks 10 per cent of the bail has been accepted as collateral, but such was not the case Monday.

The defendants in the first group before Halleck were all charged under a disorderly conduct statute.

'We are processing them as expeditiously as we can," said Chief Wilson, but added "I would estimate that the vast majority would not be released by the morning rush hour."

'Government Provoked Violence'

Carl Zitlo, speaking for the People's Coalition, said "the violence was perpetrated by the police and the government. They tried to provoke us into retaliating with violence. It didn't happen." He said in some cases, rather than make arrests, "the tactic was to beat people. We were continually gassed when we tried to regroup."

Lawyer Philip Hirschkop, who represents many of those arrested, said 2,000 were being held in a compound "of the most primitive means at RFK Stadium." He charged the prisoners had been teargassed at least three times at the stadium."

The District of Columbia Corrections Department erected tents in the courtyard of the D.C. jail. Portable outdoor toilets were set up under Army supervision by the prisoners themselves.

'They've got their own little democracy over there and they voted on whether they put them up on the Army put them up. They decided if the Army'd show them how, they'd do it themselves. It's a real friendly bunch," said a spokesman for the department.

Late in the afternoon, the Army began taking prisoners from Washington detention areas to Ft. Belvoir, Va., where they were to be fed and housed in barracks, the Pentagon announced. Additional prisoners were being moved to other federal facilities.

4000 Troops In City

Some 4,000 federal troops were in the city, used mainly to guard bridges and public buildings. About 1,200 men from the 82nd Airborne Division were in readiness at RFK Stadium and other units were on alert at nearby Andrews AFB. They were to be rotated with troops on duty in the capital.

There were sporadic acts of vandalism. Sen. Paul Fannin, (R-Ariz.), said one of his tires was punctured by demonstrators who surrounded his car on Constitution Avenue.

At 20th and F Streets, demonstrators ripped out lamp post stanchions and hurled two at parked cars. Garbage cans were tossed into streets and some mail boxes were uprooted from their concrete moorings.

Senators Express Dismay

Senate leaders expressed dismay at the turn of events.

"I don't know what they hope to gain by these tactics that have turned off all the sympathizers they had that I know of around here," said Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania.

"I do not believe in a philsophy that would presume to change a government by tearing it down," said his Democratic counterpart, Mike Mansfield of Montana.

Sen. Edward Muskie, (D-Maine) said he was troubled "at the tactics of confrontation and disruptions" and praised the metropolitan police. Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) said "the cause of peace is being damaged by violence."

THIS IS THE WAY IT WAS-The demonstraions in Washington last weekend drew a record number of people to the capitol. Demonstrations that were planned to shut down the capitol this week were met with stiff police control as 7,000 were arrested. (MDC photo by Rich Hinckley)

UMass Student Reports:

Agents Ignite Violence

By JIM GOLD
MDC Staff

Although the press image of the Washington demonstrations shows incidents of scattered violence, it is mostly being done by many undercover agents, said Tim Ney of Free University who is in Washington working with a video tape group.

Ney said in a special telephone interview from Washington that many students from UMass were busted along with other western Mass., Connecticut, and Rhode Island students.

Describing the overall picture as intense, Ney told of the many gassing incidents and the mass arrests.

"They're using a lot of gas" on the crowd he said, explaining how the police closed in on yesterday's target areas of Mount Vernon and DuPont Circle.

Ney felt that the police were randomly picking off 'hippie-looking' types. He said that the police were trying "to lock up as many kids as possible." He said that of the 7,000 arrested yesterday, 2000-3000 were being kept in "sort-of concentration camps" with "no food, water, or shelter. None have been booked or arraigned" he added.

He did not blame "the big media image" on the "big media" itself. He claimed that the police wait so that the "big media people are not in the area when brutal things happen." He said that those with whom he is working are a smaller unit and "much more mobile," so they can record these largely unreported incidents.

As they were walking toward Mt. Vernon, Ney said that a large number of civil defence cops started at the crowd. His group turned and walked in the opposite direction still carrying the taping equipment, he said. They were arrested and put in one of the fenced off areas, he explained. Later, when NBC came in to tape, they just got close to them and walked away wity wo with the NBC crew, Ney explained.

It was then, said Ney, when he sent tapes back to Al Dickinson of WTOY who should be getting them soon and will make arrangements to show them.

Ney reported that the Mayday collective office which has been used for the planning center of the week's activities has just about been completely closed down and that Rennie Davis has been arrested on conspiracy charges.

Several streets around the George Washington University area had to be closed because of fear of demonstrators and the "amazing amount of gassing" that has been going on, Ney reported.

He said that there were a lot of "familiar faces" and that a number of people from Roadarte, Clearing House, and Room To Move had been arrested.

Most of the demonstrators are expected to be booked on either disorderly conduct or disruption of civil liberties charges, said Ney. Ney added that bail will run as high as $250 per person, and financial support will probably be needed.

In earlier actions Elsie Newman, exchange student from California and resident of Butterfield was arrested. Her $250 bail was raised by residents in her dorm.

A telephone interview with Mrs. Leroy Sandwen of Annendale New Jersey, mother of the UMass Student Senate President, revealed that Lee after being in Washington was at his parents home sound asleep at 10 o'clock EDT. She said that he will probably return to Amherst sometime today. She did not wish to wake him.

Ney also explained that the major confrontation of the day had been at DuPont Circle. He said that the Marines who landed were not needed and, leaving National Guardsmen on duty in the business district, left shortly after arrive.

If You Havn't Been Published Yet...

An All-Comers poetry meet will be held in the Council Chambers of the Student Union on Thursday May 13 starting at 7:30 and continuing until they run out of poets.

The name All-Comers poetry meet was lifted from track meets held on the west coast where any competitors of any caliber are free to participate.

This event is organized by Tom Derderian, local unpublished poet, who says of the event "What is needed in this area is an outlet for poet creeps like me who haven't published. There are plenty of outlets for published poets but no choice but between publishing an anonymity for folk poets." Derderian explained that by folk poets he meant those who use poetry to commorate personal or public events. "Poetry must not all be a meloncholy attempt at profoundity." Derederian added.

This thought on the part of the organizers of this event, a group of undergraduates, came as an aftermath of the Poetry Festival and the Dada Surrealist thing. Bert Baker another student poet, made this observation, "Out of 30,000 students in this valley there are at least 15,000 unpublished poets." Joseph Langland of the English Dept. calls this area a "hotbed" of poetry.

This All-Comer Meet will be organized along the same lines as an open hoot in folk singing circles. Performers will be given a 15 minute set to read their work in the order they sign up as they arrive.

"Its like the town of Eugene, Oregon," says Derderian, "they have the best bunch of middle distance runners in the world...and they have the most joggers. If this area is to attract and develope national and international caliber poets there must be a popular base to support and breed them. In Eugene the whole thing feeds upon itself...they have fantastic attendance at the track meets and they've had 4 sub-four minute miles in the same race. We'd like to see this area develope some sub-four minute poets."

Conference Here May 7-9

Harambe Aids Third World

Recently the leaders of the "Third World Countries" have been uniting in various ways, in an attempt to trade their produce to the "Imperialistic block". The oil, bauxite, sugar, bananas, coffee, producing countries have formed various organizations and made a number of agreements among themselves in an attempt to negotiate a reasonable price for the commodities that they trade with the Imperialistic block.

The students involved in "HARAMBE" thought it would be a good idea for third world students to begin making some effort in establishing some form of communication among themselves. Consequently they tried to organize a conference dealing with one of the many contemporary issues relating to the general third world struggle. 'Pan-Africanism' will be the theme of the conference which will be held here at the UMass Campus Center, and which will run from May 7-9.

What is meant by Pan-Africanism? What is meant by the term "Third World"? Who profits from keeping the Third World in a perpetual state of underdevelopment? Why is the "Third World" regarded as the most powerful block in the area of international politics? There is no doubt that there are numerous answers that people would supply for these questions. Some people will say that Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean are underdeveloped because there is a general shortage of capital and lack of expertise. That the developed countries do not make any profits from their investment in the Third World Countries. All these answers and others of the kind are nothing but twentieth century myths that needs to be replaced by the truth. One of the ways that you can go about learning the truth about the relation between the Third World countries and the Imperialistic Countries and some additional facts is for you to come out in numbers to the conference on May 6-9.

A cordial invitation is extended to all concerned individuals and even the unconcerned ones are invited to stop in.

All Things Considered...

A program that introduced a new force in radio broadcasting was aired on WFCR at 5:00 last night. Entitled All Things Considered, it is a new approach to news broadcasting and, fittingly, the debut program of the National Public Radio Network.

Since the demise of Metromedia, the station had been unable to carry adequate news service. All Things Considered will not only fill in this gap, it treats news reporting both as a day-to-day affair and as an in-depth idea much like the magazine-format shows on television.

The show will be working in an attempt at a "sound experience," according to programming manager Arthur Cohen; they are trying for a format where themes will flow more naturally than on the traditional "factual" news program. The emphasis will not necessarily be on political events, said Cohne; in terms of viewpoint and in attitude, this will be an experiment in a journalism of a broader scope.

The first program, aired last night, spent about forty minutes on the Mayday protests. There was a minimum of "news bureau reporting;" instead, the program was constructed mostly from tapes of interviews with people who were there. Demonstrators were appalled at what was apparently severe police over-reaction, but there were also tapes of policemen who felt trapped by the sporadic violence from fringe groups, and of federal workers who registered their varying sympathies. The feeling the program was striving for consisted of more involvement with the people who were most affected by the situation, rather than simply knowing the facts and numbers.

All Things Considered will continue to be a feature on WFCR from Monday through Friday at 5:00.

Sylvan Area Offers Another Alternative

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

"Room choosing for the Sylvan Residential Area", Steve Dimock, Northeast Area Coordinator, announced today, "will be hall this week. This area includes newly-constructed Cashin, Brown, and MacNamara.

Interested parties are asked to register in the main lobby of Cashin. The Northeast Area Students and Staff recommend that "Students who do not have a group to move in with, or who are not very gregarious, should not consider the Sylvan Area as a resident hall alternative."

Bob Campbell, Assistant Area Coordinator, said that Sylvan "opened a whole new set of problems for which we are unable to anticipate results." These problems include security and increased student damage. He also explained that the new co-ed arrangements would be by alternate suites. "Every suite," he continued, "is a self-contained entity." He termed the reluctance of people to visit other people's suites as "territoriality".

Steve Dimock projected plans "to provide better faseilities for socializing outside of the suites."

Marc Doherty, former resident of Thatcher and presently of Cashin, describes the "alienation". "A lot of friendships broke down. Thatcher people have a different background". He also sighted the problem of creating and establishing a dorm government. Plans for establish an areal government are as yet indefinite.

The suites themselves have inconveniences. There are no kitchens except one on the main floor. Dimock calls this "faulty planning."

He also had suggestions for a future staff committee. Right now this staff consists of three heads of resident for four hundred and fifty students.

"We have a written proposal to extend the staff to act officially with the coordinator and the assistant coordinator." Dimock added. "a graduate assistant, a secretary, and a house officer, and resident directors in the dorm. Eight dorm assistants, one for each floor."

Bob Campbell concluded by saying that "Sylvan has a lot of potential for a good life style when the people know what they are getting into. This is not a panacea, but it offers an option."

Kent Memorial Quiet

KENT, Ohio (AP)—Reminders of last year's violence at Kent State University were everywhere, but all was quiet on the campus Monday as a four-day memorial observance continued for the four students killed in a confrontation with National Guard troops.

Only a handful of students walked along the commons where the four students were felled by the fatal volley of National Guard gunfire and where nine others were injured.

About 5,000 students walked along the commons where the four students were felled by the fatal volley of National Guard gunfire and where nine others were injured.

About 5,000 students nearly filled the campus gymnasium for a speech by comedian and civil rights activist Dick Gregory.

"Why in hell doesn't Nixon and all them freaks threaten dope pushers in America like they threaten demonstrators," Gregory asked, referring to the arrests Monday of thousands of antiwar demonstrators in Washington.

"You youngsters bog a big job," he said. "You are saying to us old folks, 'no more lies.' We've been living in a mess and you're forcing us to see reality."

Hand-painted signs seemed to indicate that students were remembering the deaths and are concerned about the possibility of more violence this year.

Dormitory windows displayed signs such as "Keep Kent All In One Peace" and "Kent State United."

Thompson Mocks Award Before Lecture

Pulitzer Prizes 'A Dime A Dozen'

By ROB NESTI
MDC Staff

Lawrence Thompson, who yesterday won the Pulitzer Prize in Biography for his second volume on Robert Frost, respon. led to the honor with "rhetoric mock seriousness" before lecturing on Frost's poetry last night on campus.

In a humorous reference to Frost's "Stopping By The Woods On A Snowy Evening," Thompson said, "It's all very nice about the Pulitzer Prize, but I must get on with my lecture."

At a coffee hour which followed the English Department sponsored lecture, Thompson winced at being called an "instant celebrity" for receiving the award.

"These days Pulitzer Prize winners are a dime a dozen", the Princeton professor noted and, although he was "delighted at being selected by the awards committee," he did not want the event taken out of perspective.

The 55th annual awards were presented yesterday by the trustees of Columbia University on recommendation of an advisory board. Each award is $1,000 except for the meritorious service award.

Thompson teaches at Princeton University and is now working on the third and final volume on the life of Frost. His research often takes him to this area where Frost spent some of his time.

His lecture was concerned less with Frost's life and more with his poetry, although it was interspersed with anecedotes about the poet's life.

One of the wittier of these was one Thompson told about Frost's reaction to fans who asked him to further explain his poetry. When in this situation, Thompson said, Frost would remark, "If I wanted to tell you more than I did I would have done so in the poem."

It was this cryptic quality to Frost's poetry which Thompson addressed himself. He cited examples in letters, works and personal incidents of the poet's life, which supported his argument that Frost was purposely cryptic and vague when dealing with certain

Lawrence Thompson

He was "especially secretive about his religious beliefs," Thompson explained. The reasons for this was that Frost throughout his life was faced with strong arguments against religion from his family and friends.

If we are to understand Frost, the professor concluded, "we must interpret him as a religious poet."

Thompson spoke with faculty and students at the coffee hour which followed in Memorial Hall.

Students Honored At Activities Night

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

Amidst political commentary on the relevance of the occasion, the contributions of over 50 "student leaders" were recognized last night as students, faculty and administrators gathered in the Campus Center Auditorium for "University Activities Night".

Adelphia and Mortar Board Honor Societies made their presentations at the meeting, as did the Maroon Keys and Scrolls, Arcon, Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sigma Sigma (service groups). The Southwest Patriots and Revelers tapped their new members while Program Council, Distinguished Visitor Program and the Interim Concerts committee lauded their hardworking members.

Several deserving seniors named in the presentation for Who's Who and the Distinguished Senior Awards, were presented their awards by Assistant Dean of Students Gerald Scanlon, and Chancellor Oswald Tippo and Dean of Students William Field respectively. Collegian, Index and WMUA representatives acknowledged the tribute paid to their organizations for their role on campus.

Asst. Dean Gerry Scanlon

The political commentary came from Peter Pascarelli, former editor of the Collegian, and Tom Leavitt, editor of the Index. In effect they questioned that the real students leaders were present at the gathering.

"The real student leaders are in Washington," Pascarelli said

Levitt reiterated his words adding that some are in Vietnam, too.

Dean Field refuted the aspersions cast at the students being honored, saying "The strength of the University is its entire life; students should be where they can do the most good, whether it be Belchertown or Washington."

Echoing his sentiments, Pat Beharry, mistress of ceremonies and speaking for the Student Senate, said that the people in Washington are not just leaders, but followers too—of Rennie Davis and others like him. Students being honored on the occasion were just followers of another kind...of people like Dave Poisson of the concerts committee and former 73 vice president and Norm Patch senior class president and member of numerous committees.

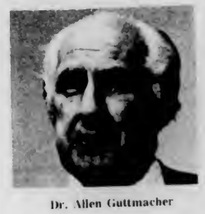
She emphasized the need for participation in campus activities, and concluded with an emtional appeal to students to act, not just criticize.

Rocky Hodgson, secretary-treasurer of the Student Union Governing Board, spoke in recognition of administrators efforts but berated students for non-involvement. His comments on apathy reflected statements made earlier in the day about less than 50% response to opening SUG board membership to the campus.

Speeches by leaders of the now defunct class governments tended mainly to laud the efforts of the "few who tried to make class government work."

In the annual Metawampe Award, Prof. Larry Johnson, from the School of Business Administration, and organizer of the CCEBS program, received an engraved plaque and a check for $1000.00. Chairman Bob Nelson presented the award.

Birth Control Methods Discussed Last Night



By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Dr. Alan F. Guttmacher, the President of Planned Parenthood-World Population, in a DVP-speech sponsored in Thompson 104 last night explained past and present methods of contraception and spoke in favor of legalized abortion in the United States.

The doctor gave a brief history of mankind's attempts to control fertility, citing references to the Bibles and ancient Egyptian writings, and stating that although methods of contraception and abortion have been known for thousands of years, only recently has this knowledge been "democratized" and distributed to the common people.

He evaluated methods of birth control methods in four main groups according to their effectiveness: 1) the pill, "about the best method of birth control available," with an effectiveness of one unplanned birth per 100 years of use, 2) condoms, diaphragm, and (I.U.D.'s), with an effectiveness of 2 to 5 per 100 years of use, 3) the rhythm method, based on the women's Basal Body Temperature, and 4) such mehods as withdrawal and rhythm not based on the Basal Body Temperature as least effective.

He then explained how each of these devices worked, saying that while the incidence of certain medical problems such as blood clotting do increase with the pill, they are still far below deaths from childbirth in an equal amount of women as took the pill. He also reported that the birth control pill was not believed to cause cancer on the basis of statistics available to this time, and said that there was no noticable effect on children of woman who had taken the pill for an extended period and then stopped.

Dr. Allen Guttmacher

Speaking on abortion, he told of the various attempts made by the Catholic Church to define when the soul entered the body, and to determine when it was murder to abort a pregnancy. He said that he felt a fetus was "a potential life" and was not alive until it was born and capable of existing independantly.

Speaking on the experience of New York State after it's legalization of abortion on demand, he said that the results were "very good" and that as a result of it illegal abortionists were going out of business. Furthermore, he said that it was eliminating racial prejudice where someone with "money or position would have a much better chance at an abortion." He also cited the examples of Japan and certain Eastern European countries which have been very successful with liberalized abortion laws.

Tomorrow's Moratorium Schedule Announced

The following schedule of events and activities for Wednesday has been decided upon by those students who took part in the discussions of the May 5th Moratorium Organizing Committee.

On Wednesday morning, leaflets will be distributed to students, urging their participation in the various workshops, rallies, vigils, and other activities planned for the day. This leafletting will be carried on from 8:00 am to 12 noon.

The workshops being conducted during the day will be located in several rooms of the campus Center, starting at 8:00 am and running until 6:00 pm in the evening. The topics of those workshops, and the time and place where they are being held, will be announced in the leaflets.

A memorial vigil will be held from 12:00 noon until 2 pm. This will take place on the sidewalk around the Common in downtown Amherst. It is being sponsored by the Valley Peace Center and the Amherst Regional High School. Leaflets will be distributed at the local stores and shopping centers which will provide the non-campus community with information about the significance of the day as well as request their participation in the events.

Members of the campus community will gather at the campus pond, beginning at 6:30 in the evening. There, candles will be distributed for a single-file march that will start about 7:00. The march will go from the campus pond down North Pleasant Street to the old Amherst Common located on Main Street (across from the old Junior High School-now the common School). A silent candlelight vigil will be held at 8:00 pm on the old town common.

Wednesday, May 5th has been set aside [illegible] a day of quiet reflection. The activities scheduled [illegible] the day have this fact as their prime concern. "This is a moratorium, not a strike. The May 5th Moratorium Organizing Committee urges the peaceful participation of all concerned members of the community, in a day that has been set aside to remember the young men and women who are serving and who have served in Southeast Asia and to remember the young men and women who lost their lives last May at Kent and Jackson States.

No Word From Hanoi

Nixon Agrees To POW Plan

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—President Nixon hopes North Vietnam will agree to a reported offer by the Swedish government for internment of prisoners of the Southeast Asian war in neutral territory, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Monday.

The statement was in response to a report by Agence France Press-AFP from Stockholm saying the Swedish government would be prepared to offer ships and territory to accomplish internment if the United States and Hanoi could agree on improving the lot of prisoners from both sides.

Nixon has said many times that American troops will remain in South Vietnam so long as American prisoners are held in the North.

Thus far Hanoi has expressed no interest in neutral internment of prisoners, and its negotiators in Paris were unavailable for comment Monday.

The South Vietnamese have proposed that sick and wounded prisoners of both sides, plus those imprisoned four years or more, be interned in a neutral country. The United States has concurred in this move, initiated at the Paris peace talks.

In Stockholm, the Swedish Foreign Office said Monday in a statement:

"We are of course willing to help in every way from a humanitarian standpoint but feel that a question of internment in a third country must first be negotiated between the parties directly concerned.

"North Vietnam and the United States have the option of making direct contacts at the Paris peace talks table to agree on this and relevant measures which can be referred to us."

Ziegler talked with newsmen just before Nixon returned to Washington after a four-day California stay. The President originally had planned to remain at his home here until Thursday.

Ziegler said Nixon concurred in advance with the police actions taken against protesters in Washington who had vowed to disrupt the operation of the federal government. Thousands of antiwar demonstrators were arrested Monday.

On Saturday, Ziegler said, Nixon telephoned the District of Columbia police chief, Jerry Wilson, saying he wanted police to deal fairly but firmly with demonstrators and to keep the city "open for business."

On prisoners' internment, the Swedish government in its April 30 response, as reported by AFP, was acting to a suggestion made two days earlier by U.S. Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird.

Ziegler said Nixon "noted with great satisfaction that according to press reports the government of Sweden has offered the use of its vessels and its territory to provide internment of prisoners of war from the conflict in Vietnam." Ziegler said Nixon "would hope that Hanoi will move promptly to negotiate an agreement on this issue to take advantage of this humanitarian offer."

The White House indicated that the Stockholm dispatch was sent around the world only by AFP.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif.-MARINE SENDOFF--This picture, released Saturday by the Marine Corps, was described by the Corps as showing President Nixon being lifted to the shoulders of Marines as he left the 1st Marine Division return ceremonies at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Friday. (AP Wirephoto)

Asked if the United States could vouch for the report's authenticity, Ziegler stated "I can't go beyond what I have said."

He said American diplomats in Stockholm haven't contacted the Swedish government. But, he said, "I'm sure that there will be diplomatic discussions with the Swedish government."

He gave this summary of the situation: "It comes down to this basic point: Hanoi must respond... if they are in any degree sincere" about humane treatment of prisoners and if they have "any conscience at all."

'Gamma Rays' Wins 1971 Pulitzer Prize

NEW YORK (AP)-The 1971 Pulitzer Prize for drama was won Monday by Paul Zindel's "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds," the second year in a row an off-Broadway play took the award.

There was no fiction prize bestowed this year, for the first time since 1964.

Sources close to the awards committee said Monday the three judges in that category each recommended a different book. The titles were not divulged.

In the field of journalism, cartoonist Paul Conrad of the Los Angeles Times was honored for the body of his work rather than for any single cartoon and became a rarity among winners-he won the same prize in 1964 while with the Denver Post.

The last recipient in a similar two-paper situation was Anthony Lewis, winner in national reporting in 1955 with the Washington Daily News, and again in 1963 after transferring to the New York Times.

The Winston Salem Journal & Sentinel won the 1971 award for meritorious service, for coverage of environmental problems, including a successful fight against a proposed strip-mining operation that would have destroyed the beauty of northwestern North Carolina.

The local general reporting award went to the staff of the Akron Beacon Journal for its performance under deadline pressure in piecing together the story of four Kent State University students shot to death during a confrontation with the Ohio National Guard.

Pictures taken at Kent State also won the spot news photography prize for John Paul Filo, 22. He was a student at the university, and had been a summer intern in photography for the Valley Daily News of Tarentum, Pa., and the Daily Dispatch of New Kensington, Pa. One of his widely published pictures showed a girl kneeling grief-stricken over the body of one of the slain Kent State students.

The Pulitzer Prize for national reporting went to Lucina Franks, 24, and Thomas Powers, 30, of United Press International. They reconstructed the life of 28-year-old Diana Oughton and traced the influences that turned her into a terrorist who was killed in the explosion of a Greenwich Village townshouse being used as a bomb factory.

Other Pulitzer awards for 1971 in the field of arts and letters included:

History-James MacGregor Burns' second volume in his political biography of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, entitled "Roosevelt: The Soldier of Freedom."

An Army combat historian in the Pacific in World War II, Burns is 52 and a professor of government at Williams.

Biography-Lawrence Roger Thompson, 65, of Princeton University, for his second volume in a biography of poet Robert Frost, "Robert Frost: The Years of Triumph, 1915-1938."

Poetry-William S. Merwin, 43, for the seventh volume of his poetry, "The Carrier of Ladders."

General nonfiction-John Toland, 58, who traveled for 15 months in the Far East doing research on his prize-winning book about Japan in World War II, "The Rising Sun."

Music-Mario Davidovsky, 36, composer and lecturer in music at Columbia University, for his "Synchronisms No. 6" for piano and electronic sound, first performed at last summer's Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

How To Fill A Stadium In Washington, D.C.

By GREGG HERRINGTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—It was 5:25 a.m. EDT, not yet dawn, when the two-way radio in the city's police headquarters opened the barrage everyone knew was coming.

The Whitehurst Freeway that extends only a dozen blocks from the Georgetown section to downtown was the first major target of the thousands who came to protest the war in Vietnam.

"The Whitehurst Freeway is blocked at Canal Road," came an officer's monotone. He did not have to say what it was that was going on there.

"Canal Road and Whitehurst must be cleared," the unseen radio man at headquarters confirmed as police units sped on their way.

It was a good 40 minutes earlier than organizers of the massive civil disobedience said their action would start.

A moment later the nearby Francis Scott Key Bridge was the scene of another mob threatening to keep Virginia commuters from crossing the Potomac River to their jobs in Washington as cogs in the wheel of federal government.

Those first crowds were larger and earlier than had generally been expected. Ten minutes later came the first hint that at least some were also more violent than certain leaders of the action had predicted.

"Advise motorcycle and scooter men that they are stringing wire across Canal Road," was the warning.

Then, in rapid succession, crowds of chanting, sign-carrying youths dirty from several days of camping-out appeared near other bridges, major intersections, and government buildings.

Groups of 200, 300 and 400 at a single intersection were not unusual. A thousand were reported in one place.

6:10 a.m.: "Gas is being used on Prospect St. in Georgetown.

6:14 a.m.: "Police at New York and New Jersey Avenues need assistance immediately. There are one thousand here."

6:26 a.m.: "Disregard field arrest forms," when it was decided there was not enough time to handle paper work on the scene.

6:49 a.m.: "They have Georgetown completely bottled up and are commencing to turn over the cars in that area."

And so it went for the next several hours.

At 7:31 a.m. they ran out of buses to haul away prisoners and began taking them away in Army trucks.

Twenty-five minutes later they were out of jail space and started taking prisoners to the Washington Redskins' practice football field and a D.C. jail exercise yard.

A Distracting Ride...

By TONY GRANITE
MDC Staff

COMING DISTRACTIONS is the way they headline listings of campus events in The Northern Star of Northern Illinois U.

The first item in a recent column announced an all-day chess tournament.

MEANWHILE, in the UDenver Clarion, the approaching end-of-term blues was expressed in a page-one box as "Within today's Clarion, you will find little worth reading except perhaps for the first page and maybe a few odds and ends on the editorial pages. Can you blame us?...Monday's issue was excellence of a sort that we really couldn't repeat too soon. Besides, it's Spring."

And the sap is running.

NEW EDITORS HAVE NEW IDEAS during this season when campus publications change staffs, it is always interesting to note their words of wisdom...especially when the typesetter conspires to confusion.

The gremlins in the print shop of the Atlantic Sun of Florida Atlantic U., did this to the new editor, when he announced to the campus that "We're going to try to be a more relevant paper by delivering more into the social issues."

CUMES AND CLASS RANK ABOLISHED at Vassar has been reported by the misc, campus newspaper.

The faculty there recently voted to abolish both the system of cumulative averages for each student and the designation of class rank on the basis of the cumes.

Two basic reasons for the change are that pass-fail courses render the cume meaningless; and the system conceals such things as scholastic improvement after a freshman year of adjustment.

Under a new system of grading, only semester and yearly averages will be recorded on transcripts.

BOOK RENTAL PROPOSAL DIED at Missouri state institutions, recently, when the State Senate's Committee on Higher Education refused to vote on a bill to set up a book rental system for University students.

The system would have cost each student about $17 per semester. Publishing companies lobbied against the measure, "listing all the horrors that would result from it--the main horror being loss of profit," the bill's sponsor told the UMissouri Maneater.

The Missouri Bookstore was said to have made $177,000 in profits from textbook sales in 1970.

The Committee's public reason for killing the measure was that "To cover the cost of a book, teachers would be required to assign it for a certain number of years."

BAT GIRLS "IN" ON BALL FIELD at Mankato (Minn) State, says the Daily Reporter, in announcing that coeds will replace the traditional bat boys serving the Indians nine.

Chosen by members of the team, the paper said, "Three Mankato State coeds will serve as batgirls, wearing the official MSC baseball uniform that has been properly adjusted to fit each properly."

The paper also pointed out that "While there is excitement about the team's added curves, the new baseball field itself is one that pleases Coach Jean McCarthy."

Wow! Babes, bats and bases-all loaded.

ARE COLLEGES OBSOLETE? They've been debating the question in the pages of The Highlander of UCal-Riverside.

Three negatives listed include: "Colleges no longer serve the function of creating an intellectual elite."

"Colleges no longer serve the purpose of acting as a clearing house for employers."

"...universities nowadays kill the motivation to learn."

ARE COMMENCEMENT SPEAKERS OBSOLETE? Northeastern U. thinks so, according to a page one report in the Northeastern News.

When the Board of Trustees rejected a list of proposed speakers President Asa S. Knowles said, "On a hot day in the Arena, it's an ordeal to sit for four hours. There's just too much restlessness in the audience."

Is no tradition sacred? Like the right to be bored?

C.O. Talk Tonight

"Conscientious Objection-What it is!-What it is not!" is the subject of a forum to be held Tuesday, May 4th at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The Newman Club is sponsoring this program in order to inform young men of draft age of their legal and moral rights under the Selective Service laws. Particular emphasis will be placed on the Catholic Conscientious Objector, but will include considerations of all faiths.

The panel of experts will feature The Reverend Ronald T. Evans, Chaplain of the Northfield School, Northfield, Massachusetts. Mr. Evans was a Draft Counselor for the Yale Religious Ministry and for the New Haven Draft Information Center. He is a member of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objection and a Draft and Military Counselor with the American Friends Service Committee.

Rev. Ronald Evans

On the panel to clarify the position of the Catholic Church on Conscientious Objection will be The Reverend John A. Koonz, Secretary of the Priests' Senate of the Diocese of Springfield and Administrator of St. John's Parish, Millers Falls, Massachusetts.

Introducing the panel members will be Donald A. Shea of the University of Massachusetts Newman Club. The event is open to the public with no admission charge.

Rights. Responsibilities Court System Panel Topic

To complete a four-part series on rights and responsibilities under the law, there will be a panel on the court system, tonight from 7 to 9 p.m., in the Amherst Regional Junior High School Auditorium.

Panelists will include Atty. David Burres, member and former chairman of the Hampden County Civil Liberties Union, and commissioner for the Western area of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, and Atty. Richard Howland, attorney for the student body and general counsel for the Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts.

Sponsors of the series include the University of Massachusetts Center for Business and Economic Research; Continuing Education Division, Human Relations Council, Housing Authority and Chamber of Commerce, all of Amherst; The Citizens Review Commission, the Hampshire County Board of Realtors, Hampshire County Civil Liberties Union, and Hampshire County Bar Association.

The session is free of charge to the public.

Program Council To Sponsor Student Industry Day May 12

The Campus Center Program Council is sponsoring a Student Industries Day on May 12, 1971 from 10:00 A.M. to 11:00 P.M., on the third level terrace of the Campus Center. Rain location will be the 2nd floor concourse. At this time students will be able to sell their crafts. A similar program was held during Winter Carni and was very successful. In the interest of all students we would like to offer this opportunity and hope that sales of this kind will continue to be held in the future.

Admission to this event is open to any student of the University or to any RSO group. All profits from sales of materials or services may be retained by the student or group. This will be a one day only affair and all material must be removed before you leave the area. The Program Council cannot be reponsible for any items lost or stolen. Electricity, etc. can be provided.

Applications will be available on Friday, April 30 in the Student Activities Area on the first floor of the Campus Center. They must be completed and turned in by Friday, May 7. Any questions can be referred to Janet Walker or Don Cann in the Program Council Office or at 5-2418.

We hope this will be successful and fun for all students here at the University.

Greeks Will Try Mugbook Again

Do you remember traditions past? Some are best forgotten, but others are missed. One is the Freshman Mugbook--that little maroon-covered "laugh-provoker," "datemaker," and "remember-whener."

The Greek Council is planning and co-ordinating a new Freshman Mugbook for the Fall, as a service to the University community. The Mugbook will contain information about various community services and facilities essential for the duration of college life, and of course information about on-campus organizations, interest groups, media, sports, health facilities, and anything else students fell that freshmen will need to know.

All RSO groups, please check your mailboxes and fill in the questionnaires so that your organization will be represented. Any other special interest group or club that is not a member of RSO, who would like Mugbook space, should contact either Colleen Roche at 545-0320, or Tim Maki at 545-0192 for information.

All The Same

We are all well aware of what has happened in the last 48 hours in our nation's capitals. The tales of mass arrests and wholesale gassings have reached even these isolated environs and the responses which have been evoked are strangely similar to those experienced one year ago tomorrow.

Civil disobediance is an extraordinary measure employed primarily in instances when all else seems to have failed. For that reason, Washington was the right place. However, people who participate in such an activity know full well, or should, the consequences of their actions, both legally and physically. Arrest should be expected.

Civil disobedience is also a human measure carried out by human beings and should be dealt with in a manner acceptable to those suppositions. Any government or group of power holders which must resort to extralegal and extramoral means to deal with such a situation is one doomed by its own weakness.

In Washington, those arrested have been stored in places like RFK Stadium without proper facilities for eating or sleeping. The prisoners, we have heard, have been treated as worse than criminals with the law enforcement groups totally disregarding the uniqueness of the problem.

In many instances, bails of $250 are being charged for offenses which generally merit $10 fees. The purpose of their is obvious to keep the offenders in jail where they can not repeat their activities.

If the government is as strong as it would like us to believe, why can it not even contain a relatively small group of demonstrators without resorting to such questionable techniques as raising bails and treating prisoners with the lack of humane spirit which has been demonstrated.

The government's actions should be, in themselves, self-defeating. The spirit aroused by these tactics should rightly be similar to those which sprung up last year and which we will commemorate tomorrow. In many ways a year can change a lot of things. In some, it changes nothing.

The China Expert

WASHINGTON--Now that the euphoria is over about our Ping-Pong match with Red China, people are starting to think about the significance of a real detente between the United States and the People's Republic of China.

I hadn't given it much thought until I talked to my friend Cutaway at the State Department.

"Well," he said, "it looks like we've made a breakthrough with the People's Republic of China."

"That's good," I said.

"No, that's bad. The Soviets are very mad at us because we're playing table tennis with Chou En-lai."

"That's bad," I said.

"It could be good," Cutaway said. "If the Soviets are afraid of us making a deal with China they might be more accommodating about the SALT talks on nuclear weapons."

"That's good," I said.

"It could be bad. If the Soviets decide that an America-China pact was a threat to their security, they might insist they need larger nuclear weapons to protect them from the Chinese."

"That's bad."

"It could be good. We might risk the Soviet wrath in order to open up trade with a country of 800 million people. The Chinese need everything, and there is no reason why we shouldn't consider them our largest potential customer. It's a very significant market."

"That would be good," I agreed.

Cutaway shook his head. "Bad. In order to sell them stuff, we'd have to buy things from them."

"Is that bad?"

"In a sense it is because the Chinese might undersell the Japanese to get our business. If we bought things cheaper from the Chinese than we did from the Japanese, we could cause an economic disaster in Japan."

"We'd have to put Pearl Harbor on full alert again," I said.

"It would be good, though, if the Japanese realized that they could no longer flood the American market. Then we'd manage to have better trade relations with them."

"That's good."

"Of course, it wouldn't help our employment situation here, because if the Chinese undersold the Japanese-- and we can't compete with the Japanese now--there would be less jobs than ever in this country."

"That's bad," I said.

"It's good in this sense: Once we build up a strong trade relaionship with China, we could encourage Chinese tourism to this country. You get 50 million Chinese tourists here at one time, and all the airlines and hotels would show a profit."

"That would be good."

"The only thing bad about it is that there aren't enough Chinese restaurants to handle them all."

"I was afraid of that," I said. "What else do you see coming out of the detente?"

"The reason Secretary Laird said we had to build an ABM system was to protect us from the Red Chinese. If we eventually become their friends, we won't need the system."

"That's good," I said.

"But it will already have been built by then and cost the country $50 billion."

"That's bad."

"Don't be too sure. If we take up with the Red Chinese, we might need the ABM system to protect us from Chiang Kai-shek's missiles."

"Which we sold him," I pointed out.

Cutaway sighed. "Ping-Pong sure screwed up this country's diplomatic game plan."

Stanford: Some Relevant Words

AS WE GO TO PRESS, MANY AMERICAN CAMPUSES ARE ON THE BOIL AGAIN. There are growing indications that the commemoration of last year's unfortunate events at Kent State and Jackson State may be exploited for partisan political purposes. Efforts may be made to disrupt normal educational activities on the ground of the urgency of some national crisis.

We therefore find particularly pertinent the declaration (excerpted below) of a large group of members of the Academic Council of Stanford University--whose campus has been the scene of continued and costly violent disruptions--opposing any action by the University that commits it to support of positions on matters extraneous to its proper educational function.

"We...oppose the taking of institutional positions by the University or any official body thereof on matters not related directly to the proper functioning of the University...

Initially...we note that such expression by the Academic Senate and Council and by academic departments is not authorized by the rules of the University.

Independent of the question of legal authority, there exist compelling reasons against the University's taking political positions. Simply put: it is no part of the proper business of a University to express institutional views on most public issues. Controversies over the formulation of institutional expressions, and the existence of the statements themselves, detract seriously from the University's performance of its core functions of disinterested scholarship and learning.

Any issue of sufficient concern to create a demand for the expression of an institutional view is bound to be complex. On many issues, only a small number of the faculty will have expertise greater than that of ordinary citizens. The processes through which institutional statements on political matters are considered and enacted are usually imcompatible with the University's commitment to rational inquiry and discourse. And the rhetoric of the resulting statement inevitably oversimplifies the issues involved--in precisely the manner that honest scholarship is committed not to oversimplify.

More dangerously, the University's commitment to particular political positions tends to create an institutional orthodoxy which makes "heretics" of those who disagree, and which is inconsistent with the University's fundamental commitment to the continual critical search for truth in all areas. Politicization is a force not easily contained: what begins in the Academic Senate is bound ultimately to manifest itself in the classroom, and in appointments and promotions.

Every university has been the object of attempts, both internal and external, to impose orthodoxies in particular matters. These pressures often have been from the right. But orthodoxy is no less pernicious because its content is "liberal." For the particular position that a university takes is not nearly so self-destructive as the fact that it takes a position. As Professor Philip B. Kurland of the University of Chicago Law School has put it:

"The essence of the academy is disinterestedness. Its justification is disinterestedness. An institution cannot be both a political force and an institution dedicated to the search for knowledge and its dissemination. As a university makes a political commitment, it destroys its claim to academic freedom. And without academic freedom, the search for and dissemination of knowledge becomes more shadow than substance. If research begins with a commitment to an answer, it should not be surprising that the expected answer is forthcoming."

In the long run, the University would cease to attract those who disagreed with its official politics, thus discouraging the open exchange of conflicting ideas that makes a university deserve its name. But even in the short run, politicization of the University through the institutional expression of views will adversely affect the quality of the instituation's life. Honest and intense argument about political issues is essential to the intellectual vitality of the University. But when the prize for winning an argument is power--even the meager power of speaking "for" the University--honesty tends to become compromised and argument becomes a divisive force.

The Stanford faculty choose representatives to the Academic Senate for their vision and capabilities in dealing with internal University matters. If the passing of political resolutions become a proper function of the Senate, it becomes proper to consider the views of candidates--and of prospective faculty members--on the kinds of external political issues likely to come before the Senate. This would seriously distort, and undermine, the University's internal system of governance.

Nothing we have said is intended to diminish the rights of members of the University, acting individually or through private groups and organizations, to participate actively in public political affairs, so long as such participation is not inconsistent with their academic obligations. (See "Freedom and Responsibility," Nov. 5, 1970, Statement of the AAUP Council.)

Nor do the arguments advanced above or the language of the Articles of Organization of the Faculty forbid the taking of institutional positions under all circumstances. They require, however, that such positions be taken only in response to policies (for example, legislation requiring teachers or students to attest to beliefs, or requiring or prohibiting particular kinds of courses or research) that have a significant and direct impact on the University's performance of its academic functions.

We urge all members of the Academic Senate and Council to consider the questions raised in this document. It is important that they be discussed and resolved in advance of any particular situation in which the expression of institutional views may be demanded. Global crisis present inauspicious occasions for the thoughtful consideration of matters of this sort.

Letters To The Editor

Here In The Trenches

To the Editor:

I wrote the following a week ago, after publication of Glenn Elter's speech to the Faculty Senate, but after perusing it carefully gave it decent burial in my bottom desk drawer (I have a bad habit of doing that). Since then, however, the level of comment on Mr. Elters's remarks has been so abysmal that I thought I would resurrect my earlier effort.

I write to express deep concern at the charges made in Glenn Elters' speech to the Faculty Senate, partly because many of them are, as far as I can see, correct. But some of them are wrong, too, and particularly wrong is his loose use of terms like "war" and "academic fascist," a practice which can only lend aid and comfort to those who would "dismiss student opinion as adolescent rhetoric."

It is important for students not to generalize from positions taken by the Faculty Senate to the views of the faculty as a whole, or to imagine that the self-named Faculty Group for Academic Freedom, which Mr. Elters alleges to be "inflict(ing) its views upon this University with increasing regularity," is in any way representative of the faculty of the University of Massachusetts, or stands for any accepted definition of the notion "academic freedom." The FGAF does not speak for the Faculty Senate; it does not speak for any but a tiny handful of faculty members of my acquaintance, and it sure as hell does not speak for me.

At the time the FGAF constituted itself a year ago, it sent to all faculty members (by University-funded campus mail, using the University address plates, incidentally) a "Statement of Concern" inviting all us freedom-lovers to join the crusade (it seems like a decade ago, but we all do remember what was going on last spring, don't we?).

Upon reading this document I wrote a four-page reply to this group's spokesman, in which I characterized many of the views set forth therein as "patent nonsense." After reflection, however, it seemed to me that the arguments put forward in FGAF's statement did not merit the serious consideration required for refutation, and I interred my reply in my bottom desk drawer (there you go again, Freeman). I now regret this action--which must have been duplicated in other faculty offices--but I do not think it can be fairly described as "acquiescence on the part of the entire faculty and as an implicit acceptance of the views of (FGAF)." And I now think, to quote FGAF's "Statement of Concern," that "moderates, contrary to their inclinations and temperment, must act to make their weight felt."

So, as one act, I submit the last paragraph of my once-buried letter to FGAF:

"I share your concern at the staggering problems which confront our universities today. But I submit that they are no more and no less than the problems which confront American society. And I suggest that we will not begin to approach solution of these problems by the bandying about of such factually and logically shifty terms as 'academic freedom' and 'politicization'. The day of the ivory tower is gone, and no hand-wringing on our part will bring it back. Courage, commitment, and dedication may save the university as we know it. But they must save American society first. If the Great and General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts can squarely face the issue of this war (the reference was to the Shea bill), then the University of Massachusetts can do no less. And its faculty must do more."

I believe that these arguments have lost none of their original force, and that at least some of these views are shared by the Silent Majority (sorry about that, FGAF) of faculty members. As to the Faculty Senate, if that be empire-building, it is a sorry and constricted empire at best. Without intending to criticize individual members of the Senate (some of my best friends are Faculty Senators), I must state my own view that a kind of Gresham's Law operates in the qulaity of that body's actions because the Faculty Senate has virtually no power. If that situation were to change, a great many more faculty members who have more to do with their time than niggle over faculty prerogative and scholasticize over definitions of academic freedom would participate actively and constructively (the foregoing is not intended to deny that there is some constructive activity by the Faculty Senate). Nevertheless, at present, because it has no power, the Faculty Senate is a debating society dominated by a small group of faculty members for the most part unrepresentative of the views of the faculty at large.

I say all of these things because I believe that students should no more mistake the general listlessness of the Faculty Senate and the intense, yes, the almost reactionary conservatism of FGAF for the views of the entire faculty than faculty members should mistake last year's call by a student for the "legal emasculation" of tenured faculty members for a universally held student opinion.

In sum, you'd be surprised at the large number of us out here in the trenches who think that there is more to unite students and faculty than to divide them.

To Catch A Thief

To the Editor:

Yesterday afternoon, I was somewhat disappointed by an inexcusable display of apathy. I had parked my car near the Goodell Library, locked it, and went to the library to study. Unfortunately, I soon discovered that I had locked my car and had left the keys in the ignition.

As any good burglar would, I found a clothes hangar and went to the parking lot to attempt to retrieve my car keys. While I was fumbling with the clothes hangar and my car door, I was passed by a minimum of thirty students on foot, and any number of people in cars. Now it was obvious to these people that I did not have a key to the car since I was attempting to force my entry through the window. Yet none of these people questioned what I was doing. I could have been stealing someone's car and these people were to apathetic to become involved.

Did these people notice what I was doing? Yes, in fact I tried to make it obvious. As an academic community, we are always prepared to condemn the lack of social action in the country, but when we are faced with what seems to be an apparent crime we too are afraid to become involved. It would have been no great involvement to call the police, or to ask me for some type of identification and then if I refused, called the police.

Remember, I could have been stealing your car or bike and would own it today because people are afraid to become involved.

Muddy Quagmire

To the Editor:

Re: "Echolalic Nonsense"

Dear Douglas L. Murphy

My name is Bob Callahan, the writer of the letter in last Thursday's Collegian concerning the external appearance of the Campus Center. Mr. Murphy, you have displayed a great deal of ignorance in your letter stating that the seasons of the year are restrictive on the possibilities of landscaping.

In your letter of April 30th, you stated that grass MUST be planted in late summer. Mr. Murphy, there are two periods of the year when new lawns may be successfully seeded. They are April to May, and again in September. There is no best date for sowing seed.

Regarding the planting of trees, the best rule for setting out woody plants is to do it in the spring. This gives the plant an adequate amount of time to develop a root system that will carry it successfully through the hot of summer and the cold of the Winter months.

The Campus Center was opened back in September. Why wasn't the job done back then, Mr. Murphy? It pisses me off that so much money can be spent for internal furnishings such as marble tables when to this date the surrounding area still remains a mess. Also if you are knowledgeable of the plans for the Campus Center area stop by the NDC office and fill me in.

I believe that if you would take the time to familiarize yourself with the basic fundamentals of landscaping, you would clear up some of your ignorance.

My name was omitted Mr. Murphy not for lack of intestinal fortitude but for the reason that I am a member of the Collegian staff.

I believe that the statements I made as to the landscaping of the Campus Center are qualified and that your statements are very unqualified.

As for the bit about perpetuating echolalic nonsense, haven't you ever repeated something that has been said by others. These words reflected my feelings on the appearance of the Campus Center area. I don't care if no one else thinks that the building is ugly the way that it is.

I'm glad that you like the appearance of the area as it now is. I would like to present you with a momento of this muddy quagmire. You can have either my muddy blue sneakers or a shovelful of mud.

Bob Callahan

Somewhat In Error

To the Editor:

Two letters, about the Student Senate, were printed in Friday's Collegian, both of which are somewhat in error. Regarding the letter "Infinite Wisdom", the Student Senate passed legislation on April 14, providing for a referendum to be held on or before May 6 regarding payment of Student Senate officers. These funds will not be allocated unless there is a favorable vote of the student body. This legislation was passed before the Senate Elections so that the present officers would not be voting upon their own salaries and payment will not begin until September, 1971.

Certain misinterpretations also exist in the letter about changes in referendum percentages. A referendum passed by less than 25% of the student body is as valid as any bill passed by the Senate and can only be overturned by a 2/3 vote. A referendum voted upon by at least 25% of the student body is binding until the next general student election.

This legislation is only fair. If 25% of the student body does not care enough to vote on any particular issue, the vote can not be truly representative of the campus. In the last referendum less than 9% of those eligible to vote did so. Should the campus be governed by some special interest group who can mobilize enough people to go to the polls? Under the former system, if only 5 people voted in an election, it would have been as binding as if the whole campus participated.

The next referendum to be held will be placed in the dorms, making it more convenient for dormitory residents to vote, also, the upcoming pay raise referendum will not need a 25% vote to be applicable.

Nailed To A Cross

To the Editor:

Mark Silverman's cynical polemic ("Starving for Nothing," in Friday's Collegian) may have planted doubts about fasting in the minds of those who share Mark's puritanical inclinations. His article deserves a response.

The article makes three unfounded assumptions worthy of an answer. First, that the Senate officers are being "fashionably radical" by fasting for the five days; second, that a fast needs wide student support to be worthwhile; and third, that a fast would be less effective than "more viable protests," is "childish," and "serves nothing but the collective egos of the strikers."

I fail to see how a fast can be "fashionable" since all indications are that the latest fad is going to Washington, on the assumption that Washington is the problem. Radical chic would demand marches and civil disobedience. On the other hand, fasting is a personal act of direct consequence to only a few. It assumes that the problem is in Amherst as much as Washington and further assumes that the American people have consciences that can be appealed to. Such notions are hardly fashionable.

Our fast was never intended to get wide student support. From the beginning we emphasized the individual nature of the act. We do, however, believe it to be significant that four leaders of the student body, along with many others, have made such a personal statement. It is a decision that says something about ethical quality of the student movement.

But Silverman's major criticism of the fast is that it will be ineffective. While this makes the puritanical assumption that every act must have a purpose, I would contend that even tactically a fast is of equal value to any form of protest currently in vogue.

There is only one tactic that will stop the American machine: resistance. Massive refusal to act in complicity with the war machine, a refusal to feed the monster. This means tax resistance, draft resistance, boycotting those corporations doing business with the Defense Dept., etc. Affirming life by saying "no" to death. If enough people begin to participate in such activities, the monster will cough, choke, and die.

However, few people are yet prepared to take these necessary steps. Our task is to convince them of the necessity. I am still naively convinced that most Americans are men and women of good will who have not yet seen their own role in their nation's madness. It is our responsibility to appeal to the best in Americans in the hope that we can purge the evil.

Demonstrations and civil disobedience serve that purpose. One is truly mad if he believes that sitting in the D.C. expressways will stop the war. The death machine is too persuasive and mighty. Such acts serve only to publicize to all Americans the depth of moral commitment felt by a minority of their fellow citizens. In the end, perhaps, enough Americans will lose their blinders and see what their nation has become. Perhaps we will again affirm the human values embedded in our conscience.

A fast serves such a purpose. Gandhi was its most effective practitioner. It says, in effect: "I care enough to suffer a bit for what I believe." It is hardly as martyr-like as getting arrested in D.C., but then few of us are worthy of being nailed to a cross. That is a lesson Mr Silverman has not yet learned.

MDC Interview

Al Hansen: The Total Situation Man

Al Hansen is an experimental artist who's forte is collage, mixed-media, environmental art and hybrids such as the Happening, which, with Allan Kaprow, Oldenburg, Red Grooms and Jim Dine he took part in developing during the late fifties and early sixties. Currently teaching lecture and workshop classes at Rutgers University, Newark and Parson's School of Design in Manhattan, he lives and works in a light industrial loft on the edge of Chinatown. He is currently teaching courses in Art and Environment, the Artist's World, and Collage Workshop. Major private projects are preparing for several European shows, a monster super suite of 3,653 collages (14" x 17") one of each day of the sixties, and forming a young artists network of experimenters called: The Total Situation Group. He has done over one hundred happenings and is the author of the book A Primer of Happenings and Time/Space Art.

Q. Would you equate experimenting with avant-garde?

A. Experimentation is the way to something unique and personal in the way of a product...avant-garde art is a slogan that now covers or indicates a tradition. So, something that is avant-garde is what is associated with that...but its done by old people and we know what we will see if we go to Max Neuhaus, to Nam June Paik, to Charlotte Moorman, myself, Kaprow, Fillious, Vostell....just as Fauve came to mean what those old guys did, which was to stretch the limits of accepted use of color...it no longer meant wild animals.

Q. Where could we find what avant-garde was, today?

A. In a way it can't be done...now is perhaps more like events prior to the 1880's, 1890's research, arguing, talking, wondering, reading, writing...whats new is in all the technological hardware and the teachers and the kids have to deal with the incredible amount of information...if its doubling for the world every ten to fifteen years then in the arts it must be doubling exponentially because art is the unknown...so in art information must be doubling every three to six months...

Q. I don't understand...

A. In business, engineering....the establishment resists change and new information, they are broadly twenty or thirty years behind what is available...information increases fastest in art and science...they are alike in that they deal with...look for, the unknown...what they find out there the engineers have to collate and sort of compare...I don't want to talk about it any more or I'll have to take a cold shower its too exciting.

Q. So we are in for a radical change...?

A. Its here! Look at Rome when the barbarians overloaded it with info.

Q. It fell?

A. No, not exactly but it had to stop dead in its tracks til all of it got sorted out...many aspects of ancient Rome are still in operation...our law courts god help us...and the military....how did we get in this?

Q. Experimenting...

A. Yah! I've changed my mind. You can do avant-garde art today. Young people can. There is convention, old stuff, standing still, hanging onto rules, preserving what was...even though one of three or four hundred years ago it was the new and outrageous...blocked spirit; willfully or accidentally through teachers, parents, etc....an imprint on many of rust, inability to change and move...antiprogress...Then there are the fewer free spirits, flowing, blowing, growing...finding new things...One will subscribe to rituals that keep the volcanoe from erupting...kill a virgin, get a goat, quick...the others, the experimenters say, Groovy, lets go watch it erupt! The conservatives loose people to the war...the adventurers loose people to drugs... theres a mix....I don't want to talk about all this.....

Q. Where does the term happening come from?

A. Some of us in John Cage's group at the New School, Kaprow, Brecht, Higgins, Jackson Maclow, Steve Addis...others...were talking about how great it was that we lived in the contingent universe...Cage had said that whenever he saw Time/Space he got tears in his eyes he was so glad to be in the contingent universe of now, rather than the casual one that preceded this one. The Agnew-Nixon monster, the military industrial behemoths are all trying to get from the learning is memorization oral culture to the casual one, the causal universe. Their future, the conservatives future is our pasts pasts past intellectually...I know a millionaire in Kansas City, Missouri who threw a big party as each Kennedy was killed, he's starting to get less and less suspicious of Beethoven...actually suspects Beethoven might be on to something...how am I going to tell him about Earl Brown or Morton Feldman's music? You know? So, that summer ('58) Reds had done somethings at the Sun Gallery in Provincetown. Reggie Cabral says they were happenings but Red doesn't remember and I don't and Red and Claes and I couldn't care less. Earl Brown thinks someone might have used happening back in 53 or 57 at a Cage mixed everybody everywhere in the auditorium action and information barrage....but he isn't sure. I remember this conversation in Cages class...it was summer and I used to doze, like I sat bolt upright realizing I'd dozed off and Cage was saying, "to experiment anyone, but in this case an artist...sets out to do things not knowing what the result will be...to set out toward a known result (to prove this toothpaste is best, etc.) is just not experimenting...any idea or problem an artist sets is valid...no wrong way to peer into...to wander into the unknown...you are experimenting if you can't tell what will happen...what it will be like in advance...the result of an experiment is whatever happens....the product of an experiment is the happening...abstract expressionism was involved with the happenings of paint cubism with one energy freed in the picture plane, fauvism with color...a happening is the result of setting out...resolving in advance to accept whatever takes place. By this definition I'm the only one who was doing pure happenings...Kaprow, Vostell, Oldenburg...all use a carefully prepared list and anyone who does their own interpretation of the instructions is in trouble. Just as much a performers jail as the Viennese opera. But, thats only one way to look at it. The strength of happenings has always been that each happener differed widely and wildly in practice, method, focus, materials, etc. Images came along in the piece completely unforeseen...a painter's-sculptors theatre. Theatre as painting or painting as theatre. Actions and events unhinged from corny meaning...the linoleum in a Braque or Picasso collage predicts the found object, the readymade, perhaps Pop art...but its this shape, texture...this kind of hunk of thing...how it works as an integral of the pieces gestaly is what its doing there...any reflective thinking you could do about kitchens or the floor business is very offbase...lightweight. Perhaps there was a time when it was first done...someone said, "Damn it! Look at that! he put a hunk of linoleum in there...real linoleum! You'd have to be an old lady from Ohio to get that kind of 1905 kick out of it now....Later, I got that Wesleyan book on the bauhaus theatre experiments and in Oskar Sclemmer or someones Theatre Manifestos (1922? 1927?) one of them said, "Let there then be a theatre of happenings situations and events... Well, the only guy in our gang back then who might have seen that books sources was Allan or John Cage. When I showed it to Vostell in '64 or '65, he flipped. I couldn't get the book back from him. He thought the word came from us Americans and here was happenings in the Bauhaus theatre manifestoes...I gave him the book...Frederick Kiesler is another important person to Happenings. He was commissioned to do an avant-garde theatre in the Pacific Northwest in the thirties...so he made the first theatre in the round in America...he told me he based the idea on the Berlin or European cabaret...the nightclub. Audience all around the performance area. Next from that came Margo Jones Arena stage in Washington, D.C. the forties...Next stop Jose Quintero in Greenwich Village. It went off like a bomb. Now that the audience could be anywhere theatres can be anywhere...Let me get back to Cage...another heavy thing he said was, "The traditional job of theatre is to instruct us...earlier in religion...but now we go to theatre and movies and read novels and the partaker of this shares in a wider range of experiences than the non-reader...he has extra help in terms of built up input of situations and experiences to draw from in making decisions in life.

draw from in making decisions in life. But it all takes place on the stage or on the screen...when you leave the theatre its happening all around you...where is the stage in life? Thats how he got into having things go on all over...behind the audience, in the balcony...out in the lobby...Hellzapoppin, Carnival, ariot..." thats where I got the idea to do the multifilm fifteen or twenty projectors with disparate material all over the ceilings and walls of a big room....collage environmental projections... It was in sixty or sixty one...part of Claes Oldenburg and Jim Dines Ray Gun Specs program at Judson Church. I'd done mixed barrages of projectionsearlier but not as a presentation to an audience. Just fun....Come to think of it back in the late forties in New Orleans with Randy Ray and a few others ..1111 Bourbon Street...we did a mixed projection number....

Q. What do you plan to do here at the five-colleges?

A. Well, I've been trying to set up a matrix within which students could become my colleagues in a happening piece. I'll be the control console and make a time framework schedule...precede it with a few talkouts and then we'll all see what it looks like together. I like to see it as freshly as the audience that has just come in. Someone will come over to me and whisper, "I want to go up on the stepladder and throw this confetti out over the crowd," and I'll say, "The dancer is going to do something on it in a minute while Louie sprays it silver...but check with them and let them decide whether you should do it before or after..." as it turned out he came back and complained that they didn't want him to use the stepladder at all. So, after they were done (he didn't know anywhere he could go get his own stepladder) at the end of the happening he got the stepladder and did the confetti thing....And thats the way I work it. A student could get a bunch of old shoes and nail each one to a stake and hammer them in the dirt on each side of the path leading to the happening site...or suspend them from the ceiling inside...I want to see a bunch of people beat the fact that mechanization has deprived us of the ability to move and do and act....the happening is an energy event often like a fire or earthquake...how do you enjoy it? I like to get people to do something from outside their experience. Like, a poet should spray pain a big picture on a wall of clear mylar...later, an art history majoress should slice the painting into strips like a giant fringe....A girl who isn't so-called pretty should be gotten up to look ravishing and be pushed around on top of a piano singing a torch song written by the painter...there's a therapy facet...its a dream bin for facies and delights...

Q. I can hardly wait to see it...

A. Ditto.

Q. What if there's a piddling response and no one comes....

A. If no one seems interested or able to take part I'll have several alternatives. I plan to read the poetry of the artist Jim Dine in drag...Like, I'll be in drag. Then I'll follow up with my non-verbal lecture in which I cut my clothes off and get into some really interesting situations. I have a fire piece also called "The Madman and the King of Britain. I'd like to do that in the woods at night.

Q. What is the Silver City for Andy Warhol piece?

A. It's a form of happening. Happening sculpture in a kind of ritual monument way. Everyone brings silverthings to the site and places it. Anyone can rearrange it to fit what they've just brought. Like a contest wherein you can make as many entries as you want...One person brings a silver oar, another brings a milkbox painted silver...some old shoes painted silver...a cadillac fender from alongside the road.

Q. What if people ripped some of the stuff off?

A. Well, the idea is for it to pile up, so that would be poor. It should be in a site place perhaps under a spotlight in the lobby on a large sculpture base or platform so the ritual aspect of it wouldn't be missed....

Q. They'd rip it off anywhere. Did you see all the missing cushions in the lobby?

A. Well, you see they are robotized from realizing that they can't steal them. They are their own cushions, but for the lobby....It's like kids cutting the seats in the subway...its their own subway seat in a way...well, most of the kids stealing the big cushions are stealing love...that's what stealing is about...wanting to be loved, and not being loved....stealing is materially something...and a lot of it is to make daddy show up in cop or detective form....

Q. To much ..what basically, in the same sense is the happening about?

A. People's displacement from center through mechanization, etc. Like, the happening might lead to people breaking through blocks in their life and in their art...We should do another interview about that....

Q. The tape's running out....

Lightfoot: Substance Without Feeling

By DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC Staff

If the purpose of a concert is to see a very fine album being played, then the Gordon Lightfoot concert last Saturday afternoon at Mount Holyoke College was an epitome of good performing.

Creativity is a dangerous weapon, both for the initiator and for the audience. A creative musician always courts a fickle public, as Dylan discovered at Newport, and as Phil Ochs encountered at Carnegie Hall last year. The safest thing for a performer to do is to continue to succeed with proven successes, changing nary a note nor an inflection, regurgitating the same songs to the same audiences in the same tried ways, regardless of mood, philosophy, or time of day.

Although folk musicians are not the most blatant of these play-it-live-as-you-recorded-it-for-the-charts offenders, they have always stood out as the most obvious. Partly because of folk music's basic simplicity and unpretentiousness, and partly because of the "leadership" that Joan Baez, Judy Collins and Joni Mitchell created, the run-of-the-mill folk artist has traditionally provided some of the greatest lyrics in all the arts and literature, and some of the most boring, monotonous concerts ever conceived by even the Marquis de Sade.

Gordon Lightfoot, obviously, is not as horrendous as a Tom Jones or a Bobby Sherman, or even a Taylor or a Hardin concert. His songs are too good, his back-up musicians too professional, his commitment too sincere for one not to enjoy any of the performance.

Still, it is obvious that Lightfoot is a newcomer to the business of audience psychology and to the art of creativity before an audience. Instead of gauging the mood of Chapin Auditorium, Lightfoot sang his list of songs (in that order), changing moods with the clap of a hand. On a sunny Saturday spring afternoon, the surest way to lose an audience is to ignore its antsy pants, and refuse to invite hand-clapping or singing along. Another way to leave an audience out of a concert is to ignore it. This, Lightfoot did, especially in the beginning, when not a word was spoken by the Canadian artist for the first three or four songs. Indeed, if it were not for his sore, uncalloused fingers, Lightfoot would not have been forced to stop as much as he did and "rap" with the "plebians".

Most disappointing was Lightfoot's interpretations. I find it inconceivable that a person can be so emotional as to play all of his own songs the same way every time. Granted, Lightfoot has been playing them over and over again so they are now routine, but I could have gotten more for the money by buying one of his albums and replaying it a couple of times.

Strange to say, I enjoyed Gordon Lightfoot, despite his deficiencies. "We've Got to Get Together", a cut from his new album, was refreshingly not a typical Lightfoot song; sung in fractured French-Canadian and English, it was not a usual Lightfoot ballad of love and life, but rather a straight-forward plea for Canadian unity. "If You Could Read My Mind", currently on the Top 40 charts, was also well done, chiefly because Lightfoot's sore fingers caused him to slow the tempo down, revealing a richness and depth in the lyrics and melody that are usually rushed over.

Lightfoot is no rip-off artist. He was hired for a concert and gave one that was two hours long with no delays, no slopping playing (sore fingers taken into account), and with evidence that he did not take his constituents lightly, even during a matinee.

Finally, whatever this reviewer's feelings about the concert, no one can deny that Gordon Lightfoot writes some damned good songs.

As Kate Taylor Tries Too Hard

By EUGENE BARNETT
MDC Staff

One cannot help wondering, when a new Taylor arrives on the musical scene, whether he or she would have made it professionally if not for big brother Jim. Jim begat Livingston, and suddenly Kate, Alex, and Hugh were all recorded. It's something like being a Kennedy and running for Senator.

Kate Taylor played Chapin Hall at Mt. Holyoke last Friday. She looks like a Taylor: tall, thin, although her hair is slightly shorter than her older brothers. She needs to develop self-confidence as a performer. Her stage manner is reflective of her nervousness. Frequently she would go into her rap about how she wanted everybody to have a real good time. Lines borrowed from Gypsy Rose Lee. She tried to force an expression of enthusiasm out of a crowd which would have been better left to demonstrate its enthusiasm spontaneously. The crowd was getting it on, or whatever, on its own. Kate Taylor ought not to be the cheerleader at a Kate Taylor concert.

Hopefully, she will relax. Her music is fine. She has the best voice of anyone in her entire musical family. Her selection ranges from blues numbers to rock n' roll. (We rock n' roll freaks are winning. The number that went over best was "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow?") Kate Taylor will be making some good music for quite some time. Go see her, about a year from now. She will be fine.

The Concerts Are Over And Its Time For A Change

By ROBERT NESTI
MDC Staff

As most of you know, the concerts this past weekend were a great success for all involved. The groups all performed well, the large crowd seemed content, and the event was efficiently and effectively carried off.

What most of you don't know is that this will probably be the last concert of its kind (excluding this upcomming weekend) to take place on campus. The Student Senate recently refused to fund any further concerts.

Despite the fact that the move probably isn't politically safe, the abolishment of funds for concerts is a logical and responsible move for the better, and the Senate should be commended for their action. Concerts today, free or otherwise, are nothing more than a sell indigent luxury for all involved.

Yesterday 6,000 people were arrested in Washington. Over the past year while political action by students has fallen out of vogue, the problems which led schools throughout the country to close down a year ago this week have worsened or still remain unsolved.

Perhaps Washington will effect people enough to take part in tomorrow's moratorium, that remains to be seen. If anything it is hoped that students here will look beyond themselves to see the concerts as, if not wasteful, at least a useless way in spending student funds.

Bill Graham, perhaps rock-music's finest producer, recently planned to close down both the Filmore East and West. This wasn't because business was bad—the Filmore East had its best March since its opening having every performance sold out. The reason was that Graham became fed up with the entire profit motive system rock music had degenerated to.

Graham recently spoke to the National Association of Record Merchandisers in Los Angeles. His speech went unrecorded in most of the trade journals for he attacked those who have made the music business the incredible money making empire its become today. In a calculated speech, he blasted their motive and lack of social concern.

"Beyond that point, how deeply involved are you in what you do, how deeply involved are you in the community?...Put aside the dollar. What do you sell? Why do you sell it? And how deeply, if at all, are you involved in making a change in your community?"

We all had a good time this past weekend. The question is whether or not now is the time for a good time. Sam Brown, the man who coordinated the 1969 October Moritorium, said recently he felt that those who want to change should begin to spend money in ways in which show constructive political action. By denying further money for concerts, the Student Senate should be applauded for making a step in that direction.

Concert On WMUA

Tonight at 9 PM on WMUA (91.1) the WMUA Classics Department will present a special broadcast of the brass recital given by Walter M. Chesnut of the UMass Music Faculty. This program was originally taped on April 13th and includes Torelli's CONCERTO IN D, Joseph Haydn's CONCERTO IN E—FLAT, Gabrieli's CANZON DUODECIMI TONI, Poulenc's SONATA FOR HORN, TRUMPET AND TROMBONE and DIVERSION FOR TWO (OTHER THAN SEX) by Donald Erb.

Joining Mr. Chesnut for this recital will be John King, organ, Dwight Peltzer, piano, Douglas Purcell, trumpet, Dennis Behm, horn, Mary Gail Behm, horn, Larry Weed, trombone and Peter Tanner, percussion.

O's Chase Sox In AL East

BOSTON (AP)-The surging Boston Red Sox were at the top of the pack, one game ahead of the Baltimore Orioles in the American League East yesterday and determined to keep rolling on a seven-game trip.

"It's nice to have Baltimore chasing us for a change," slugger Carl Yastrzemski said on a rainy break in the schedule. "Now we've got to keep it that way. I think we will."

The Red Sox completed a fine home stand by whipping the Minnesota Twins 1-0 and 9-8 in a doubleheader Sunday. Ray Culp's two-hit pitching boosted Boston hopes, and then the team's stock soared higher with a dramatic comeback victory in the second game.

"We proved plenty to everyone, including ourselves, in that doubleheader," Manager Eddie Kasko said. "We proved we could beat the good teams. We also proved again that this club has guts and won't quit when things look bad."

The Red Sox leave today on a midwestern tour that includes two games against the White Sox in Chicago, three with the Brewers in Milwaukee and two with the Twins in Minnesota.

The first stop will be Chicago, where right-hander Mike Nagy will oppose the White Sox' Tom Bradley on the mound tonight. Nagy has a 1-0 record, while Bradley has won all three decisions for Chicago.

The White Sox are rolling after losing a three-game weekend series to the Red Sox in Boston. Chicago has won five straight, but Kasko and the Red Sox are not worried.

Pats Ink Free Agents

BOSTON (AP)—The New England Patriots of the National Football League signed two running backs and three pass receivers as free agents Monday, ordering the five to report for a "rookie" training camp next weekend at Curry College.

The running backs signed for tryouts were James Walker of Santa Barbara Calif. City College, who led the Continental League in rushing in 1969 with 1,035 yards for the Fort Worth Braves, and Johnny Brunson of Benedict S.C. College, who has played for the Montreal Alouettes in Canada the last two years.

The receivers seeking a job are Dave Dimish of the University of Washington, who was with the Seattle Rangers in the Continental League last year, and rookies Gary Orcutt of Southern California, and Eric Stolberg of Indiana.

The Patriots, who had a 2-12 record last year, have signed 12 free agents. They expect to have more than 20 at the "rookie" camp for two drills Saturday and one Sunday.

The club also announced that Wally Carew Jr., 27, of Concord has been named assistant publicity director. Carew, son of the Concord High football coach, has been a news reporter with the Lowell Sun.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The color associated with Aries is red; the number is 9. Food authorities, familiar with astrology, claim fish is a favorite of the Aries born. Aries is independent and can be bossy. But Aries can also be a fighter for the underdog and is a valuable ally in time of crisis. Some famous persons born under Aries include Steve McQueen, Gloria Swanson and Betty Davis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Messages may be garbled. Take time to analyze reports. Base actions on facts, not speculation. Best to delay journey, if practical. You need additional information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): One who has captured your affection may set a high price. Refuse to be threatened. Use velvet glove, but be firm. An Aquarius individual figures prominently. Be aware of subtle nuances.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appears a setback can boomerang in your favor. Don't give up; pursue goal. Accent is on security, domestic harmony. Make minor concession to make major gain. You will understand.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are given choice of superficial activity versus meaningful work. Be grateful that choice is your own. One born under Virgo can act as a reliable guide. Proceed accordingly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Study Taurus message. Spend for quality. But avoid get-rich-quick schemes. Be analytical. You can now put together puzzle pieces. Young person requires special attention. Be understanding.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cooperate with Cancer born individual. Stress practical approach. A little extra effort can spell success. Know this and give your all. Your goal is closer than might be imagined.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid tendency toward self deception. See situation in realistic light. Accent on secrets that are revealed. Keep some facts to yourself. Means don't tell all you know.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Not wise to mix business with pleasure. Accomplish basic tasks. Concentration is a necessity; carelessness now would be costly. A friend confides delicate problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What comes in also seems to go out; be willing to conserve energy, funds. Key is to finish task. Temptation is to walk away from challenge. Overcome it. Express confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make new contacts. If you ask questions now, answers can be obtained. One who makes claims may surprise you by backing them. Be receptive. Accent original methods, techniques.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Turn on charm. You get what you need through friendly persuasion. Realize this and accept helping hand. One who wants to aid does have your best interests at heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some inpositions of authority act in uncertain manner. You could get opportunity to demonstrate special skills. One acquainted with legal procedures should be consulted.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a determined individual. Once you make up your mind to do something, it is difficult to dissuade you. By next month, there is adjustment in domestic area and possible change of residence.

"Red" Prevails In Benefit, 28-10

MacPherson Unveils New Style

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

A pair of first quarter touchdown scampers by junior Paul Metallo paved the way for the Red Team's 28-10 clobbering of the White squad in the first annual Bernie Dallas Day Game at Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

But the big winner of the afternoon had to be the Bernie Dallas Memorial Fund. Over $2,000 was donated for the soon-to-be-erected mall outside the stadium honoring the former Redman captain who was killed in a tragic auto crash in 1968.

The score of the game was coincidental. However, the players went full hilt from whistle to gun in hopes of impressing coach Dick MacPherson in his public debut as well as a host of pro scouts in attendence.

MacPherson had particular praise for Metallo, a transfer from Central Connecticut and speedster split end Steve Schubert.

"Originally Paul wasn't going to start at halfback. Since Angelo DiNardo broke his shoulder, I went with him. He's the faster man on the squad, but originally, I was hoping that he'd be our fourth defensive back. Now I know he'll give us depth in the backfield."

Schubert was simply instrumental in the Red triumph. After Metallo put the Red squad atop 14-0 with td jaunts of five and 11 yards in the first quarter, Schubert came back with a nifty endzone grab of a Len Matuza strike for a 14 yard TD and a 21-7 halftime lead. But the best of Schubert was yet to come.

With the White squad creeping to within 21-10 after three sessions, the sophomore flanker put the lid on the affair with a 70-yard touchdown reception. Schubert shook loose down the right sideline to haul in a nifty over the shoulder grab from rookie quarterback Paul Hansen. The freshman hopeful hurled the pigskin some 55 yards in the air.

"It's a funny thing about Hansen," noted MacPherson. "We don't even plan to use him at quarterback. But he showed me he can do the job. With Piel Pennington, Len Matuza, Brian Murray, Mark Tripuka and Marty Evans we have more than adequate depth at quarterback. But Hansen should see some service in the defensive backfield."

Although the White contingent had a shaky start with highly touted Pennington at the controls, Pennington shook spingitis to bring his mates back. The transfer from New Canaan Ct. lit the scoreboard with an eight yard touchdown toss to Dave Flynn at 6:43 of the second canto. The touchdown culminated an impressive drive covering 75 yards in 13 plays.

The only other White contact with the scoreboard was supplied by the toe of Kevin Filley. The soccer-style kicker wedged a 26 yard field goal at 8:44 of the third quarter to close out the scoring for the losers. With Metallo and Schubert suppling the one-two punch with a pair of td's apiece, the White squad found defeat inevitable to the tune of 28-10.

The day itself was a success from start to finish. The morning clinics with featured ex-Redman stars Greg Landry (Lions), Milt Morin (Browns), Phil Vandersea (Packers) and John Huard (UMaine-Broncos) drew considerable interest from the throng of high school coaches and a cast of some 600 high school enthusiasts.

But after the game, coach MacPherson was in a jovial mood as he commented on the events of the day. "I wasn't too pleased with our defense against the run. But our line in general is tremendously quick. If I have to go with a down four right now, it would be Bill DeFlavio (5'8, 230), Dave Yushinsky (6'4, 249), Curt Bristol, (6'3, 210) and newcomer John Jones (6'2, 205)."

Offensively, MacPherson had repeated praise for Metallo, Schubert and Pennington. The new mentor noted that Metallo's forte would be defense, but Schubert and Pennington will play predominant roles in this falls plan of attack. "I won't designate a starting quarterback yet, but Pennington has all the earmarks. Not only does he have a strong arm, but he has the respect of the players which is so important."

Schubert will be an integral part of MacPherson's new wideopen attack. The offense will be spread out in hopes of opening up the defensive concentration. The new coach will operate with a constant split end and flanker combination. This type of flexible pattern has not been seen at UMass since Vic Fusia, with his grind it out style, took over the helm at UMass a decade ago.

"We're not going to play crazy football," commented an anxious MacPherson, "but we won't be afraid to throw the ball. We're going to get away from the tight formations. We'll be shifting on almost every play. Defensively we'll be strong. As soon as we find a number one quarterback, we'll be ready to roll. I just hope we can sell the game here at UMass."

Apparently a new age of football will be ushered in with the unveiling of coach Dick MacPherson. The shroud of conservatism that hung like a plague over the confines of Alumni Stadium is now gone. Hopefully a mystified throng will pack the stadium to see a revamped UMass gridiron group do battle with Dartmouth in September 25th's home opener.

Gorillas Romp Over Huskies

By JOHN MACGILLVRAY
MDC Staff

Saturday was concert day and as the band played on so did UMass as it beat UConn 11-4 in a varsity lacrosse game.

No superfluous motion was wasted as John Nagle lazily drilled one in to put UMass ahead at 3:02 of the first period. This came off of a Lou Marinacci assist. One minute later Charlie Hardy cunningly dodged the overplaying UConn defenseman for another score. UConn didn't get on the board until 8:50 of the first period. At the end of the first period the score was 2-1 UMass. The second period saw the Redmen and Huskies exchange goals with Paul Ritch scoring and Lou Marinacci once again getting the assist. The first half ended with the score 3-2 UMass.

The game was rather sloppily played with the ball on the ground quite a bit. It was definitely not an aesthetically pretty game to watch. However in the third period UMass exploded and broke the game wide open by scoring five goals and limiting UConn to one.

Nagle scored on a Spiffy Sheridan assist. UConn came back with one of their own but from then on it was all UMass. Steve Herschoff scored on a Sheridan assist, Dwight Blomquist on an assist by Charlie Hardy, and tri-captain John Gannon scored on an assist from his fellow captain Lou Marinacci.

Spiffy Phil Sheridan closed out the scoring in the third period on as assist by Charlie Hardy. This period, in which the offense went wild and the defense backboned by tri-captain Ruggiano and John Walsh held UConn, seemed to be the turning point in the game. The visitors became dispirited whereas the Redmen could loosen up and substitute their second team.

The fourth period was no easier than the third for UConn. Dwight Boomer scored for the Redmen at only 0:26 into the period. The dynamic duo of Hardy and Nagle that's been working so well all year combined again for another UMass score at 5:14. UConn got their fourth and final goal of the day at 8:36. Dwight Blomquist closed out the scoring at 10:55 to give UMass its 11-4 victory. This brings the Redmen's record up to 6-2.

Bruce Crawford had an excellent day in the goal making 15 saves. He was relieved by Ron Dumont who in turn made 4 saves. Charlie Hardy had 3 assists and needs only 12 more to surpass Tom Malone's record of 44 assists in one season.

YC Titles Bloom In Spring

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

With the cancellation of yesterday's UMass-Williams baseball game the first break in the tight spring sports calender has occured and it's as good as time as any to take a look back over what has transgressed so far in perhaps the finest spring sports season ever at UMass.

It was after this past winter season that the old cliches began popping up to the theme of "what can the spring sports come up with to follow up the winter success."

How could the spring coaches and athletes follow up an N.I.T. bid, a Division II playoff birth, a New England title by the wrestlers and a third place in the Easterns by the gymnasts?

Well, to all these cliches, honors and the like the spring spots have answered back with "much of the same and probably more."

Already, two Yankee Conference championships have been claimed in tennis and golf which puts the Keaney Cup, symbolic of total sports supremacy in the YanCon, in the hands of UMass after it was stolen last year by UConn over a technical ruling.

Still in the offering are two more titles in track and baseball, both to be decided most likely against UConn in the third week of this month. The baseball team plays a doubleheader at UConn on the 19th in the last two games of the regular season with the winner here going on to the District One Playoffs.

The track team hosts the Conference Championships on the 15th and after the demolition of the Huskies last week in a dual meet the Redmen hold the trump suit for this championship meet.

Rolling along as was expected are Garber's band of Gorillas who have been defeated only once in collegiate competition this season, that to Harvard in a heartbreaker in double overtime.

This is just in the conference. Now take a look at the possibilities on the New England level.

Tennis and golf have good opportunities to place high up in the New Englands. The baseball team has a real good shot at a New England Championship if it gets by UConn and Harvard. The track team, with its new look in team depth has the material to go all the way in the New Englands and the lacrosse team has a showdown with Brown on the 12th to decide the top team in New England and a berth in the N.C.A.A. playoffs.

To put this all together, there is the chance of four conference titles, three New England titles (with a possibility of maybe one more), two N.C.A.A. playoff berths and possibly an Eastern title in Crew which will be decided on Saturday in Philadelphia.

What this all adds up to is one heck of an exciting spring season. No team has lost more than one contest in any sport (the baseball team is 14-1 up north). There has been a blending of the young and the old in all the sports which has added to each team program presently and for the future.

It seems that maybe these sports are being taken for granted.

Losers always seem to bear the brunt of the verbal attack. So far these teams have silenced the skeptics who now just sit back and wait for a victory.

So all you winter sports fans, the spring has arrived, even if the weather leaves some doubt, and maybe after this spring season the old cliches will pop up once again, to the theme of "what can the fall sports come up with to follow up the spring success."

On The Spot

Only One Story

By BARRY MARSHALL
SPECIAL TO THE MDC

As an alternative to the "media" version of what happened at the Washington Demonstrations Monday, I would like to convey to the Campus Community what happened to me.

I was awakened Sunday morning at 6:00 A.M. by the sound of a policeman over a loudspeaker telling us that our camping permit was revoked and that we were to leave our Rock Creek Park camping site immediately. Thousands of police with clubs were lined up by 8:00 A.M. The campers who remained were arrested. Many probably demonstrators left for home at this point. The police started to harrass young people all over the city in the afternoon, not allowing anyone to sit down on or stand on any public property. We were more or less driven like fugitives to the underground-the Universities. I went to Georgetown, where they had great free food and sleeping accomodations. The Presidents of George Washington University and American University tried without success to bar demonstrators.

At the regional (Boston) meeting held at American University that evening, we decided to move in on our target at 6:30 A.M. Our target was the Memorial Bridge behind the Lincoln Memorial. The strategy of law enforcement officials in clearing out the park that morning was effective from their viewpoint; we were confused and uncoordinated in our planning now. But we were determined.

We started out in our "affinity group" (3 people) towards the bridge at 5:30 A.M. When we arrived, we realized our insurmountable task - National Guardsmen covered the entire length of the bridge with hundreds of police at either end armed with clubs. By 6:30 there were about 200 of us grouping by the Lincoln Memorial, far short of our expectations. About fifty of us moved to the front of the Memorial and stopped traffic with our bodies by locking arms. Within minutes, a large group of police armed with clubs, charged at us. We were all sprayed simultaneously with gas. My small group wanted from the start to get arrested. We came to the demonstration with a firm, well thought out plan to practice non violent civil disobedience in the tradition of Ghandi and Thoreau. As soon as the first head was cracked we ran like everyone else. With the police in chase of us, we ran across the grass near the reflecting pool.

We decided to try to v block a side street leading into the area. This plan worked for a few minutes. More heads were cracked and gas inhaled. Cruisers chased us along the grass and we took refuge in surrounding trees. My two friends and I who had escaped arrest up to this point left to find a target where we could sit in the road and be arrested. As we made our way towards the Capitol we saw innumerable incidents of demonstrators being clubbed by police and a large number of older innocent bystanders being arrested also.

By this time, many of the demonstrators were frustrated, leaderless and looking for a new target. Many threw wooden barricades and barrels into the streets but not at cars. We didn't like these tactics, (although I wouldn't brand them as being violent) and so I didn't join in these areas. We had all that we could do to prevent ourselves from being clubbed. We then sat on a road in front of the Capitol Building in full view of a car full of FBI men. As they rushed at us with mace in hand, we asked to be arrested. We were led to a circle where a group of about a hundred people had been encircled. In the crowd were many innocent people. We were then led away on a bus to the D.C. jail.

When we arrived, we were led into the exercise yard to the cheers of 800 who had been arrested earlier. Most of the people I talked with had never been told that they were under arrest, let alone given their rights. I would estimate that perhaps 500 of the more than 1,500 who were jailed were not demonstrators. They were for the most part pissed off and promised to take legal action. Spirits for the most part were high. A 71 year old women who was arrested for lying in the road was discovered. She was as much a hard core radical as anyone else. While in the jail, I talked to three Government lawyers, an Air Force Sargeant, some business people, and a Canadien teacher touring Washington with his students to see how American Government works.

I suspect that police agents were also in the crowd. When we had meetings to decide our strategy concerning the information we should give and whether or not to even submit to booking, some people were screaming out such ridiculous and divisive statements that I am sure that they were completely ego tripping and verbally masturbating because of their first bust or they were agents trying to divide everyone.

The guards were very friendly, but they didn't know what was happening. We were fed terrible food at 1:00 and it got colder. People became more tense. There was barbed wire strung around and a guard sat in a tower with a machine gun. The crowd began to get uptight as the day wore on.

We didn't get toilets until late in the afternoon. Many were cut and couldn't get the proper treatment. People began to get uptight when it became apparent that we would be spending the night. Tents were set up by soldiers who assisted us by taking messages from us. The night was cold and at 3:30 A.M. we were taken to another jail and I was later released; but I still have to appear in court on June 22.

An emergency bail fund for those still incarcerated has been established. Please send donations to: Brian O'Dwyer, 424 Fifth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

The Other Evil...

By ROBERT TOUAKE

In the mist of tremendous criticism, the SST was denied further federal funds and for the time being is dead. What is not dead however is the noise caused by present day jets. In their earnest to ban the SST, its opponents have neglected noise made by present day jet aircraft.

The sound of a jet 100 feet away is about 145 decibles, nearly the amount of noise of a very loud rock band. In the vicinity of New York's J.F.K. International alone, one million people, including students in about ninety schools, live in what an official of the Federal Aviation Agency describes as "a zone of unacceptable annoyance."

Studies concerning the annoyance of noise were conducted among Londoners living near London airport and in a number of U.S. cities near military airbases. From the thousands of people interviewed came interesting statistics. For one thing, in any noisy environment, regardless of noise intensity, about a quarter of the inhabitants are not disturbed. This type of person can tolerate living near noisy areas like airplane flight paths.

A tenth of those interviewed were disturbed at just about any noise not of their own making. People of this type were also dissatisfied with many other things around them. In areas where there is a specific source pro cing constant noise, such as the airplane, about a third of the people became accustomed to the noise and a quarter became annoyed.

Factors other than noise enter into the annoyance caused by aircraft operations. Among the more important are the average duration of flyovers, the number of flyovers per day, and the time of day they occur.

Tests indicate that doubling the duration of each flyover or doubling the number of flyovers per day is equivalent to a three or four PNdB increase in the level of a single flyover. PNdB is the perceived noise level in decibels, which takes into account the individual's judgement of the loudness of various types of noises.

People are more sensitive to aircraft noise during the late evening and night mainly because other noises are lower. Some studies indicate that noise levels during the late evening and early morning must be lower than noises during the day in order for people to judge them equally.

Steps have been taken for several years to curb the adverse effects of aircraft noise. In 1952 the Dolittle Report pointed out that "positive efforts should be continued by both governments and industry to reduce or control aircraft noise to people on the ground."

As early as 1966 the British Ministry of Aviation specified maximum permissible noise levels around London airport. At Kennedy airport in New York the Port Authority, authorized that noise levels for jet takeoffs over neighborhoods not exceed 112 PNdB.

In a March 1968 issue of Business Week John Wiley, then Director of Aviation for the New York Port Authority, mentioned three ways of lessening aircraft noise. People could be moved away from it; it could be reduced at its source or, as a third solution, noise could be moved away from people.

One airport, Los Angeles International, has taken the approach of moving people away from the noise. The airport has bought land and houses between the westend of its runways and the Pacific Ocean and also has torn down houses all at the cost of 20 million.

Instead of buying property around the airport, one proposed solution has been to soundproof houses in the noisiest zone. However the cost for doing so is staggering. Some figures run as high as 240 million dollars for Kennedy, O'Hare, and Los Angeles airports alone.

Nasa (National Aeronautics And Space Administration) has been studying methods of reducing noise at its source. Since 1967 it has been experimenting with an engine which when operational will reduce noise as much as 30 decibles. This amount of reduction would reduce takeoff and approach noise to a relatively quiet 94-95 decibles. According to sources within the field, engines similiar to this type won't be operational for another 2 or 3 years.

But in the meantime there is still the problem of jet noise. A current solution to the problem is to fit silencing devices to the engine exhaust ports of our present day jets. Sources within the FAA say retrofit, as the process is called, could be the rule late next year.

A retrofit program would not only be expensive but, according to some sources not result in a substantial reduction of jet noise. The cost to $1,000,000 and, according to McDonnel Douglas, would only reduce noise 2 to 5 decibles.

Mr. Wiley's third method of reducing aircraft noise, moving it away from people, has been frequently employed by airport authorities. Most major airports have preferential runways that lead planes over water or vacant land. At Kennedy airport in New York, the Port Authority has carried runway extensions costing several million dollars, solely out of noise abatement considerations.

Some airports even require planes taking off to climb as steeply as possible to a certain altitude and then coast on minimul power to a higher altitude to minimize noise in populated areas. Other airports solve the noise problem by requiring planes to follow a river, highway or other unpopulated area.

Airlines are also playing a role in noise control. Northwest Airlines requires its pilots to use a steep climbing pattern when taking off, to insure that people on the ground are subjected to as little noise as possible from its planes. American Airlines recently ordered flight recorders for some of its planes which will permit the recording of all pilot reactions, including adherence to noise control procedures.

Airport operators are facing a growing number of state regulations. Airports in California are facing new noise regulations set by the state Department of Aeronautics. These rules are designed to reduce noise around jet airports to less than one half present levels by 1986.

Aviation noise is a unique problem. Unique from the standpoint that the problem lies not only in reducing aviation noise but also in the solutions. Every solution puts the burden of responsibility on one party. For instance a regulation known as Federal Air Regulation 36 was put into practice by the FAA, limiting the sound an aircraft can emit.

Although new jetliners such as the McDonell Douglas DC-10 and Lockheed L-1000 will satisfy this regulation earlier aircraft will not. With slumping airline profits, at $600,000 to one million dollars per plane retrofit does not seem feasible.

A program is needed that would coordinate the efforts of the aviation industry, the airlines, the federal government and the public. These four parties would covene to map out an assault on aviation noise. Then each party would work seperately to work out details in their own area. After which all four parties would convene a second time to draw up a national guideline concerning noise. Programs like this or similar must be started soon or we can look forward to continued annoyance of aviation noise.

OK's Senior Committee

Senate Back To Work

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

A committee to run Senior class activities was formally established by the Student Senate last night. Membership in the body will now be open to anyone who shows his desire to join by attending two organization meetings in the Spring of his Junior year.

The Senior Committee will handle the functions formerly run by class government. The Student Senate abolished class government earlier this year, at the urging of several class officers. Among the traditional Senior functions are: a Senior Day picnic, presentation of a Class Gift, payment of a reunion fee for future alumni events, and organization of Commencement ceremonies.

The constitution accepted by the Senate sets up the following procedure for the establishment of membership in future years. During the month of April, three meetings of prospective Seniors will be held, sponsored by the Senior Committee of the preceding year. Anyone who will be a Senior becomes a member of the Committee by attending at least two of the three organizational meetings in the Spring.

Committee meetings will be considered valid only when at least one percent of the total Senior enrollment registers attendance at them. Enrollment for next year's Senior Class is projected at around 3,869, which means a Senior Committee meeting would have to be attended by approximately 39 Committee members for its actions to be valid next year.

Standing membership will be subject to regular attendance of meetings. Any member missing two successive meetings loses his membership. Any Senior who attends two successive meetings can become a full member at any time.

Any action of the Senior Committee will be subject to class referendum. Results of a referendum will be binding when one-fifth of the total enrolled Seniors vote.

Funding of the Senior Committee will be by a direct per-capita tax levied on all members of the class, with the approval of the Student Senate. The outgoing Committee officers will prepare the budget for the following year and determine the tax accordingly, subject to Committee and Senate approval.

If there is a balance in the budget at the end of the year, it will revert to a Class Reunion Fund.

The Student Senate last month passed the budget for next year's Senior Committee. The tax is set at $4/member of the Class of '72. Total income from the tax is estimated at $15,476. Added income in the Senior Committee budget is expected to come from the sale of Senior Day tickets.

Court Reaches Dog Decision

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

In the first case of it's kind heard by the Student General Court concerning the keeping of a dog in a dormitory, the Court last Thursday declared that the canine's owner, Kenneth Boyajian, guilty of the charge. A writ of error was sent to the Area Judiciary by the General Court.

In it's findings, the Court cited a statute in the student handbook which forbids the keeping of a live animal in a residence hall. The court declared that this statute was both constitutional and that it was justified because it served to protect the health and safety of dorm residents.

Mr. Boyajian was put on restriction for maintaining a pet. Discipline probation for the fall semester of 1971-1972 was also imposed upon the defendant.

The court's position on the matter was explained in an interview with Bob Rochford of the General Court. The court said that it may be desirable to have exceptions to the rule, but in this case there were no exceptions.

Afro-Am Supports Today's Moratorium

Today has been designated Moratorium Day in Commemoration of the atrocities committed against Black Students at Jackson State College and White Students at Kent State University a year ago.

The W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies believes that the issues of violent political repression which these actions represent is one of continuing and increased importance to Black People in particular and the American People in general. For this reason they support the Moratorium and announce to students that the Department will devote today to discussions and analysis of the problems of political repression.

Black Students are called upon to address themselves to these problems and the broad-ranging activities of this day.

Undergrad TAs Being Studied

A social and behavioral science committee appointed by Dean Alphange is presently studying the effectiveness of using undergraduate teacher's assistants.

Undergraduate teacher's assistants are used in the Psychology and Sociology introductory courses. They are generally juniors or seniors majoring in the department with a considerable amount of course experience.

"We are trying to assess their effectiveness to terms of how they're able to accomplish the course objectives", said T.M. Fraser, chariman of the committee.

The committee would like student or faculty opinions on the matter and will arrange private meetings to discuss the subject. T.M. Fraser can be contacted in Machmer 205 or phone 549-0700.

Workshop Theme Racism And War

"Racism and the War" will be the theme of a workshop sponsored by the Community Development and Human Relations Student Group. The purpose of the workshop is to increase awareness of the prejudices involved in the war in Vietnam and to discuss people's views on the subject.

All interested are welcome to attend tonight at 8:00 in Room 803 of the Campus Center.

1800 More Arrested Today

Protests Continue In D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Police broke up an antiwar rally outside the Justice Department Tuesday, arresting about 800 protesters who refused to comply quickly with orders to leave.

The exact figure was not known immediately, but 90 minutes after the arrests began 15 to 20 busloads with 40 to 50 people each had been taken to the U.S. District Court lockup. It brought the day's arrests to nearly 1,500 and sent the two-day total well past 8,000.

CLEAR UP TIE—UP--A Washington policeman swings his nightstick today to clear antiwar protesters from an intersection where they momentarily tied up rush hour traffic. Several were arrested. This took place at Connecticut and N Streets, northwest. (AP Wirephoto)

The protesters generally went without resistance, singing to guitars and flutes and holding up two fingers in the peace sign.

The rally had lasted nearly two hours when a police sound truck announced: "A police line has been established. Leave this area immediately or be subject to arrest."

Policemen closed off both ends of 10th Street between Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues so quickly that many who wanted to leave had no chance to do so.

Some of the estimated 1,000 people in the block asked Deputy Chief O. W. Davis about leaving and were told "go up to the line and the men will put you on one of those buses. That's the only way you can leave."

A block away, at 11th and Pennsylvania some policemen drove their motorscooters into the crowd, knocking several down. Later at least one cannister of tear gas was fired at that location.

Police blocked off busy Pennsylvania Avenue, often called the Avenue of Presidents, from 8th to 13th Street, accomplishing what mass traffic-stalling tactics Monday failed to do: raise hob with traffic.

Some demonstrators attempted to disrupt traffic again this morning and again without success. Police arrested 685.

The police action at the Justice Department broke up what had been a quiet rally, watched occasionally by Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell from his fifth floor window. Mitchell was seen on a balcony observing the mass arrests later.

The crowd on 10th Street had been as large as 5,000 but a poor speaker system made it difficult to hear and many of the people drifted away. Police advanced on them from both ends of the street packing people into a smaller area.

The arrests began a minute later. At one point reporters saw several policemen beat five demonstrators with clubs. A sergeant stopped them.

Police buses arrived to carry off prisoners.

Among those arrested was John Froines, sought on a warrant charging him with conspiring with antiwar leader Rennie Davis in Monday's disruptive tactics. Davis was arrested Monday and his bond was set at $25,000. The two men were among the Chicago 7 conspiracy defendants.

Some 1,500 of the 7,000 arrested in Monday's futile try at government disruption still were in city jails as the crowd of up to 5,000 marched through downtown streets to the Justice Department.

Earlier in the day, during an abortive attempt by protesters to continue the attempt to play hob with workbound traffic, police arrested 685 more on varying charges.

As the demonstrators marched toward the Justice Department they even stopped for red lights, causing one marcher to mutter: "Some revolutionaries!"

In front of the squat, block-square building they began to chant "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh, the NLF is gonna win." But a march leader scolded the crowd and told it to say something "the people in Justice can understand." The cry subsided.

Later, someone played the National Anthem on a trumpet. The bulk of the crowd stood and some sang along-putting emphasis on the line "gave proof through the night that our flag was still there."

Government workers watched the demonstration from the periphery of the crowd. The temperature was in the low 60s, the sky cloudless and the protesters good-humored.

Passing motorcycle policemen at one point, the marchers chanted: "Higher pay for cops. Higher pay for cops." The policemen all but applauded.

On Monday, bands of antiwar protesters roamed the streets, harassing workbound government employes by sitting in the middle of the street, blocking the road with cars, throwing nail-studded boards and other debris. With 4,000 federal troops augmenting 5,100 city police, the tactic failed and mass arrests followed.

A similar attempt to stop traffic was threatened for Tuesday, but failed to materialize. Demonstration leaders had targeted four of Washington's heavy-traffic circles.

But the blocking attempts failed, although 685 more were arrested before the Justice Department march. Most of the arrests were on minor charges and involved individuals or small groups and there was none of the tear-gassing and billy-clubbing of the previous day.

Morning traffic moved, if anything, faster than usual.

The President, who was at San Clemente, Calif., during Monday's demonstration, returned to the White House Monday night.

"The President felt they were dealt with appropriately," press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said of the way demonstrators were handled.

"The over-all conduct and restraint of the District of Columbia police in dealing with the situation," drew presidential praise, Ziegler said.

But Ziegler declined to comment on the procedures under which the demonstrators were arrested. The procedures, short-cutting traditional methods of filling out arrest forms and photographing prisoners with arresting officers, have drawn protests from demonstrators and their lawyers.

Chief Judge Harold H. Green of the W.D.C. Superior Court issued a show-cause order requiring officials to explain the mass arrests.

The American Civil Liberties Union accused the government of producing phony arrest reports long after the demonstrators were set up at the Washington Redskins football practice field, a jail exercise yard and a sports arena.

The ACLU said government lawyers filled out arrest forms Monday night, inserting the names of a few policemen at random. Normally the name of the arresting officer goes on such forms, she / he can be called later to testify.

The ACLU asserted also that police made indiscriminate arrests, sweeping up people who were not part of the demonstrations.

The Pentagon announced Tuesday that 6,000 Army paratroopers and Marines brought in to Washington would return to their home bases that night. Some 4,000 other federal troops from nearby posts remained at staging areas.

With the antiwar protests which have been going on with little interruption since April 24 apparently winding down, the demonstration-weary capital faces a counter rally Saturday.

Dr. Carl McIntire, fundamentalist radio preacher, is sponsoring a "U.S. March for Victory" which is to parade along Pennsylvania Avenue and rally on the Mall. He said Tuesday he expects the crowd to exceed that of the April 24 peace demonstration which drew a throng estimated by police at more than 200,000.

A Decent Serving...

By GILBERT J. SALK

A couple of quick flashes for one side of the sandwich, reviews of some books on free food for the other side, and a rap on some political alternatives for the meat. Happy eating ..

Summer vacation's getting closer. Just want to remind you that you don't have to do the same old thing this summer. There are a few relevant jobs to be had, and there's a counseling service on campus to help you find yours. Contact Elaine Fraser at the United Christian Foundation (52661 or 52789) for help.

Draft Counseling Services now has Issues 1-8 of Mother Earth News in supply. If you are looking for practical how-to info on alternate lifestyles, look into this magazine. It's one of the best (and they've asked me to do a couple of articles for them.)—ego trip.

For some time now, I've been wondering what would happen if some people ran for Congress on a radical platform with the major priority of disseminating information. Vote-getting would be secondary, so that no compromises of ideals would be made. The candidate would be trying to bridge the gap between the traditional politics of compromise and a new politics of conscience. For example...

There's a real need for completely socialized medicine. The only people today who can afford to be sick are the very rich and the very poor, and the poor don't get decent medical attention. Every American should be entitled to free medical, dental, and psychiatric care. There is no excuse other than greed for denying access to health facilities to anyone.

There should be a guaranteed minimum income for all Americans, regardless of age or ability to work. This minimum should be sufficient to provide for all life-support needs. A working figure might be $5000 for each single adult, $3000 for each married adult (two really can live more cheaply than one), and $2000 for each child. These figures could be geared to the cost of living, so that a 2% rise in the cost of living would be matched by a 2% rise in the allotment. The cost, perhaps, could come solely out of a new tax on corporate profits. This would mean that there would be no more job slaves, and that businesses would be unable to continue ripping people off so their directors can get rich.

Or what about abolition of all laws which obstruct free sexual expression between consenting adults. There is no rationale for making homosexuality, oralism, transvestism, analism, fetishism, or any other sexual practices illegal as long as the participants are happy.

If all anti-drug laws were abolished and clinics opened where there would be free drugs for addicts and drug dependents, and medical advice and assistance for those who want it, the cost of society would be tremendously reduced. Drug-related theft would disappear. This would mean that we would no longer have to pay to replace stolen goods or to police to try to solve these crimes. We would no longer have to pay the salaries of narcotics agents, and customs procedures would be simpler.

No woman should be forced to have a baby she does not want. There should be free birth control and abortion clinics open to all who want to use them.

Maybe we should start talking seriously about unilateral disarmament. And consider paying students for going to school. And think about doing away with the concept of imprisonment as a way of dealing with lawbreakers (especially in the case of crimes against property--is property really worth more than freedom?) Maybe we should start finding the owners and managers of polluters, rather than fining the company. Maybe we should ban internal combustion engines from inside city limits--with the exception of emergency vehicles--and replace roadways with grass strips. Use huge conveyor belts to move people within the city.

Dig on it. They can all be done. PEACE.

Book Reviews

Nature provides a great abundance of food for those who know what to look for where. There are some handy books available to help you learn what to eat, how to find it, and what to do with it. The Canadian government publishes Mushroom Collecting for Beginners (free, Canada Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ont. Profusely illustrated, it tells you how to discern edible mushrooms from poisonous, and tasty from inedible. It is small, easy to carry and easy to use. In Free for the Eating ($4.95, Stackpole Books, Harrisburg, Pa.) Bradford Angier lists 100 wild plants (with line drawings) which are good to eat, easily found, and usually passed over. As a bonus, he gives hints on how to prepare them for tasteful eating. Wild Edible Plants of the Western U.S. by Donald Kirk ($3.95, Naturegraph Publ., Healdsburg, Cal.) is technically a slightly better book. Plants are listed by Latin names, and each is accompanied by an illustration and descriptions of uses and preparations, habitats and distribution, and a description. The book is obviously somewhat limited in use in this part of the country, but there are many plants which are common to both east and west.

Course Notes

Name: Community Mental Health (Psychology 385-6)
Instructor: Stuart Golann

The course is centered around a field experience in community mental health setting such as the Northampton State Hospital. Students work with patients as companion-counselors. The aim of this course is to explore roles for undergraduates in community institutions that provide service to community members. This is planned as a year's course for 3 credits each semester. Students are encouraged to consider the course only if it would be possible to enroll in both 385 and 386. For more information and instructor's permission, students should attend a meeting on May 5 (tonight) at 7 p.m. in SBA 120.

Name: Natural History of Man (Botany 387)
Instructor: Carl P. Swanson

Directed to non-science majors at the junior-senior level. Discussion will center around the uniqueness of man in terms of biological and cultural evolution and the probability of his future with regard to population, food, energy and space. 3 credits.

Name: Botany 175
Cancelled

Name: Physiology (Botany)
Changed to Plant Metabolism

Name: N.E.S. tutoring program (Education) 3 credits

Name: French Seminar-l'Image de la femme et du feminin dans la litterature francaise.
Instructor: Elaine Marks

The aim of the course is to explore such questions as the role of the image, why and how images change, the possible existence of an "eternal feminine". Non majors also.

Name: Italian 126
Only intensive elementary option for beginning students. 146 will not be offered. Meets 5 days a week for a total of 8 hours and develops the four language skills speaking listening, reading and writing.

Meet The Yogi This Summer

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

This evening at 8:00 in Thompson 104, a meeting will be held to discuss this summer's International Symposium on Consciousness and Creativity. A movie followed by a discussion period will explain the program scheduled for this summer.

The summer program will consist of a 4 week teacher training course to train teachers in Transcendental Meditation. This course will be conducted by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. Following this a 2 week international symposium will be conducted.

The Maharishi has an investigative procedure in terms of modern science. This will enable a person to widen his experiences to include the finer levels of his own thinking process. The complex change produced through this process is considered to be the fourth physiological state.

A whole science is developing on the basis of this investigative procedure. A large number of sciences are using this procedure including Physical Education and Medicine. An educational benefit can be derived from studying this method. It provides a reference point for the study of any other field.

This course also gives students a broader range of what is going on without their feeling that a course is lacking in relevance. After taking this course, future subjects studied by the student relate more meaningfully.

The prerequisite for attending this summer's symposium requires that a person be practicing the technique.

The prerequisite for attending this summer's symposium requires that a person be practicing the technique. By attending this evening's meeting a person can start the practice. The first part of this summer's course will train teachers to impart this technique and to increase the intellectual standing of the technique. Attending the symposium this summer will be leaders from many fields.

UHartford Announces Peace Corps Internship

The University of Hartford with the City of Hartford Public Schools have joined together with the National Teachers Corps/Peace Corps Program to offer Liberal Arts and Education majors with a strong Math or Science background the opportunity to:

1. Complete the requirements for a M.A. Degree in Education with a Math or Science major;
2. Become certified to teach high school Math or Science in the state of Connecticut.
3. Work as an Intern teacher in an urban high school, teaching Math or Science for approximately fifteen hours each week for one school year.
4. Earn 90 dollars per week plus dependent allowance with all college tuition paid.
5. Teach in Kenya, Africa for two years as a Peace Corps Volunteer while earning $75.00 a month. All living costs and travel to and from Kenya paid.

To provide additional information and application forms, Dr. Ted Urich, Director of this program will be available on this campus at 239 Whitmore, Placement Office on May 7, 1971, between the hours of 10:00 A.M. and 3:00 P.M.

CHATHAM, Mass.(AP) - A Chatham building contractor, Richard A. Swallow, said Tuesday he plans to run in the presidential preference primary in New Hampshire, as a Republican candidate.

Swallow said he expects to draw the votes of those critical of President Nixon, and said he will challenge Nixon on the war in Southeast Asia.

Swallow, who has never held elected office, termed himself a moderate.

Magic Film Here Tonight at 8

The last "College Life" of the semester will be held Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The new Andre Kole film shall be shown. It will present thirty minutes of some of the most daring and difficult magical tricks ever performed. Mr. Kole will attempt to cut his wife in half. He will also speak of Jesus Christ and his personal relationship with Him.

Andre Kole is America's leading illusionist and is presently a traveling representative for Campus Crusade for Christ. He performed at UMass last year and has traveled throughout the world presenting magic and Jesus Christ. Mr. Kole has received degrees in Psychology and Philosophy and has done much investigation in the supernatural and spiritualism.

Student sharing and refreshments will also be a part of the evening.

Dadaists secretive? Dadaists practical jokers? Never, says the Dada Surrealist Festival, and to prove their point they have supplied this list of what they insist are certified scheduled events:

Watch out for ptomaine poisoning. A young lady nibbles on a statue's large toe in this scene from Brunuel's "L'Age d'Or".

•Today at 4 p.m. Lucy Lippard, author of "Pop Art," "Surrealists on Art," and "Changes Essays in Art Criticism", talks about Surrealist painting. 231 Herter (at 8 p.m. she will speak in McConnell Hall, Smith).

Today at 8 p.m. "L'Age d'Or" ("The Golden Age"), Bunuel's greatest film, long banned. The print to be shown is supposedly the only one in the U.S. Plus other rare films such as the Futurist "This" (Bragalia), "The Fall of the House of Usher" and "Lot of Sodom" (both Watson/Webber), and "Sherlock, Jr." ("Buster Keaton"). The program will be introduced by Dwight MacDonald, former film critic for Esquire and James Card, curator of Eastman House, Rochester (the same films will be shown Thursday night in Stoddard Hall in Smith).

•Thursday 10:30 a.m. Al Hansen directs a Happening, "Silver City for Andy Warhol" at the Amherst dump. Those interested in attending should meet at the Colonial Lounge, SU, at 10 a.m.

•Thursday 1 p.m. Al Hansen directs another Happening, "Car-Hippy", on the street north of Campus Center. Those who have cars and would like to participate should call 5-0437 between 12 and 2 daily.

•Thursday 4 p.m. Rene Belance, Haitian surrealist poet, reads his work (with translations) and recounts his experiences with Breton. Colonial lounge, SU.

Thursday 8 p.m. "The Wedding on the Eiffel Tower", Jean Cocteau's play done by a Hampshire College group directed by David Nicksay; followed by a solo performance by Keith Hollingworth, 231 Herter.

Friday, 8 p.m. Film marathon. Part I: Films in the Surrealist tradition: "Bells of Atlantis" (Hugo), "Violons d'Ingres" (Brunus), "The Vampire" and "Love Life of the Octopus" (Painleve), "Astronauts" (Borowczyk) will be shown in 106 Thompson. Part II will start in Pierpont lounge (Southwest) around 10:30-11 and continue till dawn.

Saturday: Group of 25 students trained by the Hollingworths performs. Time and place to be announced.

Sunday afternoon: Art Dept. Event (Profs. Ruskill, Dube, Schleappi) to be staged in Northampton. All interested in attending call Mark Ruskill, 5-2652 or 253-9674.

Monday (May 10th), 7:30 p.m. Films in French (no subtitles): Cinema du Diable: "Surrealism au French film"; "Ubu Roi" (Jarry) 106 Thompson.

Tuesday (May 11th), 7:30 p.m. Films in French (no subtitles): Zazi dans le metro (Queneau, Malle, Science & Authers).

Wednesday, May 12th, 8:15 p.m. Ubu puppet play (translated by Jim Berman, directed by Demian) SU Ballroom (at Mt. Holyoke May 8, Amherst May 9, Hampshire May 10, and South May 11).

Unscheduled: the artist Italo Scanga will be on campus some time between May 5th and 8th.

The Dada Definition

By CINDY PRICE
MDC Staff

The obvious question is: What is Dada/Surrealism? Dada is an art movement. The underlying idea is to destroy or explode conventional patterns of thought. The word Dada is itself a nonsense word and has no real meaning. The artists and writers of the Dada school attempt to contradict "good sense" or the accepted way of viewing the world. Their art is meant to shock the viewer. One artist in 1930, exhibited a urinal in a famous Paris art gallery. Needless to say this created quite a scene. Another artist created a fountain out of a urinal.

Surrealism or super reality is an offshoot of Dada. Followers of this movement try to look beyond reality. They feel man has narrowed himself by limiting himself to using merely rational thought patterns.

The Surrealists are greatly interested in the subconscious and the unconscious of the individual. They attempt to delve into and develop the "total man". To achieve a state in which they could consider their subconscious, the Surrealists employed such techniques as hypnosis, drugs and self-induced sleep.

The leader of this movement was Andre Breton of France. During the first World War he worked in a clinic for shell-shocked soldiers. After reading some of the theories of Freud, he became interested in the subconscious. Many of the soldiers he worked with were unconscious but some of their utter thoughts, while in this state, seemed to make sense if viewed in a different perspective. Breton began experimenting with using different perspectives in literature. To do this he concentrated on using sharp images in juxta-position. An example of this technique is a famous first line of one of Paul Eluard's poems: "The earth is blue like an orange."

The Surrealists put together images that are startling and seemingly illogical in order to shock people. Perhaps, through shock, people will begin to see new perspectives or new ways to order their thoughts. These artists and writers try to get people attuned to the world of thought beyond the rational. For this reason, their art and literature is prone to be startling, if not scandalous.

If for instance, you might notice various trees on campus being plastered with feathers. Or while walking in the stream of students during class changing, you might be startled to see a group of five runners coming charging at you all singing a certain note in unison.

All these people just are not feeling the after effects of Spring Concert weekend they are participating in the Dada-Surrealist Festival.

"Goodness, Could There Be Anyone Like That?"

The New Isolationism

By NEIL COLEMAN
MDC Staff

I had vowed that I would cease writing because one, I don't want to monopolize the medium or bore people and two, it's not really my main advocation, as is obvious, but three, I really got pissed-off today. I was overhear a comment by some faculty member to the effect that he didn't mind students protesting as long as they didn't protest on his time. I hope that this sentiment is not representative, but some recent events seem to indicate that some faculty members sympathize with it.

I don't believe that I have to say anything about the comment itself for it falls of its own weight and no doubt the faculty member would never have made the statement if he had known that a student was around to hear it. Such is usually the case when educated people hold prejudicial opinions; they say them behind closed doors. None the less this comment does bring to the fore another fundamental position that has recently been put forth in the pages of the Collegian. It is the so-called "ivory covered tower" theory of education.

It is proposed in some quarters that the university should somehow remain above or isolated from the problems of society. It is proposed that in order to maintain academic freedom the university must be kept away from "pressure of agitation on the part of both, established and passing interests," like the peace movement. Let us first examine the proposition that academics are above society. No professor of English would deny that every work of literature is effected by the values of the society which produced it. Likewise historical interpretation varies with the society which interprets it. Philosophy, in part, mirrors society. -existentialism is much more a product of our age than it would have been of the 16th century. It can thus be said that academics depend upon society. Now for the professors themselves. Every human being is in part a product of his own experience. It can therefore be said that every teacher brings into the classroom certain of his own opinions and prejudices. Therefore in so much as academics represent man they can not be removed from man's society or go uneffected by his problems.

Where therefore are we to look for support of this proposition of academic isolation-perhaps to the ROTC building, perhaps to all the war related government research being done on campuses. Maybe we are to look at the Corruption of the word academic, that has changed from a leisurely pursuit of knowledge. (Original Greek meaning), into an assembly line process whose purpose is to make a student fit into society. The present academic structure is aimed at giving the students the skills necessary to get a job at IBM or a degree, when the real aim of education should be to provide a student with the knowledge to enable him to change and improve society. The question is what is the purpose of education. Again if it is to be humane, it must be involved in human affairs.

It is this assembly line process of conformity which certain faculty hold and try to impose upon students which leads to conflict. The idealistic student who is dedicated to bettering society is confronted by faculty who want to maintain the status quo by hiding behind the wall of supposed academic integrity and condemning temporary outside pressures. In their reaction to past experiences, many faculty members are retreating from their obligations as intellectuals. Because they were once burnt, they are now trying to isolate themselves from society and in doing so they do more harm than McCarthyism ever did for they make academic irrelevant to society and if it is not relevant to man, his society and his problems, what purpose does it serve?

G-Men On Campus

Among the 800 to 1,000 documents stolen from the FBI's branch office in Media, Pa., last month were several that disclosedthe remarkable lengths to which the bureau went to collect information about members of the academic community of Swarthmore, the small, Quaker college outside Philadelphia. One document indicated that the G-men had prevailed upon the chief campus switchboard operator, the chief campus security officer, the local police chief and the town postmaster to keep tabs on Daniel Bennett, a philosophy professor suspected of radical associations. Another reported the bureau had used the registrar's secretary to collect background information on Jacqueline Reuss, the 21-year-old daughter of Wisconsin Democratic Congressman Henry S. Reuss. Last week, Newsweek's Thomas DeFrank visited Swarthmore to find out what impact news of the FBI's activities has had on the college. His report:

...But there are other, less friendly, currents in the air: students mutter about an FBI network of paid student informants on campus; others swear they will no longer use the campus telephone system; a professor, not satisfied his visitor has been cleared by the college press office, asks for two sets of credentials.

To be sure, nobody was greatly surprised at the most recent disclosures of the FBI's interest in Swarthmore. Ever since black students staged a sit-in at Parrish Hall two years ago, most of the Swarthmore community had assumed that the bureau kept up some sort of surveillance of campus radical groups. This feeling was fortified last fall when FBI agents and local police invaded an off-campus commune in search of two Brandeis coeds wanted for killing a Boston policeman during a bank robbery.

But the news that several campus employees might have been in league with the FBI has jolted the campus. Particularly galling to students and some faculty members is the reported role of the fiftyish switchboard operator, Mrs. Judy Feiy, who, according to one of the purloined documents, agreed to inform the bureau of long-distance phone calls to and from philosophy professor Bennett. Since the document surfaced, several students have claimed that they long suspected Mrs. Feiy of eavesdropping, and the student newspaper has suggested that "our of concern for her personal comfort" she give up her job until her relationship with the FBI is clarified.

Despite the ominous note in the editorial, none of the employees named as informants has been harassed or intimidated by students--and all, for that matter, have denied that they've done anything wrong. The two other alleged collaborators, security chief Henry Peirsol and secretary to the registrar Marjorie Webb, are widely excused from wrongdoing--Peirsol because his job, after all, is maintaining security; and Miss Webb, on the ground that she was perhaps merely following routing practice by responding to the RBI's request for a background dossier on Jacqueline Reuss.

Indeed, much of the campus ire seems directed at the administration, which, one professor says, may have been derelict becuse of its Quaker tradition. "One of the signs of Quakerness," he explains, "has been never to put anything in writing. The administration has been remarkably remiss in specifying what is public information and what is private."

(Excerpts from Newsweek 4/26/71)

No Pet Rule: A Need For Revision

(Ed. note-The following article was written by Staff Sheehan, Counsel to the Plaintiff in the recent General Court case NORCROSS vs. BOYAJIAN.)

On May 29, the General Court handed down its first decision on the legality of students keeping animals in their dorm rooms.

In this case, the Plaintiff stated that the Defendent had kept a dog in his room in violation of a regulation in the Student Handbook. That rule provides that "No live animals or insects may be kept in residence halls. Temporary exception is allowed only under proscribed conditions for students taking Zoology 200."

This case had previously been heard by the Area East Judiciary. The decision of that body was that the defendent was guilty of keeping a dog in his room, but no sanction was levied and the dog was allowed to remain.

The Plaintiff appealed this ruling, and the General Court agreed to hear the case de novo, or anew.

The Prosecution opened with the testimony of a Professor in the Department of Veterinary Science. He outlined ten of the more common transmissable diseases (Zoonosis) between vertebrates and humans. Next, the Supervisor of Building Maintenance for the Eastern hall of the campus told of the janitor displeasure with cleaning up after animals, the damage done to rugs and furniture by pets, and the desertion of animals during vacations and holida,s.

Then the head of the Environmental Health and Safety Office outlined his many encounters with the problem and the necessity of having the current regulation enforced or a new policy implemented, with provisions for sanitation codes, periodic animal health examinations, and some form of animal registration. The Veterinarian, who testified earlier, agreed with these provisions if pets were allowed in dormitories.

The Prosecution finished its presentation by discussing the Cance House Pet Proposal as an alternative to the rule under consideration. That document had been negotiated with almost all responsible agencies on campus and is scheduled to be submitted to the Dean of Students Office and the Student Senate soon.

The Defense argued that the dog in question should be permitted to stay because it was very well-trained, liked by most residents in the dorm and the personal property, or "effect", of the Defendent. The Student Senate Constitution states that no student may be deprived of personal property unless the rights or safety of other students are infringed upon.

Further, the contested regulation was discriminatory in that it didn't apply to all students (i.e. Zoo 200 students are exempted). Heads of Residence's also were cited as keeping animals in residence halls.

Finally, the Counsel to the Defendent contended that, if the rule were applied in this case, then it would be discriminatory, in that many animals would remain in dorms unchallenged.

The Plaintiff's Counsel responded to the exceptions to the rule. First, Zoo 200 is not offered this or next semester. Also, the University Health Council had recently voted to recommend that this exception be struck from the Handbook.

And second, while the present Head of Residence contract had no mention for animals, the new contract for the Fall will specifically bar all pets.

The Justices received the case at this point. After a half hour deliberation, a guilty verdict was handed down. The two sanctions listed were that the Defendent must not keep any animal in his room and that he be placed on disciplinary probation until the end of the Fall, 1971, semester.

Since many animals are kept in dorms, this precedent ruling could have wide-spread impact on campus. Under the present rule, all animal owners are now legally liable and can anticipate a similar penalty if brought to student court.

But this judicial action is not an adequate solution to pet problems. In its six years as a part of the Handbook, the no pet rule has never been revised. Those students wishing to keep animals in dorms may propose new policies which respond to the problems involved.

As stated in the above General Court case by acknowledged experts, several points should be covered in any such new proposals.

1. Responsibility for each pet should be determined through some registration prodedure.
2. A sanitation code should be specified.
3. Animals should be examined by a veterinarian.
4. All dorm residents, living in the area, should agree to the animal's presence.
5. Some mechanism to enforce the new policy should be instituted.

The alternative to formulating and obtaining approval of such a new policy is clear. The General Court, in its ruling, has stated what legal sanction the students keeping animals in dorms can expect. A new incentive has been offered to those who feel that the present rule is in need of revision.

Letters To The Editor

Another Kind of Action

To the Editor:

Since the course of the so-called anti-war protests in Washington, D.C., has shifted from the merely intellectual parades and rock concerts of April 24th to the present absurd maneuver of attempting to "stop the Government" by cordoning off buildings and blockading rush-hour traffic, I feel strongly obligated to speak out on behalf of rational, yet nonetheless dedicated, organizations which are using practical methods to press for a swift end of the illegal, immoral Indochina war.

If, prior to the latest "Spring peace offensive" it was already common knowledge that 73% of the American people favored a complete withdrawal of American military forces from Indochina by the end of 1971 (as the Gallop Poll has recorded)--then I cannot imagine what purpose would be served by even 100 million people thronging to the nation's capital, unless their specific intent was to inform the President and the Congress that in the 1972 election 73% (or more) of the nation's electorate would unseat pro-war or fence-straddling incumbents and elect true peace candidates to replace them. Despite the presence of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War--surely the most legitimate and credible of all the anti-war protestors, even in the jaundiced eyes of the more hawkish Congressmen--I feel that the millions of dollars spent by the multitudes to transport their egocentricities to Washington would have been better invested in a hugh "anti-war chest," such as that which a group of citizens, calling itself the Committee For Peace and New Priorities, is trying to raise. The Committee, headquartered at 633 East Capitol Street, Washington, D.C., 20003, is hoping to raise $50,000 to pay the traveling and advertising costs for a bipartisan group of Senators and Representatives who, over the next few weeks, will be barnstorming the major cities in the United Stwtes to seek massive grassroots support for anti-war legislation setting a firm date--December 31, 1971--for complete U.S. withdrawal from Indochina. Such legislation, entitled the Vietnam Disengagement Act of 1971 (S.376), has already been introduced by Senators George McGovern and Mark Hatfield; but it will require unprecedented popular support to pass the Senate.

Another anti-war organization, applying a different form of pressure to end the war, is the National Council to Repeal the Draft, headquartered at 101 D Street, S.E., Washington, D.C., 20003. For three months NCRD has been lobbying in the Senate for passage of Senate Joint Resolution 20 (introduced by Senators Hatfield, McGovern, Church, Cranston, and Proxmire), which would abolish the Selective Service System by December 31, 1971. The importance of S.J. Res. 20 cannot be overlooked, since it is improbable that U.S. ground combat activities in Indochina could be carried on without draftees. In a statement on February 4, 1971, Senator John Stennis, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, pointed out that only 15% of those in Army rifle companies in Vietnam are true volunteers: 66% are draftees and 19% are draft-motivated volunteers. Senator Stennis and many others, including Senator Edward Kennedy, want to maintain the draft for "national security" reasons, one of which, I believe, is to guarantee combat troops for our Indochina "commitment." The House of Representatives has already voted to extend the draft for two more years. The Senate will begin considering draft-extension bills as early as May 10th. Those who profess such vehement opposition to the war should also be lobbying for draft appeal.

I suspect that the rather ill-equipped efforts of the May Day Tribe to shut down the city of Washington will prove, at best, abortive and futile; and to prevent this mindless action from conveniently distracting the President, the Congress, and the American public from the issue of the war itself, which has cost over $200 billion, over 54,000 Americans killed, and over 296,000 Americans crippled and wounded--I urge responsible protestors to place their weight behind peace candidates and legislation, not slogans and bricks.

Reason To Be Cool

To the Editor:

People attend peace gatherings for many reasons. Spring is the awakening of everything and it is not difficult to understand how the lustre of it all arouses people to take action for this beautiful cause; but spring peace demonstrations have become quite in vogue. A couple of weeks ago there was a rally at the pond so that those of us who wished to be counted in the numbers for peace but couldn't get to Washington could "do their part." Some people here at UMass attended the gathering who were really concerned about peace and a demonstration's affect on the rest of America etc.. There are those that do work for peace all year round and those who felt that this visit to the pond alone is helping to bring an end to the war in Indo-China.

Many were at the pond to hear music and meet new people which is fine but somehow in the milling about of people, the original intent to foster an end to the war was lost.

This weekend throngs of peace supporters were in Washington again. Several performers were on hand to entertain the crowds. Perhaps the presence of these celebraties increased the numbers in Washington because first, their love for peace being demonstrated by putting on a free concert may have swayed many of their fans to a hard stand against the war and second, it is not often that such a diversified as well as talented group gets together to give any kind of concert. The music must have been great.

There were some musicians at UMass this weekend and we had our own May Day Thing here in Amherst. My bicycle pump was ripped off my bike, a chap clad in a leather coat and Frye boots asked me for change and a parade of many competing for the hippiest outfit went strolling by.

Remember when not succumbing to fashions, letting all your hair grow and being kind to your fellow man meant a new freedom movement to us? I'm wondering what happened. I'm wondering why we must be entertained to support a cause we talk about as a real value. Would as many people go to Washington on May 1 and 2 to see Pete Seeger, Tim Hardin, Arlo Guthrie, Richie Havens, James Brown etc., sit in silence for the entire two days, giving up their talents and gifts as a sacrifice to expedite peace? What I'm essentially saying is, are we going to demonstrations for the right reasons? And When are we going to take year round action on our spring professing of peaceful dreams? Or at least admit what we're about and stop using the name of peace-a real value to some-for a reason to be cool.

Bail Money

To the Editor:

We are collecting money for UMass students and others who need bail money to get out of jail in Washington. There will be a student collecting in each dormitory. In addition there will be a table set up in the Student Union for the purpose of collection. We ask everyone to give at least a dollar. (If you paid even two dollars in taxes last year, including your phone bill, you gave more than a dollar to the war we are trying to stop.) Please be generous. Your name will be taken and the money will be returned to you if at all possible.

Value Your Heart

To the Editor:

It is a tradition that each year at this time the Brotherhood of Sigma Alpha Mu "bounces for beats" to raise money for the Heart Fund. We the pledges are looking forward to the weekend of May 5-8 to show both the Brotherhood, and especially the Heart Fund, that we care.

The name "Bounce for Beats" describes the drive in its original form: i.e., Brothers bouncing basketballs while others collect money for "heartbeats". This year's program includes so much more.

On Thursday, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. there will be a collection booth set up in the Campus Center. Later, from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m., there will be a folk fest in the Hatch. A concert outside the Little Hatch in Southwest will follow on Friday. It will last from 4:30-7:00 p.m. Friday night, from 7-1 a.m., we will collect money near the Pond. On Saturday the collection will be near Zayre from 10 a.m - 4 p.m. There will be no admission charged for the concert, although we count on your generosity to make our drive a success.

You probably know what its like to be involved in a fund-raising drive. Besides a given number of people, and a limited amount of time, and, of course a worthy cause, there is another essential factor: reaching people, a kind of empathy for the cause.

The Heart Fund maintains a certain "lifeline" through the threatening and crippling realites of heart disease. Through research, programs of prevention through mass education, and various services to the victims, it tries to maintain and restore life as it used to be.

But the Heart Fund can't do it alone. And, just as every person with a heart (literally) is a potential victim, so we consider everyone with a heart (figuratively) as a potential contributor.

If you value your health, if you value your heart, why not take this opportunity to share your good fortune?

This is what we think Brotherhood is really all about.

From The Mouths of Babes

To the Editor:

Recently I had the privilege of reading an essay written by a twelve year old girl who was moved to write about the demonstration in Washington, April 24. I quote parts of the essay:

"People want war. They don't listen to the children"

The child went on to express how the horrors of war frightened her; and in beautiful imagery she described her own love of running through a field in the summer sunshine, pointing out that this is a pleasure Vietnamese children no longer had. I read with wonder and excitement all the things the child was expressing until the last lines brought me up short:

"Why don't they listen to the children?
Don't they care or Don't they dare?"

One Year Ago Today

To the Editor:

On May 4th of last year, the first Associated Press releases about Kent State to come out over the teletype merely reported that four students had been killed and eleven others had been wounded when Ohio National Guardsmen fired a rifle volley into the center of a crowd of students.

Later reports stated that the troops had only opened fire because the students, attempting to encircle the Guardsmen, were throwing rocks at them through the cloud of tear gas. Still later, claims were made that a sniper shot had caused the men to open fire.

With these claims in mind, President Nixon justified the shooting by saying that "This should remind us all once again that when dissent turns to violence it invites tragedy." According to Brigadier General Canterbury "the military man always has the option to fire if he feels his life is in danger." And Adjutent General Del Corso justified the Guard's Actions because "the crowd started to move forward to encircle the men."

Now, one year later, when we look back into the investigations into the Kent tragedy, we find no evidence supporting the claim that a sniper shot was fired. Nor have FBI investigations revealed that any rocks were thrown by students. These were the circumstances under which the guardsmen felt that their lives were in danger.

The May 5th UMass Moratorium Organizing Committee does not feel that the murders at Kent, Jackson, or Augusta were excusable. Therefore, we urge that the entire campus community participate today in the memorial services and workshops being held all day today for those who died last May on those campuses.

WOULD WE HAVE SO QUICKLY FORGOTTEN——IF IT HAD HAPPENED HERE??

The one-day moratorium to be held here in Amherst today has received a great deal of support not only here on the campus, but in the Amherst community itself, from many of the surrounding towns, and from a large number of the local churches, high schools, and private academies. The moratorium has been sponsored locally in the Amherst area by the Student Senate at UMass, the Student Mobilization Committee, The Faculty Group on Peace and War, The Veterans for Peace, the Valley Peace Center, The Young Socialist Alliance, and ad hoc student groups at Amherst Regional High School and Williston Academy. The Amherst High students will be leaving the school at noon today in order to proceed downtown to the Common. There, they will hold a silent vigil, distribute leaflets to the shoppers at the local stores, and attend a workshop conducted by Putnam Barber of the UMass Sociology Dept. concerning the "Destruction of American Life by the War". This workshop will be held in the Rectory of the Grace Episcopal Church on Boltwood Avenue (on the east side of the town Common). This space was generously provided by the minister of that church. Members of the Valley Peace Center will be working with the High School students in these activities. High school students from other schools in this area, including a group of 150 from Williston Academy, will be coming to Amherst to take part in the day's events.

Three films, two of them on Wartime conditions in Vietnam and the third on Angela Davis, will be shown in the science building at Amherst College, beginning at nine o'clock in the morning. Following the films, discussions will be held with activists from women's groups and from Third World groups. From noon to 1:00 p.m., a rally will be held at the intersection of Routes 9 and 116. The purpose of this rally is to honor the students who were murdered at Kent and Jackson States. At 1:30 p.m. there will be a film about South African Liberation, called "End of a Dialogue" which will be shown at the Amherst College Science building and followed by a discussion with trade union activists from the U.E. and the I.U.E. At 8 p.m. a talk will be given on the steps of the Frost Library by Tony Montero, a Black Communist from Philadelphia, and the Rev. Charles Koen, from the United Front of Cairo, Illinois.

The above listing of events does not include the activities which will take place on the UMass campus--detailed information on the all-day workshops, and the evening all community vigil will be available today in the Franklin Room (MOBE Office) in the Student Union.

Off-Broadway Success Opens Tonight

The University of Massachusetts Theatre will conclude its 1970-71 season with Don Petersen's Does A Tiger Wear A Necktie? which will be presented tonight through May 8 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

This contemporary drama confronts life in a drug rehabilitation center. The addicts are urban youth who believe that like the tigers "we was chucked on raw meat and like it." And like the tigers they wait with claws tensed for acts of violence, yet these very same claws are capable of being retracted with a warm response to affection.

In the midst of them in this "cage for young junkies" is their English teacher, Mr. Winters. His attempt to understand them centers around the question: Can you rehabilitate and civilize these young addicts can you put a necktie on a tiger? The beat is now, as hopelessness and hope mingle when the kids try to realistically consider living "out there."

The cast spent a live-in weekend at the Clinton Youth Center in New York's West Side in an attempt to acquaint themselves with the style of life in a large inner-city setting attempting to understand urban problems.

Tickets for Does A Tiger Wear A Necktie? can be purchased at the box office or by calling the box office, 545-2579. Admission is $1.75.

Gillespie Transcends Bowker And Crowd in Fine Concert

By JAKE EDMUNDS
MDC Staff

Even amidst a pack of screaming high school kids and the bleak scenario that Bowker Auditorium creates, the Friday night session that Dizzy Gillespie and company provided was well worth attending. The variety of the Gillespie Quintet's repertoire was instrumental in producing moods ranging from the heavy percussion excitement to the sleepy, drifting notes of midnight solace.

Dizzy was a show in himself, strolling about the stage nonchalantly, holding brief conversation with the audience and his fellow musicians as well. Of course his trumpet playing is an incredible event to witness and I would say that there are few who scale the spectrum of feeling on the horn as Mr. Gillespie does.

In part, the great depth of this quintet finds itself resting on the shoulders of Mike Longo, the pianist. Leading the way when Dizzy was elsewhere, his command of the piano seemed to lead the group home number after number. Mr. Longo writes music as well as plays it, and during the performance a couple of his compositions greeted the audience ranging from the blues to a spirited little skylarking jazz piece.

The other solid components of the group were Mickey Roker on the drums, Sonny Henry on the guitar, and Sam Jones on the bass. Mr. Roker's drums were stable but not overpowering. Mr. Henry's guitar was melodious and filling, and Mr. Jones appeared to be new with the group as Dizzy was tutoring him with some on the job training.

The informality of the quintet helped to relax the audience which to me appeared pretty stiff, but at the same time appreciative of the talent they were witnessing. Dizzy informed us that we were going to have a good time, and that is just what we did have.

Dizzy sang a little ballad, Mike Longo and Sonny Henry led us through a samba named "Sambo" and Dizzy broke out his congo drum arousing the audience to the loosening of ties and clapping of hands.

For a finale a very talented 13 year old drummer from the audience, Thomas Barclough, Jr., joined the group to set the pace for a wild number that sent the audience swaying and clapping.

Dizzy was right, we did have a good time.

The Dizzy Gillespie Quintet lulled us and then aroused us. It did something that only good music can do, it brought us together for an exceptional experience of seeing a great musician, and a fine performance.

Zero Population Growth

Religion vs. Birth Control

(Ed. Note: The following article is part of a series dealing with the problems of over-population. The articles are presented by four members of the local chapter of Zero Population Growth (Pioneer Valley ZPG). Three are graduate students at the University of Massachusetts. The fourth member is a local gynecologist. Each article will outline specific population problems: Implications of population growth: Food Supply; Resources; Responsibility for growth; Obstacles to slowing population growth; and methods of population control. Further information may be gained by contacting John Maytum at 584-8591 or George Wilder 549-0768.

Some religious groups believe that, by limiting their birth rates, they will be outbred by other religious groups.

There are religious doctrines and pressures concerning sterilization, abortion and contraception. Two important religions, particularly Catholicism and the Moslem religion, have been the source of pressure aimed against birth control.

It is a delicate matter to discuss the effects of Catholic doctrine on the population explosion. Yet a discussion is warranted for two important reasons: (1) Statistics for 1966 revealed that more people are Catholic than belong to any one other religion in the world. A study by the Vatican, covering almost the entire membership of the Catholic Church, indicated that there were approximately 526.6 million Catholics last year which constituted 14.5% of the world's population (2) The Roman Catholic Church officially discourages effective means of preventing conception.

It is well known that the Catholic Church has attempted to exert strong pressures on various levels of government in regard to legislation concerning population control and family planning. The statement quoted below was made in 1959 by Brock Chisholm, former director of the United Nations World Health Organization and indicates how the Catholic Church has influenced policy in the United Nations.

"No person can get anywhere in any agency of the U.N. or in any of its committees or commissions, who tries to talk frankly about population problems and their solution. The Population Commission...makes terrifying reports every year but does not make any constructive recommendations because it is not allowed to. Every committee...is under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church and no delegate from the U.S., from Canada, France, Britain or any of many other countries is in a position where he can begin to defy that taboo.

I've seen it done. Once when an innocent proposal had been made by the chief delegate from Norway to the effect that the World Health Organization should set up a medical committee to study the medical aspects of population problems, representatives of six governments, chiefs of delegations, immediately got up and said that if this question were even discussed their governments might have to withdraw from the World Health Organization.

In 1966 Chisholm added the following: "Nowhere (in Mexico) is the rate of population growth less than 3% and in some northern states it is 4% or more. Nowhere are any practical steps to limit this growth discernable. When the question was broached, officials of all types took shelter behind a stock answer: 'We are a Catholic country'."

At this rate Mexico will have 80,000,000 people in 1987 as compared to more than 50,000,000 today.

The official view of the Catholic Church concerning the population explosion and birth control has been expressed in numerous statements and encyclicals. An encyclical on the subject, issued on July 25, 1968 by Pope Paul VI, was called Humanae Vitae.

The encyclical began encouragingly enough expressing awareness of world problems. Unfortunately, however, nearly all conclusions of the encyclical were derived from theological principles. There seemed, in the long run, to have been little if any attention paid to the stark reality of practical world problems. In fact the results were in direct opposition to a majority report issued by a commission on birth control which was composed to theological experts and appointed by Pope Paul himself to study the problem. The commission favored liberalizing the Church's birth control policy.

In a discussion of "responsible parenthood" the encyclical specified the following: "In relation to physical, economic, psychological and social conditions, responsible parenthood is exercised, either by the deliberate and generous decision to raise a large family, or by decision, made for grave motives and with due respect for the moral law, to avoid for the time being, or even for an indeterminate period, a new birth...The responsible exercise of parenthood implies...that husband and wife...in the task of transmitting life...are not to procede completely at will...but they must conform their activity to...the constant teaching of the Church."

The encyclical added: ...the church...teaches that each and every marriage act...must remain open to the trasmission of life.

Approximately half way through the encyclical illicit and licit means of birth control were defined. Illicit control of birth included permanent and temporary sterilization, contraception of all kinds, and abortion, even if necessitated for therapeutic reasons. The only method of birth control which was considered licit is the rhythm method, a method which is unreliable.

Paul Ehrlich said the following about rhythm in his book The Population Bomb: "Unfortunately, people who practice this method of contraception are commonly called parents. Even under the most carefully controlled conditions women using this technique run a 15% risk of pregnancy each year they use it. In short the rhythm method doesn't work."

A 15% failure rate per year would mean that each year, out of 100 women, 15 will have children. Let us assume that the reproductive period of a married woman lasts 25 years after marriage. In that time 100 women would have produced 375 children, or 3.75 children per women. Yet it has been shown that, to stabilize population growth in the U.S. each woman could have no more than an average of 2.1 children.

An "appeal to public authorities" was extended towards the end of the encyclical. The following appeared in this appeal: "To Rulers...we say: Do not allow the morality of your people to be degraded; do not permit that by legal means practices contrary to the natural and divine law be introduced into that fundamental cell, the family."

During 1970 the Catholic Church made earnest attempts to influence family planning and population policies of governments and organizations throughout the world. In Hawaii the Church waged a long battle to try to keep an abortion bill from becoming law. The Hawaii legislature finally passed the bill, which permitted any woman who lived in Hawaii for at least 90 days to have an abortion. Similarly, the Vatican campaigned intensely to stop passage of the New York State abortion law. According to an article published in April in the N.Y. Times, "changes of votes...reflected the intense lobby mounted over the weekend by the Roman Catholic Church." Prior to the law's passage, one member of the N.Y. State Assembly sat with his daughter in church as he and others who supported the abortion bill described by a parish priest as "murderers". "It was very tough pressure", the member said, "but I think the lay Catholic is far ahead of the Church on this issue." An article published in March, 1970, stated in regard to the N.Y. abortion bill, that "...the Roman Catholic Church stepped up its traditional opposition to abortion reform and pastoral letters were issued to all parishes." And in November, 1970, another article stated that "Pope Paul continued to oppose the weight of scientific evidence and growing concern within his own church when he strongly reaffirmed the Roman Catholic Church's traditional ban on all forms of birth control except the unreliable rhythm method."

IRS Forms

In order to provide an opportunity to explain and correct inequities often found on the College Scholarship Service Parents' Confidential Statement and the University applications for financial aid, an increasing number of certified copies of the front page of the Internal Revenue Service Form 1040 will be requested prior to assessment of financial need by the financial aid office. It is felt this will enable the financial aid office to make more accurate assessment of financial need and to make all awards to the most needy and deserving students.

Malawi Officials On Campus Today

Three top officials in the Malawi government will visit UMass Wednesday and Thursday, May 5 and 6, to discuss possible future cooperation between the University of Malawi and UMass.

On campus will be: the Honorable Mr. Aleke Bunda, Malawi minister of finance and minister of information; His Excellency Mr. N.W. Mbekeani, Malawi ambassador to the U.S. and the United Nations; Mr. George Jaffu, Malawi secretary to the treasury; and Mr. P. Nyirenda, administrative officer in the ministry of information.

UMass conducted a six-year educational project in agriculture in Malawi, Central Africa, from 1964 to November, 1970, under a contract with the U.S. State Department's Agency for International Development. One reason for the program's termination was U.S. foreign aid budget cuts, according to Gilbert E. Mottla, campus coordinator of the Malawi Project for the UMass College of Agriculture. Personnel from UMass worked to develop Malawi's great agricultural potential.

The five million people of Malawi have a country with almost no natural resources, and minimal industry; so are almost entirely dependent on agriculture as a source of national income.

N.E.S. Tutoring
Learn By Teaching...

Students should keep in mind during this week of preregistration that the N.E.S. tutoring program is offering a fully approved three credit course starting next September. The course is part of an overall change N.E.S. is taking for the coming year.

Tradition has a college student tutoring on an one-to-one basis in economically deprived areas of Springfield. There has always been questions about this. What the future holds for N.E.S. is a program which will be developing educational survival strategies for the victims of our educational institutions.

In the past there has always been the problem where tutors could not pin down what went on in the classroom. However, arrangements have now been made so that tutors can now tutor in the Springfield Schools under the supervision of the teacher. This is the new course sponsored by N.E.S.

Students wishing to participate in the course must have 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. free at least one day a week not including Friday. Students taking the course on Monday-Wednesday must sign up for Prepracticum in Education No2. Those taking the Tuesday-Thursday option the course number is No1.

The course will center around tutoring. Students signing up for the course will be required to tutor twice a week. One session will be during the school day and in the school of the tutee. The other session will take place after school in an N.E.S. center during one of the regular N.E.S. tutoring sessions. The other requirement will be the attending of six seminars scheduled throughout the semester.

There is more violence in this picture than the image presents. For any child-black or white-who's family is at the bottom of the income scale has to tear apart everything his environment has taught him to maintain a reading level that matches his grade.

A table will be set up in the lobby of the Student Union across from the candy counter all this week where students can pick up more information about the course. Students interested in taking the course should definitely stop by and leave their names with the N.E.S. Coordinating Committee.

With the above in full swing it is hoped that real education will begin to take place in the N.E.S. centers where the bulk of the regular volunteer tutoring will still be taking place.

The experience gained in the classroom by course tutors will be transmitted to the tutoring situation of the regular tutors. From there a tutor will be better prepared to help a tutee survive in the classroom.

The aim here is to increase the "academic" achievement of youth who live in the economically deprived areas of Springfield. Our point of motivation comes from a study which found that IQ scores on the average increased 11 points as the result of a few hours of tutoring using material similar to that found on the IQ test. The point here to avoid confusion is that the IQ of students is there, it is just refused recognition by the nature of our educational institutions.

However, a grade or test score is only a point in time. A more important goal will be sought next year-that is to motivate a tutee toward learning. Special projects of art, audio-visual, writing, and drama workshops will be conducted next year.

The workshops will hopefully stimulate a tutee's desire to produce objects that are of value in the tutee's eyes. The drawing of pictures and the writing of stories is good to create a sense of positive productivity in a tutee but a key point is missing-money.

More education usually means higher incomes. This middle class belief is reflected in the schools.

To make the connection between education and money, as many contests offering cash awards will be sponsored throughout the year as donations make possible. Cash awards will be given to tutees winning spelling bees or improving the most in grades on report cards.

This is not a mercenary process but is only the result of the economics of income in this country. Children of low income families do not believe in the dream the schoolstry to sell them. They do believe in the immediacy of rewards for a task performed.

Generally our efforts will be toward the younger tutees. Efforts will be made to get the junior and high school age tutees to take a more active role in directing center activities. There will be tutoring in high school subjects but it is hoped through special project participation that a program of guiding tutees in the preparation and entrance to college will be developed. This program will cover all the rituals that entering college requires.

There is and can be more to the program. If you are interested in community action along the lines of education stop by the table in the Student Union this week. If you are a person who has some ideas which you would like to see developed into a real working program the N.E.S. program may have more room for you than you think. The point here is you learn by doing.

Alternative Bachelor's Program
Offers Individual Concentration

Undergraduates interested in the "Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration" program will be able to meet with the program directors today through Friday in Whitmore Room 362 from 2:00-5:00 P.M.

The B.D.I.C. committee members will be in Whitmore to answer questions and interview students who want to join the newly initiated program which allows an undergraduate to graduate with a degree in a major outside of the normal departmental lines.

The program was designed as an "alternative" to the present departmental structure and encourages students to design their own course of studies with a personal academic or professional end, which is not normally available.

Students, with the aid of a faculty member who agrees to serve as "advisor" must put together a program of three interrelated courses for four semesters in order to fulfill the overall B.D.I.C. major requirements.

Any sophomore or junior with a 2.0 QPA and at least four semesters left at the University is eligible.

The B.D.I.C. committee consists of Prof. Leigh Short (Chemical Engineering), Prof. Anthony Borton (Animal Science) and Prof. Arthur Kinney (English). Prof. Short will conduct the Whitmore interviews today, Prof. Borton will handle Thursday's session and Prof. Kinney will be on hand Friday.

Evaluate Your Courses

This spring's evaluation of courses will take place between May 3rd and May 14th. For this evaluation, the program has switched over to the Illinois evaluation form which is a much more comprehensive questionnaire than that used last semester and has been tested over a number of years for reliability. These evaluation forms may be picked up outside the student evaluation office located at 418C Student Union any weekday between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Singular evaluations will not be accepted; only evaluations on a class-wide basis. Therefore, any student wishing to evaluate a course must pick up enough forms for the entire class. The person who picks up these forms will then be held responsible for their administration and prompt return. All forms must be returned by May 14th.

Kent On WMUA

During the day WMUA will offer extended coverage of the workshops that have been planned to take place in honor of those killed at Kent State, and Jackson. Coverage should begin at noon leading up to the Silent Vigil planned for 8:00 PM this evening.

MDC NEWS HOTLINE 5-2550

Workshops Today

Tony Monteiro of the Young Worker's Liberation League (YWLL) will lead a workshop on Vietnam at 11:00 am. Wednesday in a room to be announced in the strike schedule of events. Tony, he is a black member of the Philadelphia branch of the league and has recently returned from a visit to North Vietnam.

Wednesday afternoon the YWLL will also sponsor films in the S.U. Ballroom. "Angela Davis: 'Like It Is Now' " will be shown at 1:00, followed by a discussion of Political repression, as represented by Cairo, Illinois and the trials of Bobby Seale, Erica Huggins, Angela and others. Later in the afternoon a film on Cuba will be shown, and the Davis film will be rerun at 4 p.m.

UMass Students Raise D.C. Bail

A committee has been organized on this campus to raise bail money for UMass students and others who are still under arrest in Washington. There are still at least fifteen students from UMass who haven't been bailed out.

Collection will be made in two ways. One student from each residence hall will be designated to collect and record money from that dorm. In addition there will be a table set up in the Student Union.

All money collected will be sent immediately to UMass students in Washington, who will post bill for those who have not yet be released.

If there are any questions concerning who is collecting in your dorm, call the Washington Bail Committee at 546-5164.

U.S. Gives Thieu Drug Advice

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. officials have given President Nguyon Van Thieu a list of suggested actions to curb the growing traffic in heroin and other drugs in South Vietnam, informed sources said Tuesday.

The sources reported Thieu requested the list after top U.S. leaders here appealed to him for government help in dealing with the problem among American servicemen.

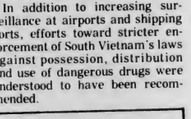
Drug use among U.S. soldiers is viewed by many American officials as a crisis that is worsening weekly.

Two U.S. Congressmen, Rep. Robert H. Steele, R-Conn., and Morgan Murphy, D-Ill., said April 19 that their inquiry showed drug use of "epidemic proportions" and added that the U.S. military command indicated 10 to 15 per cent of all soldiers in Vietnam were using a high grade heroin.

Underscoring the rising concern felt by U.S. officials over the narcotics situation was the arrival in Saigon Tuesday of John E. Ingersoll, director of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs.

Ingersoll made no statement on arrival. But Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor, closing out an eight-day visit to the war zone, told newsmen: "We're taking steps to get greater assistance from the Vietnamese government to deal with this drug problem."

Resor's statement was understood to refer to the list of proposals given to Thieu within the past week after a meeting involving Thieu, U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker and Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, the U.S. commander in Vietnam. The three met again to discuss the subject Monday, it was reported.



The sources, while not spelling out the suggested government actions in detail, said they were concerned primarily with reducing the flow of heroin and other narcotics into South Vietnam from neighboring countries.

"Basically it involves the distribution of the stuff, including a tightening of customs and other checks," one source said.

In addition to increasing surveillance at airports and shipping ports, efforts toward stricter enforcement of South Vietnam's laws against possession, distribution and use of dangerous drugs were understood to have been recommended.

BACK SAFELY—George Scott just misses on an attempted pick off play of Milwaukee Brewer's Tommy Harper in a game played last Wednesday which Boston won 10-3. Last night Scotty contributed two big hits as the Red Sox continued their winning ways with a 4-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox which snapped their five game win skein. (AP photo)

Sox Nip Chicago, 4-3 To Remain On Top

CHICAGO (AP)-Pinch-hitter Phil Gagliano scratched a bases-loaded single off the glove of pitcher Terry Forster in the seventh inning last night, giving the Boston Red Sox a 4-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

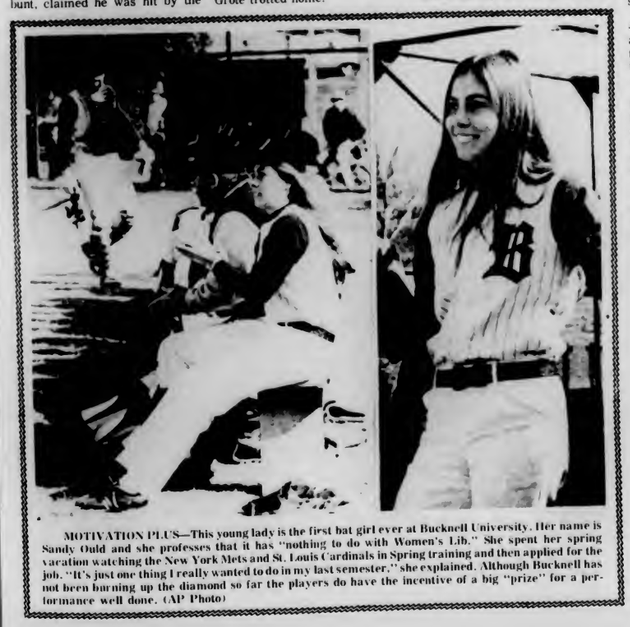
The Red Sox' third straight victory and 10th in their last 12 starts snapped a four-game Chicago winning string.

Rico Petrocelli's single, George Scott's double and a single by Billy Conigliaro sent home one Boston run in the seventh, tying the game 3-3. After an intentioal walk to pinch-hitter Mike Fiore filled the bases, Gagliano delivered the deciding hit.

Mike Andrews doubled with one out in the bottom of the ninth. Rich McKinney followed with a pinch single, but left fielder Carl Yastrzemski threw out pinch runner Louis Alvarado at the plate, preserving the Red Sox's victory.

Bee Bee Richard scored from second on Mike Nagy's wild pitch to give Chiago a 1-0 first inning lead. Duane Josephason's homer tied it in the third.

Boston went ahead with another run in the fifth when Scott singled, took third on Conigliaro's double and scored on an infield out. Rick Reichardt's sacrifice fly and Mike Andrews' single produced two White Sox runs in the sixth for a 3-2 lead.



Mets Top Cubs, 2-1

NEW YORK (AP)-Bud Harrelson singled home the tie-breaking run in an argument-filled seventh inning to give the streaking New York Mets a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs last night.

It was the Mets' third consecutive triumph and eighth in nine games.

Jerry Grote opened the seventh with a single between third and short. Don Hahn, attempting to bunt, claimed he was hit by the pitch. The umpires first agreed with him but after a long discussion among themselves and with both managers they changed the ruling to a foul ball.

Hahn then also singled through the left side, Grote stopping at second. With a 3-0 count on pinch hitter Al Weis, Earl Stephenson relieved Milt Pappas, 3-3, and Weiss hit into a force at second. But Harrelson slapped a single through the drawn-in left side and Grote trotted home.

MOTIVATION PLUS—This young lady is the first bat girl ever at Bucknell University. Her name is Sandy Ould and she professes that it has "nothing to do with Women's Lib." She spent her spring vacation watching the New York Mets and St. Louis Cardinals in Spring training and then applied for the job. "It's just one thing I really wanted to do in my last semester," she explained. Although Bucknell has not been burning up the diamond so far the players do have the incentive of a big "prize" for a performance well done. (AP Photo)

Trackmen At Dartmouth Vs. Indians, Orangemen

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass trackmen travel to Hanover, New Hampshire today for a tri-meet with Dartmouth and Syracuse. The Redmen are now fielding a record of 5-1 which includes five consecutive wins.

Only last Saturday they downed Springfield and Central Connecticut by 21 and 33 points, respectively. In this meet there were three school records broken which brings to eight the total number of school records that have been erased from the record book this Spring.

Dartmouth will have extra incentive in this meet as they were humiliated by the Redmen 74-31 in an indoor meet up in Hanover.

On paper it appears that the Redmen should dominate the sprints and the hurdles, and split even in the throwing and jumping events. The strengths of the three teams involved are equally divided in such a way that it can be expected that whoever controls the middle distance events should control the meet.

Eddie Arcaro who has broken the shotput record three times this Spring will again provide the bulk of the scoring for UMass in the throwing events. The Redmen will have to dominate the javelin behind Rocco Petitto and Gil Sylvia if they are to break even in the throwing events.

The jumpings events will be a close battle between Dartmouth and UMass. Rip Dyer should prove a factor in the long jump. Ed Shaughnessy and Cal Carpenter will again handle the high jumping chores while John Kamb can be counted on in the pole vault.

PICTURE PASS—Tony Pendleton (right) passes the baton to Ron Harris for the third leg in the 440 yard relay which the Redmen won with plenty to spare in Saturday's tri-meet victory. Pendleton also set a record of 9.7 seconds in the 100 yard dash and Harris won the 220. These two sprinters represent the top quality of personel that has elevated the UMass track team to a New England power this spring. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

The sprinters and jurdlers have dominated their events since the beginning of the Spring, and can be expected to extend their excellence in today's meet.

O's, Tigers, Brewers, Cards Win

BALTIMORE (AP)—The Baltimore Orioles scored three runs on four consecutive fourth-inning hits and went on to whip the California Angels 4-1 last night as unbeaten Jim Palmer won his fifth decision.

After loser Tom Murphy, 1-3, retired the first nine Orioles, Don Buford started the winning rally with a single, Mark Belanger doubled, and both rode home on a double by Boog Powell. Frank Robinson then singled for another run.

Palmer, who yielded a first inning home run by Jim Spencer while hurling his fourth complete game, drove home Baltimore's fourth run with a sixth inning single.

The Orioles twice stranded three runners.

Tigers 6, A's 5

DETROIT (AP)—Al Kaline reared home from first base in the ninth inning when Jim Northrup's single to right field rolled through Reggie Jackson's legs, giving the Detroit Tigers a 6-5 victory over the Oakland Athletics last night.

Kaline was on first base via a two-out walk off reliever Jim Roland.

The Athletics tied the game 5-5 in the ninth on Dick Green's run-scoring double.

The Tigers earlier went ahead 5-4 with a two-run rally in the eighth as Willie Horton knocked in the tying tally and Norm Cash drove in the go-ahead run.

Brewers 2, Wash 0

MILWAUKEE (AP)—John Briggs' first American League home run and the three-hit pitching of rookie Bill Parsons sent the Milwaukee Brewers to a 2-0 victory over the skidding Washington Senators last night.

Briggs acquired 13 days ago by the Brewers from Philadelphia, socked a two-run homer in the first inning to give Parsons all the support he needed.

The 23-year-old right-hander had a no-hitter for four innings but lost it on a bad-hop single by Rich Scheinblum leading off the fifth. Del Unser's double in the sixth and Mike Epstein's bunt single in the ninth were the only other hits for the Senators.

Briggs, making his debut in Milwaukee for the Brewers, picked up two of the seven hits off loser Dick Bosman as the Senators suffered their fifth straight defeat.

Cards 7, Phila. 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Jose Cardenal drove in three runs with a double and homer, backing the six-hit pitching of left-hander Jerry Reuss as the St. Louis Cardinals trimmed the Philadelphia Phillies 7-3 last night.

St. Louis scored twice in the fourth inning for a 2-0 lead on consecutive doubles by Ted Simmons' Joe Torre and Cardenal.

In the fifth, Julian Javier made it 3-0 with his first home run of the season.

The Phillies reached Reuss for two runs in the bottom of the fifth on a walk, Mike Ryan's triple-his first hit of the season-and a sing! by Larry Bowa.

Ryan hit a two-out homer in the ninth off Reuss, who struck out 10 high for a St. Louis pitcher this season-in squaring his record at 3-3.

The cardinals routed Phillies' starter Chris Short 2-3, in the sixth when with one out, Torre walked and Cardenal hit his second homer of the season.

Redmen Have Tough Road Ahead

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

After a well earned rest the UMass baseball team resumes action tomorrow hosting Holy Cross at Earl F. Lorden Field at 3:30 p.m.

With Monday's game at Williams completely wiped from both team's schedules due to bad weather and rescheduling difficulties, the Redmen were able to rest a few pitching arms and heal up some kinks from a hectic stretch that concluded over the weekend with a three game sweep of Maine that catapulted the Redmen into first place in the Yankee Conference by a half game over UConn.

Tomorrow's contest begins an 11 game stretch that will feature three Yankee Conference doubleheaders, the game with the Crusaders, an intercity battle with Amherst, a Western Mass supremacy game with Springfield, the always awaited Boston College game and a showdown with Eastern League leader Harvard.

Redman fans will get a look at one of the top College pitchers tomorrow in Mike Pazik of Holy Cross who will most likely get the starting nod for the Crusaders. Pro scouts have been after Pazik for a couple of years now and in his last outting he struck out 21 men in a 12-inning loss to Hartford.

On Saturday the Redmen travel to Durham, for a double header with New Hampshire, conquerers of UConn last weekend which enables the Redmen to take over first place in the conference. There is no doubt that the Wildcats have the role of "Giant Killer" in mind. In the first game between these two clubs at Lorden field the Redmen hopped on the Wildcats quickly and often to coast to victory. But after its big win over UConn, New Hampshire will be up for these two games. Starting time is 12:30.

On Monday Amherst hosts the Redmen in an unevenly contest that should be a mismatch in all respects. Amherst has lost the services of its top three starters and no number four or five pitcher will be able to contain the Redmen.

Then on Tuesday it's the B.C. game and the only thing that can save the Eagles a humbling defeat will be if the schedule has caught up to UMass. The Eagles have had a poor season and don't pose the big threat they have in the past.

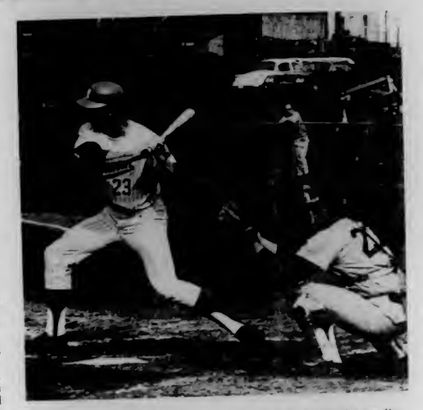
Wednesday Springfield comes to Lorden Field with its band of Small College terrors who would do anything to duplicate the upset basketball victory pulled off during the winter. To date the Chieftains have been on an ego trip against little competition and have run up an impressive record and the raves of the Springfield papers. They feature a strong pitching staff, but that's all. The rivalry between these two schools should make it a bit interesting.

And then comes the big stretch of the season. Five games in five days beginning on the 15th with a home doubleheader against Rhode Island, continuing on the 17th at Harvard and finishing up on the 19th with the bit doubleheader at UConn.

Rhode Island will try a "Giant Killer" act itself. Brian Sheckey, who was rocked earlier in the season at URI, will pitch one game and has the only chance on the Ram staff to beat the Redmen. The rest of the mound crew has hanging arms.

Harvard is on its way to the Eastern League title. As of now it needs two wins in its next three games to gain the title as a District One Playoff Berth. UMass coach Dick Bergquist will probably treat this game as he did the Dartmouth contest which the emphasis on readying his team for the UConn games two days from then.

And finally UConn. The final two games of the regular season with the victory taking the conference crown and a trip to the District One Playoffs to play Harvard. Barring any catastrophies these two squads should be fighting it out in these games for the longer season.



It's a tough, yet interesting stretch. A little variety of opponent. A few from the conference, a taste of small college baseball, a couple of games with New England independents and an Eastern League power.

The Redmen are currently riding a ten game win streak. They have won 14 of 15 games up north and 15 of 19 on the season. The pitching has been strong as was expected. Speed has been a key asset to the team, but what has surprised many has been the strong hitting punch which was not expected at the start of the campaign.

Youth has played a major role in the Redman surge. The top five hitters on the club are either freshmen or sophomores. John Olsen and Chip Baye who are freshman and sophomores and Tom White have added immensely to a pitching staff that has yielded only 1.19 earned runs a game.

These players have matured during the course of the season and along with the leadership of Jack Conroy, Jack Bernardo and Brian Martin have made the baseball season the success it has been to date.

The future of this season will be known in the course of these last 11 games and from this angle it looks like a pretty good shot that the Redmen may be spending a week in June somewhere other than in their home towns.

THE MIGHTY ESPO—Redman first sacker Dan Esposito readies to rip into a Maine offering over the weekend. The sophomore slugger went on a hitting binge in the series going 7 for 11 including two long homers. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

BACK IN TIME—Tri-captain Jack Conroy gets back to first base well ahead of pickoff attempt. He has been a terror in his number two slot in the batting order hitting .317 with 14 stolen bases in as many attempts. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

YC Champs Resume Play...
Netmen Duel At Springfield

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

To most of the UMass varsity tennis team, last Saturday seemed like the end of the season. They had won the tournament to which they had been pointing for the whole year, but alas the duel matches continue, as this afternoon the netmen visit Springfield for a 3 p.m. contest.

This coming weekend will be the New England playoffs, and the Springfield match will provide a little practice for the weekend tourney. Since returning from Maine the netmen have been kept off the tennis courts due to the rain and can ill afford to go a week without practice if they are to come away from Williams this weekend with any kind of good showing. Thus today's warmup looms as a key one.

Coach Kosakowski sees today's match as no breeze. "Springfield has traditionally been a tough opponent for us," remarked Kosakowski, "and we can expect a real tough match." Today's hosts have both clay and hard courts at their disposal and it's anyone's guess as to which one the Redmen will be using. Amherst, one of the two teams to knock off UMass in duel play, also has clay courts, and thus it will be advantageous to the Chiefs to use the slower surface this afternoon.

As the netmen try to get themselves back in the swing of things, Coach Kosakowski spent some time complimenting his players for their excellent effort over this past weekend. "We set our sights on winning the Yankee Conference at the beginning of the season and that's just what we did. We really won the conference back in February, when we began working out. We were in condition and it really paid off. These boys did a great job, I couldn't ask for more."

The 19-18 squeaker over URI some four days ago will still be foremost in the Redmen's minds as they meet today's opponents. But the netmen had better be thinking about the Chiefs or upset will be the name of this afternoon's match.

The Yankee Conference Championships do sort of make the rest of the season anti-climatic, but today's match would be a tough one to lose, as Kosakowski said that he hates to lose to Springfield, almost as much as he hates to lose that conference title.

Stickers Host Amherst Today

By HOWIE BLOOM
MDC Staff

Five in a row will be the Redmen's goal as they face off against Amherst College in their second to last home game, slated to start at 3:30 this afternoon.

The Lord Jeffs, currently ranked eighth in New England, sport a surprisingly tough lineup which includes a number of outstanding players. At the attack position are high scorers Petrie Peters (No. 45), and Harry Hinckley (No. 35), both of whom like to work the ball around the crease. They stand to give Gorilla goalie Bruce Crawford a tough time all afternoon.

Challenging the UMass midfielders will be a trio of pretty fair middies from Amherst in the persons of Seymour Zinns (No. 33), Ari Axinn (No. 34), and last year's top point producer, Marcello McMahon (No. 51).

Amherst has allowed just under 5 goals a game in running their record to 5-1, with wins over Trinity (7-5), Wesleyan (8-3), Tufts (8-2), Middlebury (8-6), and Bowdoin (8-3). Their lone defeat came at the hands of MIT, who axed the Lord Jeffs by the score of 10-7.

Two years ago, the last time the Redmen faced Amherst on the lacrosse field, Garber's Gorillas sat down at the ball behind by the score of 2-1.

Coach Garber recollected, "They really scared us, I'll tell you. They stalled on us for almost half the game, but luckily we were on the mark with our shots when we did get the ball, and we finally won it, 7-2. They could try it again."

UMass moved up a notch in the latest New England college lacrosse poll, replacing Yale as the number three team behind Brown and Harvard. With just two weeks left in the season, the Gorillas better be prepared for some tough games as the top teams across the country make their final bids for a berth to the NCAA lacrosse championships.

VARSITY M—The next to last spring luncheon of the UMass Varsity M Club will be held today at 12:15 p.m. with coaches Dick Bergquist of baseball and Dick Garber of lacrosse the featured speakers. There will also be the usual door prize, with all welcome at $1.50 admission.

Sox Set To Recall Lonborg

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Red Sox indicated yesterday they expect to recall right-hander Jim Lonborg from the minors for their next home stand which begins May 14.

"It appears likely that he'll get one more start for Louisville and then be called up possibly to pitch in our exhibition game against the Montreal Expos at Fenway Park on May 13," a club spokesman said in Boston while the team was in Chicago beginning a seven-game, 10-day road trip.

Lonborg won the Cy Young Award in Boston's 1967 pennant year but has been plagued by a series of ailments ever since. He spent most of spring training this year with the Red Sox but was sent to Louisville in the International League before the start of the regular season.

He has a 4-0 record for the Colonels, climaxed by Monday night's one-hit, 5-0 victory over Toledo in which he struck out eight and walked only two.

The Red Sox expect to have an opening on their staff around May 14 anyway, since Ken Brett is scheduled to depart right about then for two weeks' military duty. They also have a gruelling stretch of games coming up at that time, playing 21 times in 19 days.

Vigil: 'Symbol of Solidarity'

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

As the bells in the steeple of the nearby church chimed at noon, a group of about 200 people marched in a silent vigil around Amherst Common in the hot sun of a beautiful spring afternoon yesterday.

Taking part were junior high, high school and college students along with a handful of professors and townspeople who walked quietly and carried signs in the 2 hour long vigil. A sign carried by a concerned group of Jr. high school students seemed to reflect the views of all those taking time to participate. It read, "How many more humans will die? Please bring peace."

As the bells ceased ringing, the group stopped and joined hands in a symbol of solidarity. A local college student walked through the group reading a list of names of boys from Amherst who will never be able to return to their hometown to take part in an anti-war demonstration. Joseph Stanley Labbe was one of these boys. He probably walked this same area probably on a day like yesterday admiring the beauty which Spring brings to Amherst. But Joe Labbe and 55,000 other Americans lie dead along with the victims of Kent and Jackson State.

Following the reading the silent march continued. An elderly couple out for a stroll along the common joined in with the group. The student on crutches making every attempt to keep up with the others was joined by two young parents and their young child. Out from a car parked nearby, a "concerned" parent went over to his daughter who had been participating, pulled her out of the line, and whisked her away in a car.

The American flag, waving in the breeze, was then lowered to half mast by a group of six in memorium of those killed at Viet Nam and at Jackson and Kent State.

Following the lowering of the flag, the silent walk around the common continued. For close to a half hour they continued as the hot sun beat down. Again the procession stopped. This time, the names of towns and villages destroyed in the war was read along with the name of Richard Dennis Joy and thousands of others who will never return to see the beauty which spring can bring to a town like Amherst.

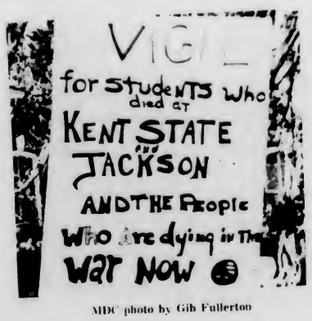
The evening's event consisted of a candle light march from the UMass Campus pond to the old Amherst Common where the 100 marchers listened to Sam Johnson of the United Christian Foundation and G. Putnam Barber of the UMass Sociology Dept.

"Today is a day for sorrow, a day for celebration; a day for despair, a day for hope; a day of fear" Sam Johnson said in the opening of his address to the hundred candle holding students. He told the group that we are here because it is where we must be. "When we talk about life and death, there is nothing more religious or real than these," he continued.

"A nation knows of no greater tragedy when it kills it's young." We are all part of the nation that did the killing. We let it be done," Johnson told the group as darkness overfell the common. "We must not loose perspective to those deaths," he said.

"We are sorrowful for the villages bombed and destroyed, the culture and land ruined by the war in South East Asia," Sam Johnson went on.



In ending his talk, Johnson said that America has grown afraid to change and that it is afraid of itself. "Fear built the Pentagon, kept blacks in ghettoes, and tried to quiet the leaders of descent." "We must not stop. Death isn't victory, life is."

"We are sad for the deaths in Southeast Asia, Ohio and Jackson Mississippi, and we are angry because we have been lied to, shot at, tricked and tooled. We are angry because the war has gone on to long," Barber said.

Continuing he said that we should be hopeful because the peace movement has seemed to slow down the war. "As long as it is necessary hundreds of thousands of people will gather in Washington and campuses all over the country." "Don't let sorrow obscure hope. Don't let hope obscure us from acting," Barber said. In finishing his talk he stated, "We must continue till the war is truly over and all Americans are home."

Bernie Lougee of the Vets for Peace, told the group in the closing minutes of the rally that the biggest memorial we can create is to stop the war. "May 15th is Armed Forces Day," he said. "We will turn this into an anti-war day." Lougee said that Westover Air Force base will be the scene of one of the largest Spring demonstrations in the area. The demonstration is being planned in Springfield with the assistance of GIs who are presently on active duty. According to Lougee, groups from as far away as New Haven are coming to Westover to participate in the May 15th demonstration.

During the day the vets for Peace conducted an all day workshop. A film was shown along with a discussion on the anti-war movement which was attended by approximately 300 people.

Mod Classroom Building OK'd For Orchard Hill

By JAMES GOLDMAN
MDC Staff

The proposed Orchard Hill modular classroom building was the main topic of controversy when 80 Orchard Hill residents and faculty again met, Tuesday night, with members of the administration. In this second in a series of open meetings on Orchard Hill, Master Leo Barron described the results of the April closed session between selected Orchard Hill residents and faculty and members of the administration, including Chancellor Tippo, Provost Gluckstern, and the Vice-Chancellors.

Agreements reached between the Orchard Hill Residential College and the administration include an expanded Teacher Assistant allotment, a $3200 grant for securing Orchard Hill faculty outside of the University and a memo from the Provost's office to department heads encouraging participation in the Orchard Hill Residential College. The Hill was also given control of its admissions and housing assignments and a possible trust fund allocation to compensate for an expanded faculty apartment in Dickinson House.

The proposed $250,000 modular classroom building to satisfy the Residential College's space requirements remains a source of friction. The proposed building would contain 5 regular-sized classrooms, 1 large classroom seating about 100 students, and 5 double-sized faculty offices.

Dr. Leon Baron

The Orchard Hill students contended that the proposed building would not meet their needs. The major complaint expressed by the students was the absence of a large meeting room in the building. Concern was also expressed about the building's appearance, furnishings, and eventual replacement by a permanent building.

Jack Littlefield stated that the building was only inteded to fill the academic space needs. He also said that the nature of the requested capital outlay would not allow use of these funds for non-academic purposes nor structural changes in the present building designs.

He did state, however, that the classrooms could be furnished in a "lounge-type" fashion instead of the usual classroom set-up.

When asked about a possible brick facing for the modular classrooms, Littlefield stated an emphatic, "No."

Provost Gluckstern relieved concern that the modular building would delay the construction of a permanent building. He said, "The modular building would not prejudice the priority application for a permanent building." He also said, however, that he wouldn't give encouragement that plans for a permanent building would be in the priority list the first year but it is possible that this could be considered for the October capital outlay.

Both Gluckstern and Littlefield encouraged Orchard Hill students to be active in the planning of these buildings.

Later in the meeting Dr. Bromery was questioned about coed corridors for the fall semester. He stated that there will be no alternate room coed corridors in September. Gesturing to Trustee Shaler who attended Tuesday night's meeting, Bromery explained that when the Board of Trustees delegated authority over campus life-styles to him, they requested that any change in the present configuration be presented to the Board of Trustees first. He also said that sentiment in the Board of Trustees for coed corridors is not favorable.

Landfill Regulations Violated On Campus

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

The University is often looked to as an example of the way things should operate in other areas of the state. It is surprising then that a concerned citizen has discovered that the sanitary landfill operation on the UMass campus has not been properly supervised and inspected.

James G. Brooks of Northampton is a concerned citizen who has become interested in ecology and environment. His main interest in bringing the landfill operation to the public's attention is to show the need for additional money and personnel for the inspection and supervision of the land fill areas.

Brooks' discovery of conditions at the UMass operation came quite by accident. While on campus to inquire about the curent landswap situation at nearby Mt. Tom, Brooks happened to notice uncovered waste materials in the landfill area in the back of Tillson farm. Because of his knowledge of recently passed sanitary landfill regulations which require the refuse to be covered by six inches of earth each day, Brooks proceeded to file formal complaints with the departments of Water Pollution Control and the local State Department of Health.

This action resulted in the decision of Richard Burke of the Physical Plant to hand clean the man-made stream at the face of the operation, in an attempt to correct the situation from an esthetic standpoint. Brooks noted later that esthetic measures had been taken in less than half an hour after he had presented his complaints.

Brooks, in an MDC interview, showed a series of letters dating from August 1967 in which stipulations were made that only non-combustible construction materials were to be deposited at the site. "Any area assigned as a dumping ground would be for a sanitary landfill only and that the advice of the District Sanitary Engineer will be asked prior to any assignment. A later letter states that the dump would be confined to construction debris such as concrete, soil and limited amounts of building materials such as wood, brick etc. UMass will confine any burning in connection with such dumping to controlled periods under supervision of the Town Fire Chief.

The letter goes on to state that UMass would maintain the dump area clear of all flowing waterways. An even later letter (January, 1968) sites to the Board of Trustees the "existance of an open burning camp located on property of UMass-Hadley."

Brook's major contention in his campaign, which has brought him before the Board of Trustees and subsequently before Governor Sargent, is that if enough funds were allocated for increased personnel and equipment situations such as these might not arise. Added personnel both in engineering, secretarial and legal capacities would serve to adequately supervise and inspect sited, according to standards set forth by by the State Department of Health, thus eliminating the possibility of such violations and conditions in the future.

The operation is located on UMass property in Hadley, adjacent to the parking lot just to the south of lot booth No. 6.

Militant Mood of Homosexuals Climaxed by Conference

Today for the first time in history gay people in large numbers are demanding an end to their oppression. New and militant gay organizations are developing all over the country--in the five-college area there is now both a Gay Liberation Front and the Student Homophile League, both new this year.

So that both gay people and straight people can better understand the oppression homosexuals face and the potentially revolutionary nature of the gay movement, the Militant Forum Series is sponsoring the discussion Gay Liberation: a Radical Perspective, tonight at 8:00 in Room 174 of the Campus Center.

Speaking at the forum will be Mike Obligado and several other representatives from UMass GLF: John Lauritsen from Red Butterfly, a gay Marxist group based in New York, and Diane Cecille, a militant feminist and lesbian from Boston.

Although it was coincidental that UMass Young Socialist Alliance planned a forum on the topic of gay liberation the same weekend that the local homophile groups were organizing a major gay conference, this very proliferation of discussions and conferences around the topic of gay liberation reflects the new mood of militancy among homosexuals in America.

According to David Thorstad, in an article printed in a recent issue of the Militant, this militancy can be traced back to June 29, 1969. That day, New York police raided the Stonewall Inn, a gay bar on Christopher Street in Greenwich Village. "The cops, who thought this would be just another routine anti-homosexual raid, were unprepared for the fury with which the gay community resisted the police attack. In the course of the melee, the cops had to call for reinforcements and the bar was demolished."

"Today," continues Thorstad, "The Stonewall riots stand as a symbol of the combativity of the rapidly growing movement for gay liberation. They gave vent to a tiny portion of the anger gay people have been accumulating for centuries. They gave gay people a new and refreshing feeling of pride."

The discussion tonight, like all of the Militant Forum Series, is open to the public.

Schools of Ed Swap Students

The School of Ed is now interviewing students concerned with education to take part in an "educational reform" exchange program with the University of California at Irvine.

Ten students from UMass will be selected to join ten students from Irvine on independent study projects and student teaching, with particular emphasis on reforming the present University educational structure for a program starting next Fall.

This year a similiar study group spent the Fall quarter in Irvine and the Spring semester at UMass creating a plan for instituting a "cluster college" for the U. of California at Irvine.

Next year's student group will concentrate on "the politics of the University" and "Alternative life style" while attending the Fall semester at UMass and the Winter "quarter" at Irvine.

The University of California at Irvine is located 40 miles south of Los Angeles, five miles from the nearest beach. With a student population of nearly 6,000, the Irvine campus was added to the California system only six years ago.

Students from UMass may opt to spend both the Winter and Spring "quarters" at Irvine with costs just about equaling those of one full semester at UMass.

Students interested in applying for the exchange program should contact Tom Clark 5-0915.

Johnson Wins Metawampe Award

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

"My high school background was poor; I was educated in Roxbury. I had to fight to get through my freshman year in college. But some people gave me breaks, helping me to reach my potential. That's one of the things that motivates me. I feel obligated to give as many kids as possible the opportunity to reach their potentials," said Professor Lawrence A. Johnson, distinguished recipient of the Metawampe Award.

Johnson, founder of the UMass CCEBS program and Asst. Dean of the School of Business, was awarded $1,000 and a silver serving tray in recognition of his outstanding skill as a teacher both in and out of the classroom.

After earning his undergraduate degree at B.U. and getting his doctorate at Stanford University, Johnson came to the university in 1961 as a member of the Marketing Dept. He laid the groundwork for the CCEBS program in '67 and the first class was admitted in '68.

Johnson stressed the fact that other black faculty were instrumental in the forming of the CCEBS program.

"It's extremely difficult for many black kids, most of whom have been subject to inferior schooling all their academic lives, to meet the admission standards of most colleges -- not to mention financial problems. This is true also of many white kids," Johnson said. "I and my colleagues have been working against these problems from the college level because this is the area we are most familiar with."

"It is my belief that educational problems of this sort should be attacked at the kindergarten level," he continued. "Hopefully, some of the students who have experienced educational deprivation will return to the schools and remedy the problems inherent in society and the school structure."

Johnson said he had no inkling that he was to be presented with the Metawampe Award.

"I feel, considering the stipulations under which the winner of the award is chosen, that it is indeed an honor to have been selected from the 1,500 faculty here at UMass for an award of this sort. It's flattering that the students on the selection committee thought enough of my work to single me out in this manner. Perhaps through realization of the educational needs I have tried to fill; work of this sort can be extended to other schools, different levels of education, and, most importantly, into the very fibre of society itself."

Payment Of Senate Officers Subject Of Today's Referendum

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The student body is voting today in a campus-wide referendum on the payment of Student Senate officers next year. A large turnout is expected because of interest in the issue and because dorm residents can now vote in their house lobbies.

The legislation subject to student approval provides for the following compensation: President @ $125/month; Legislative and Administrative Vice Presidents and Treasurer @ $100/month. Payment is for nine months of the year.

The measure, passed last month, is in the form of an amendment to the Senate's budget, adding a category of $3,825 specifically for the salaries.

Funds in the category can not be expended unless the student body acts favorably on the referendum. A binding clause attached to the legislation requires this.

Today's referendum is being held in dormitories because of recent legislation by the Senate changing the procedure for running all referendums. That legislation also removed a provision which made a referendum vote binding on the Senate for two years from the time of the vote.

As the procedure now stands, a majority vote of the student body will be binding on the Senate until the next annual general Senate election if more than 25% of the student enrollment votes. If less than 25% votes, the decision will be equivalent to any motion passed by the Senate. This means that the Senate could consider the overturned legislation right away again in a slightly changed form.

Today's referendum will not be affected by the 25% requirement. The binding clause on the salaries bill requires a favorable referendum vote for any salaries to be paid out of the category. This restricts the Senate from reconsidering the bill even if 25% do not vote.

The Senate voted to pay its officers in light of how time-consuming it considers the positions to be. Supporters of the payment argue that being a Senate officer is so time-consuming that an officer cannot hold any job without cutting into the time he would otherwise spend in Senate business. They feel that paying officers will open up the positions to students who would otherwise be restricted financially.

Supporters also argue that Senate officers are doing very much the same job University Administrators are paid to do, that a lot of other colleges have started paying their student government officers, and that a precedent has already been set on this campus. Editors of the Collegian and managers of WMUA are paid by student funds.

Opponents of officer salaries object to the payment of any student for a voluntary, elected position. They cite a fear that money will be the basic incentive for Senators running for office in the future.

A referendum held earlier this semester defeated a salaries bill passed by the Senate in February. That measure would have compensated this year's officers, retroactive to November. It was defeated 1,264 to 284.

Today's referendum is being held in dormitory lobbies from 6:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. for dorm residents. Commuters and Greeks vote in front of the Campus Center bookstore from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Koltin Suggests Boycott Of Collegian and Center

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

At last nights ASA meeting, Harold Koltin "suggested" to his audience of six people that the student body boycott and shutdown the Collegian. He accused the Collegian of not providing proper coverage to nonRSO meetings. "Many groups do not know what is behind the issues," he said, and proposed "blackboards in the Student Union" as an alternative.

Koltin described the Campus Center situation as a "crisis". He said that such places as the Top of the Campus were geared to the "over-thirty, non-students". He suggested that students boycott the Center.

He also objected to the fact that a Five Person Task Force was responsible for the selection of the Commencement speakers and Honorary Degrees.

He also expressed indignation at his and the periormers treatment at last weekend's concerts by the producers of the concert.

Arrests 'By The Busload'

Protestors Attempt Capitol Blockage

WASHINGTON——FROINES ARRESTED——FBI agents lead John Froines, striped shirt, from an antiwar demonstration at the Justice Department yesterday. Froines, a demonstration leader, was sought on a warrant charging him with conspiring to disrupt traffic in Washington and interfering with the constitutional rights of citizens. (AP Wirephoto)

WASHINGTON (AP)-Antiwar protestors moved from the city's streets to the doorstep of Congress Wednesday, marching on the Capitol 3,000 strong. Police soon began arresting people by the busload.

Helmeted policemen ringed the Old and New Senate Office Buildings that are just northeast of the Capitol and the House Office Buildings to the south.

The demonstrators' ranks were far diminished from the estimated 20,000 who failed in their efforts to jam the capital's traffic Monday and the 5,000 who held a rally outside the Justice Department Tuesday. Police arrested 10,000 in those first two days of the Mayday demonstration.

They gathered in a warm spring sun on the grassy Mall that stretches from the Capitol to the Lincoln Memorial 2 1/2 miles away, the same area occupied by Vietnam War Veterans for Peace two weeks ago at the start of a continuing series of antiwar protests.

From there they approached the Capitol, flanking it from both the north and south sides. At the same time police buses disgorged hundreds of policemen carrying billy clubs.

As Rep. Cornelius Gallagher, D-N.J., addressed the demonstrators on the steps at the House side of the Capitol, 50 policemen on motor scooters went into the area. The crowd began singing "The Star Bangled Banner."

Other demonstrators turned away from the Senate Office buildings to go to the Capitol, swelling the crowd there to 3,000.

Earlier, an estimated 1,500 to 2,000 persons had attended a rally in Lafayette Square, facing the White House, sponsored by a group calling itself Federal Employes for Peace. An undetermined number of those attending are among 318,000 federal employes in Washington.

About 500 marched from the rally to the Capitol, but were blocked by police from joining the protestors there.

The protestors were split on tactics, some wanting to surround the Capitol, others hoping to see congressmen in their offices to persuade them to ratify the "Peoples Peace Treaty," a document worked up by protest leaders.

Tourists mingled with the demonstrators. They gained access to the Capitol steps by going up one or two persons at a time, rather than in massed groups who would be stopped by police.

Civil Distrubance Unit police soon surrounded the broad steps. The federal employes group stopped short of the steps, making no move to get in.

Both Houses of Congress were in session.

In Boston

Peace demonstrators, many of them marching from Boston suburbs, gathered on Boston Common Wednesday afternoon in sunny, warm weather to condemn American involvement in Southeast Asia and to demand immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops.

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., told the crowd, estimated at between 20,000 and 40,000 that the struggle to end the war is a fight for the American soul.

"If we do not withdraw from Vietnam immediately, Hartke said, "We shall condemn ourselves and our posterity to a frightful judgment."

Hartke was the first of a series of speakers scheduled to address the crowd following a two hour session of folk and rock music.

Other speakers scheduled included David Dellinger of the Chicago 7 defendants; Debby Bustin, Student Mobilization Committee national coordinator, and Mrs. Louise Bruyn, Newton housewife who made a walk for peace to Washington, D.C.

The demonstrators and the curious moved in and out of the Common during the leisurely afternoon. Police said at times there were as few as 10,000 around the speakers' platform.

A contingent of 80 police officers was called out to guard the front entrances of the State House on Beacon Hill across from the Common. Following that the Students for a Democratic Society planned a demonstration and a charge to enter the building. The demonstration did not materialize.

A series of short talks from representatives of groups as diverse as hard-hat construction workers and gay liberationists called upon the gathering to impeach President Nixon and refuse to pay income taxes that would go to support the Indo-China War.

Rock bands and folk singers provided entertainment between speakers.

Kent State Rallies Commemorate Deaths

AP Thousands of Americans joined rallies and marched across the nation Wednesday to protest U.S. involvement in the Indochina war, and to commemorate students killed last year at Kent State University in Ohio and Jackson State College in Mississippi.

There were scattered disturbances and arrests.

At Kent State, where four students died last year from National Guard gunfire, a small group of demonstrators kept a building housing ROTC classes closed. Elsewhere on campus, 1,000 students attended a rally for a ban on ROTC and a repeal of a state law fixing punishment for campus disorders.

University of Wisconsin's students peppered police with rocks and bricks at several campus intersections. Madison police used tear gas to disperse a crowd of 1,500.

Crowds at the widespread demonstrations in small towns and large cities seemed smaller than similar ones last year.

A rally by 2,000 students in New York's Central Park broke up after an hour when fist fights erupted between blacks and whites. Empty bottles and cans were thrown after black students charged a bandshell stage and pushed white youths off. The blacks were yelling "Free Huey Newton," and "Free the Panther 13."

San Francisco police on horseback and motorcycles broke up protesters' attempts to block morning Market Street traffic in front of the Standard Oil of California building. All 1,800 policemen had been mobilized for the protest when Mayday demonstrators gathered to advocate a disruption of businesses "profiting from the Indochina War."

In New Haven several antiwar protests, unmarked by incidents and characterized by one speaker as "grooving in the sunshine," were held in Connecticut Wednesday afternoon.

The New Haven Green rally drew about 2,000 persons at its peak and was by far the largest of the gatherings that also occurred in Hartford and some smaller cities.

In New Haven, one young black man grabbed the microphone between speakers and harangued the crowd about the need for equality between blacks and whites.

The master of ceremonies, Euclid Irving, a black Yale student, allowed the tirade to go on for several moments before the microphone was turned off. He then said, "I want to apologize for that. But I guess it had to be done."

New Haven police said they took one young man from the demonstration after he became involved in a scuffle over a Viet Cong flag. They said neither he nor anyone else was arrested.

A number of black and white speakers appealed for bail money for Black Panther Lennie McLucas, convicted of conspiracy to murder in the Alex Rackley slaying. Several persons with white cardboard buckets circulated through the crowd, collecting mostly small coins.

In Hartford, about 300 persons gathered at noon on the Capitol lawn and heard short speeches from Democratic Reps. Irving J. Stelberg of New Haven and Joseph S. Coatsworth.

U.S. Dollar Trade Halted By Five European Banks

FRANKFORT, Germany (AP) — Several European government banks stopped buying American currency, Wednesday, in the face of a massive rush to sell dollars. Money experts hurried into consultations on ways to check Europe's growing monetary crisis.

The Continent's worst money crisis since 1969 made the dollar the one currency that practically no one wanted at present exchange rates.

Financial sources generally expected the German mark, the Swiss franc, the Dutch guilder and possibly other currencies would be revalued at a higher rate.

Speculation began on a decision that would allow the mark and other currencies to move up in ratio to the dollar to temporarily ease the situation. That was why they were swapping dollars for other currencies, principally the mark.

Any upward valuation would lower the cost of U.S. goods in Europe. This would tend to increase U.S. exports and ease America's chronic balance of payment problem.

All eyes were turned to West Germany, which now has one of the stongest currencies in Europe but there is indication in Germany that revaluation upward would ease inflationary pressure.

A Cabinet meeting has been called in Bonn for Friday and Germany's Economic Minister Chiller said he expected the government to make a decision on ways of stopping the massive influx of dollars.

German Central Bank officials said they could envision three alternatives facing the Cabinet: a freely floating mark, revaluation or the introduction of foreign trade restrictions. They considered the latter the least likely. A floating mark would produce the same effect of revaluation upward of 4 to 5 per cent.

The cause of the crisis was a relatively new problem for Europe's money managers - too many dollars. In European eyes the dollar is now relatively weak because of America's balance of payments deficit, largely due to the Vietnam war.

An unprecedented flood of dollars has poured into the Continent to be exchanged for stronger European currencies. In the process it has exported American inflation across the Atlantic and threatened to undermine European economies.

Under present international rules, European government banks have been forced to buy dollars to keep exchange rates from falling through the official floor. In Germany's case this meant paying out marks which could be worth more later. It was a sure formula for losing money.

In the past two days, financial sources estimated, West Germany was forced to buy an unprecedented $2 billion to meet this obligation.

Nixon Deceives Public Claims Senator Hartke

BOSTON (AP)-U.S. Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., said Wednesday he believes President Nixon is deceiving the American people with rhetoric about ending the war in Southeast Asia.

"Let there be no mistake about it," Hartke said in a statement prepared for delivery at an antiwar rally on Boston Common. "This 'plan to end the war' which the president calls Vietnamization is, in fact, a plan to continue the war indefinitely, using South Vietnamese conscripts to carry out the Nixon...program for American domination of Southeast Asia.

"It is an attempt, in other words, to win a military victory."

At a news conference before the rally, Hartke said he doubted that Nixon would be a candidate for reelection.

He also said the Nixon administration may "find it convenient" to establish a final withdrawal date for American troops from Southeast Asia as has been sought by the Communist Delegates at the Paris peace talks.

In his speech at the rally, Hartke said "One year ago this week young Americans at Kent, Ohio and Jackson, Miss., were shot down in cold blood by other Americans who thought they were maintaining order.

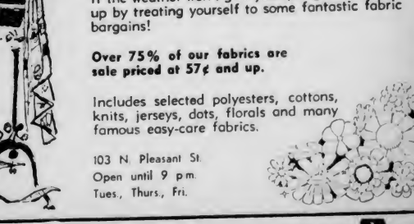
"No event in recent history illustrates more vividly the desperate pass our nation has come to through the folly and willful blindness of leaders more concerned with geopolitical abstractions than with the national ideals they had sworn to uphold."

These leaders, Hartke said, are "more concerned with their own place in history than with America's."

"I feel that disruption, violence and terror do not generate the kind of public opinion needed to keep pressure on the president and Congress" to end the war.

Violence, he said, "helps the cause of those who want to prolong the war."

Hartke, sponsor of a U.S. Senate resolution calling for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam, said he believes three quarters of the American people want American out of Southeast Asia.



Muskie Sees Surveillance Issue Avoided by Critics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said Wednesday Republican critics of his charges of FBI snooping on Earth Day rallies have made "snide connections, cheap connections" rather than deal with the questions raised.

"A lot of the sniping is rather petty," he told a news conference in response to a question on whether he had been the target of undue sniping from the White House.

The Maine Democrat, an unannounced contender for the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination, was asked about Senate speeches in which Republican senators noted Muskie shared the platform at the Earth Day rally he cited with Rennie Davis, convicted in Chicago of conspiracy to incite a riot and arrested.

"That is typical I would say," the senator replied, noting that any senator who had read the FBI report on the Earth Day rally "could not make that connection responsibly." Muskie said the target of his criticism was the FBI surveillance, not President Nixon or the White House. "They clearly do not wish to address themselves with this issue," he said.

BOSTON-SARGENT TALKS WITH SENATORS IN HIS OFFICE-In an unusual move, Governor Francis W. Sargent called the forty members of the Massachusetts Senate to a meeting in his office. Subject of the meeting was the governor's proposed reorganization of state government. He is at odds with the legislature on funding of the program that would set up a cabinet form of government. U.S. Sends Missile To Spy On Red Tests

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)-Under a mantle of secrecy, the Air Force rocketed a spy satellite into space Wednesday to monitor Russian and Red Chinese missile tests and to provide almost instant alert of a long-range rocket attack.

The 1,800-pound superspy would sound a 30-minute warning of such an attack. This is double the 15 minutes that present radar systems give U.S. forces to prepare antimissile defenses and to launch bombers and missiles in retaliation.

The Defense Department clamped a secrecy lid on the launching. No advance announcement was made, although information about the launch generally was known in the Cape Kennedy area. The Air Force issued a brief statement after liftoff stating merely that a satellite had been launched by a Titan 3 rocket.

The new payload was aimed to hover 24,000 miles above Southeast Asia. From this outpost its infra-red and other sensors would keep constant watch on the launching pads and routes over which Russian and Red Chinese missiles fly.

Sources reported the sensors, developed in years of testing in experimental satellites, would instantly detect an all-out missile attack by spotting the exhausts of rising rockets.

Last Weekend's Security Considered Well Handled

By JIM GOLD
MDC Staff

The campus security situation was handled as well as you could have expected" last weekend, according to Doug Forsythe, interim Director of Security. In an MDC interview, he said that the biggest difficulty was a lack of personnel to "assist student complaints."

A survey of 32 Heads of Residence revealed that the most messed up dorms this past weekend were the lower sections of the men's towers in Southwest. Many dorms revealed no damage at all.

Forsythe and several Heads of Residence said that much of the expected damage didn't happen because of the cooperation of the students and visitors in keeping some dormitories clean.

Some of the more frequent types of complaints handled through the security office consisted of "requests to locate missing persons," cars blocking fire lanes, rides to the infirmary and mostly not too serious misdemeanors said Forsythe.

It wasn't "all peaches and cream" Forsythe went on, explaining that the difficulties were not severe but numerous. More availability of telephones, radios, keys, and other logistical items would have helped a great deal he said.

Assigning security guards to dorms and continuation of the student security program for the rest of the year has been considered a great help in stopping damage said Forsythe.

Most of the heads of residence said that there was surprisingly little damage. Many reported "tight security systems" prevented most all of the damage.

Most of the heads of residence said that there was surprisingly little damage. Many reported "tight security systems" prevented most all of the damage. However, as one head of residence put it, "we don't always find out about the damage right away."

Reporting no damage at all (of those interviewed) were James, Grayson, Coolidge upper and middle, John Quincy Adams upper, Crabtree, Greenough, Dickinson, Field, Emerson, Chadbourne, Cashin, Johnson, Knowlton, Leach, Lewis, and Mary Lyons.

Most of the heads of residence who revealed damage said that they thought it was done from the outside. Mrs. Leavitt of Crampton House said that the only damage done there was a third floor window smashed by a rock thrown from the Southwest Mall.

Many reported that their dormitories were quite a bit messier than normal. Of those whose only damage statements were excessive mess were Kennedy Upper, Coolidge lower, John Quincy Adams middle, and John Adams Lower. Mr. Scharlenberger of Adams Middle explained that there were great messes from outside people. Although damage was not excessive, there was a lot of ripoffs from outsiders. He explained that the tower security system broke down from the huge amount of people entering.

Mr. Lawrence of Adams Lower expressed disappointment about the whole scene. He said that 14 and 15 year old girls were picked up in his dorm last week. "It was a bad scene for parents on campus," he said.

Upper houses in the towers get much less traffic than the lower houses, claimed heads of residence in the five towers.

All the girls' dormitories and men's low rises took much strict security actions, most claiming to have locked doors and student and university guards posted in the lobby. The men's dorms appeared to have more student participation in stopping outsiders who were not guests of residents from staying in lounges.

According to the response of the heads of residence, students were more consciously trying to keep out troublemakers than on previous big weekends.

Director Search Nears End

The search for a new Director of Security is beginning to enter its final stages with a decision to be made in about two weeks, said Doug Forsythe, Interim Director of Safety.

The necessary "long, laborious" search has come around to the review committee and security guards and police recommending about forty well qualified candidates," said Forsythe. "We were very fortunate to get men of such high caliber" he said about them.

The names will now be turned over to Dr. Bromery who will most likely narrow the choice down to the top three or four, he explained.

Women's Center Opens

A Women's Advisory Center offering information about education and other services has been opened at UMass.

The center will provide women with a source of information concerning available courses, entrance requirements, financial aid and other kinds of information about educational programs and other opportunities for women in the area. In addition, the center will act as a clearing house for women's interest groups and will attempt to match women needing counseling and advice with others who can help them," according to William C. Venman, director of continuing education.

Sponsored by the UMass Division of Continuing Education and the Valley Women's Center of Northampton, the Women's Advisory Center is located in Room 920 Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center. Joan Engel, a UMass sociology graduate student, will staff the center Tuesday and Friday afternoons.

New Dept. Heads Named to Posts

New heads have been named in the departments of history and speech at UMass.

Prof. James E. Lynch has been named head of the speech department. He had been acting head of the department. Prof. Robert H. McNeal has been named head of the history department, effective Sept. 1. He replaces Professor Archibald Lewis, who will remain in the department and devote full time to teaching and research.

Dr. Lynch is a specialist in the history of broadcasting, television programming and production, broadcasting in politics and international broadcasting. He holds A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Michigan.

He came to UMass in 1969 from Ohio State University, where he was a professor of speech. He has also taught at Indiana University, University of Michigan and University of Iowa. He has written chapters for three different books, plus articles, reports and book reviews in 16 different publications.

Drug Survey Discussed Tonight

The drinking and drug use survey distributed this week in the mail will be the subject of the Ed Roche show at 6:30 tonight on WMUA.

Professor Peter Park and several of the students in the seminar (sociology 391) which completed the questionnaire will discuss it in detail and answer any questions callers may have. The number to call will be announced on the show.

The survey was distributed to approximately 1500 students chosen at random. It is completely anonymous. Results will be used to ascertain accurate information and attitudes about drug use.

Initial response has been good, according to the organizers, but to be completely valid, 100% response is necessary, they said. Recipients of the questionnaire are urged to listen to tonight's program.

THE QUESTION OF COMPENSATION

PRO

The Senate needs committed full-time leadership, and those giving as much of themselves as the job requires should be compensated.

If the Student Senate is to attract officers of the highest caliber, then no candidate should be prevented from running for office for financial reasons — that people of such competence are needed is self-evident.

The present Student Activities tax figure, $35.50 per student, includes the monies for officers' pay. The amount expended per student is only $0.24.

Payment of these officers is contingent upon the approval of students by referendum / this payment is not retroactive; it would be expended next year, for next year's officers.

? YES

? NO

CON

The positions of Student Senate Officers are voluntary ones. In the past the officers' commitment has been due to the Senate's service-orientation. Salaries should be kept out of the Senate to avoid the possibility of becoming money-oriented.

Although the amount taxed per person has decreased, the entire budget has increased significantly over the years. And though this is a salaried position, there are no required hours, therefore no guarantee of labor.

There is also the question of fiscal priorities — does this allocation fit the desires of the students?

Huzzah! Huzzah!

WASHINGTON-No matter how hard we try, the press can't do anything right as far as the Nixon administration is concerned.

I am happy to report that the attacks of President Nixon, Spiro Anew and John Mitchell have not fallen on deaf ears. A sincere group of journalists and TV commentators have formed an Ad Hoc Committee to Make the News More Palatable to the Administration.

The first meeting was held last week in the Georgetown basement of a famous cartoonist.

"Gentlemen," a syndicated columnist said, "the Administration is fed up with the way the nation's media are reporting the news. It is our duty as Americans to change our ways."

"Huzzah! Huzzah!" everyone shouted.

"Are there any suggestions?"

"How about coming out for Judge Carswell?" someone said.

"It's too late unless there is a new opening on the Supreme Court," an editorial writer replied.

"What about refusing to report the unemployment figures in the United States?"

"That would please the Administration," a White House correspondent said.

"How about pulling all our correspondents out of Indochina and accepting only the word of the Pentagon briefers?"

"It's a step in the right direction," a TV correspondent agreed.

"It isn't enough," a columnist said. "This Administration deserves more than a few bones."

"I've got it," suggested a reporter. "Suppose we agree every week to turn over all our notebooks and films and radio tapes to the Justice Department?"

An editor said, "John Mitchell would like that."

"And suppose we make an agreement not to report any news from Red China without clearing it with Spiro Agnew?"

"Huzzah! Huzzah!" everyone shouted.

A woman reporter said, "What about putting an embargo on all news about anti-Vietnam demonstrations?"

"Or demonstrations of any kind?" someone else said.

"We could do it if we put our hearts in it," the cartoonist said.

"These are all good suggestions," the editorial writer said. "But we owe this Administration more than just suppressing bad news. We have to print the good news about what President Nixon is doing."

"Huzzah! Huzzah!" everyone cried.

"Let's hear a few suggestions."

There was dead silence in the room.

The woman reporter finally said, "Nixon's marrying off his daughter to a very nice young man."

"He kept Henry Kissinger from being kidnapped," someone else added.

"He got Congress to vote on the SST."

"He made Spiro Agnew into a household word."

"He brought Martha Mitchell to Washington."

"He made everything perfectly clear."

"That's enough to start with," the syndicated columnist said. "We're all agreed then that we're going to lay off the Nixon Administration until after the election."

"Huzzah! Huzzah!" everyone cried.

Unfortunately, at that moment 100 federal marshals, who had been tipped off by an FBI informer, crashed into the basement and arrested everyone for conspiring to overthrow the United States government.

"That does it," said an editor as he was put into a paddy wagon. "No more Mister Good Guy."

Mass Action vs. Confrontationalist Politics

May Day vs. April 24

By SID FINEHURST

The anti-War movement has now seen the two conflicting strategies to end the War worked out in practice. On April 24 600,000 people went into the streets of Washington and San Francisco in the largest and most peaceful demonstration in the history of the nation. On May 4 perhaps 10,000 demonstrators put their bodies on the line to prove once again what they all already knew: government is a repressive institution.

"If the government doesn't stop the War, the people will stop the government." Today, of course, both the government and the war are still on our backs. But the May Day Tribe knew that this would happen also; they knew their super-revolutionary rhetoric was nothing more than empty posturing. What then did the May Day Tribe plan to accomplish?

The MAY DAY MANUAL states "the aim of the May Day actions is to raise the social costs of the war to a level unacceptable to America's rulers. To do this, we seek to create the spectre of social chaos while maintaining the support or at least the toleration of the broad masses of American people." It is clear from this statement that the Tribe is not interested in reaching the broad masses of Americans. They are satisfied if the American people simply tolerate them. Their strategy is for confrontation between the relatively small numbers of the "dedicated" and the government, while the American people remain passive.

Basically the Tribespeople are liberals. The liberals want the dedicated activists to go to Washington and confront the government with passionate arguments and the threat of the biennial election. The Tribespeople want the dedicated activists to go to Washington and confront the government with passionate actions and the threat of violence. Neither want to involve the majority of the American people who are opposed to this war in independent political action.

The aim of April 24 differs considerably from either the May Day tribe or the liberals: the orientation is not confrontation between small groups of officials and lobbyists-activists but towards bringing the majority of the American people into struggle against the war government. This majority of Americans, which is already opposed to the War, can be brought into the movement by peaceful, legal demonstrations, which give a focus for organizing.

What April 24 proved is that mass actions of a peaceful, legal character do have the potential to bring the anti-War majority into the Movement. April 24 had unprecedented support from the Trade Union movement, the Black community, and of course the veterans and G.I's. The participation of Trade Unionists, Blacks, Veterans, and G.I.'s will make the job of further mobilizing these constituences much easier next time. And there will be a next time. The anti-War movement will not stop until a majority of Americans are out on the streets demanding immediate withdrawal. There will be a next time unless the movement gets diverted into the search for a "true peace candidate" or gets demoralized by further defeats like May Day. Therein lies the essential difference between May Day and April 24. One seeks to build the movement on defeats and the other on concrete accomplishments.

Take A Look Around...

By RICHARD PERKINS

The recent tendency to blast 'Amerika' for its infinite ills is getting really boring. Not because the ills aren't there, or because 'Amerika' doesn't deserve a blast on these counts--but because much of the rhetoric is boring. It's boring to hear undefined and ill thought phraseology--such as one student who recently declared "There is no democracy in America"; (no one bothering to question what she means by 'democracy'). Or the hypocrites who differentiate between 'ripping off' and 'liberating' on the basis of whether or not they own the stolen property. It's boring to hear the cliches endlessly flaunted, or the verbiage designed to inflate egos and to deflate interest and thought. But most of all it's boring--and worse, troubling--to hear students who attack Amerika for national ills which all have referents of our own making here on this campus. For example:

Pollution: Did you catch a glimpse of the grounds around the Campus Center after the spring concert this past weekend? How many coke cups (etc) are floating on the pond--and who put them there? Industrial polluters are far more visible (and harmful), but at least they have a rational basis for their actions: it keeps profits high. The crap on our campus represents only our irrational unconcern.

Racism: defined as the negative evaluation of a physically unique group based solely upon those physical traits. We got it here. Only it goes both ways--Whites who I have heard talk about Mills House in terms usually reserved for jingoistic discussion of "the enemy"; and Blacks who can only conceive of Whites as 'devils' or 'colonialists'. The objects of both conversations are other UMass students.

Non-representative government: For example, how many times must the student body vote down pay bills for the Student Senate on referendum only to have more bills surreptitiously introduced?

Inconsistent leadership: Senate President Elters told us all to lower our voices two months ago, yet one of the most unreasonable cascades of verbiage in recent times was directed by him at the last meeting of the Faculty Senate. This is not a comment on his basic argument against that body, but rather on his slanderous and immature tactics.

Totalitarianism: defined as non-representative minority power vis-a-vis the majority. Documentation here is admittedly impossible, but I invite critical attention to those who glibbly invoke "all power to the people". What 'people'? How about "power to all the people"? Like the millions of lower middle class workers who are scared silly of long hairs who--in their eyes--will throw over "all that is sacred" (e.g. personal property rights, civil traditions, institutionalized patterns such as the family structure--even the value on male dominence in the home). Power to all of them? Power to all the Viet Nam hawks? All the pigs? The ass-holes? Who are "the people"?

Violence: Yes. There's crime right here in River City. Had anything stolen lately? Been mugged in the tunnel under Mass. Ave.? Know any girl who's been attacked while walking alone? The problems--the causes--are far from simple, but nevertheless it's students like us who are out there doing the stealing, the robbing, even the raping.

Apathy: Who could seriously claim that there is adequate demonstrated concern expressed between students on this campus? Notice as you walk that few will even look at you. Inconsiderateness is rampant; leave your food tray on the dining commons table--let someone else worry about it; have a hockey game in the dorm corridor at midnight--don't worry about someone else trying to sleep or study; litter the campus--let the old men with gunny sacks pick it up.) Many persons complain about the apathy of students toward causes and issues. How about the cause of interpersonal harmony and the issue of neighborly love?

This incomplete and admittedly one-sided critique of us has been issued solely because of what appears to be inconsistency (at best), and gross deception (at worst) on th part of many students today. When anger is inconsistently focused, so that only certain targets (such as Amerika) are selected, while at the same time others--much closer at hand--are ignored, then suspicion of motive is appropriate. I call only for reasoned debate and consistent criticism--especially when the target is ourselves.

Letters To The Editor

Lease You Could Do

To the Editor:

Many students have entered into leases on apartments in the area that run until August 31. As a general proposition it should be clear to every tenant that leaving, and refusing to pay rent on leased premises before the end of the term makes every person who has signed the lease as tenant liable for the full amount of the rent that is not paid. This means that if co-tenants contribute to one another in order to pay rent, that is their business and not the Landlord's. He has the right to seek full payment from any one or all of the signers of the lease.

It should also be kept in mind that a security deposit may not ordinarily be used to pay the last month's rent in those apartments where termination is near. As a matter of law it is probably to the tenant's disadvantage to abuse this rule since, as of January 1 this year, any such deposit that is wrongfully withheld, more than thirty days must be doubled when returned. The Landlord must return the deposit less deductions properly itemized in order to avoid this penalty. As always, student-tenants who feel that this provision has been violated may consult with this office or any attorney to get help in recovering.

Tenants vacating premises should also bear in mind that the apartment should be left in as clean good order as is possible both as a courtesy to the new tenant and to reduce any claim the Landlord may make against the security deposit.

Needless damage or dirt will ultimately hurt the new tenant - rather than the Landlord - in the form of higher rent, distrust and so forth, regardless of your intentions. Willful damage is also a crime.

Any students who are in doubt about their tenancies should make sure of their legal positions before taking actions that have unforeseen consequences.

Students who intend to live off-campus in the fall, should be certain of the University regulations applicable to them before entering into leases. Remember that money paid in advance to "hold" an apartment may be legally forfeit if you do not sign a lease or enter into actual occupancy.

Richard M. Howland

Any Spare Change?

To the Editor:

Today the Student Body will again have the chance to vote for paying its student body officers. Everything seems to indicate that the vote will be massively against doing so, which I feel is a mistake.

The Senate is constantly accused of being elitist, and student action against the pay bill will only increase this. 60% of this campus student's families make less than $10,000. We all know that most of us (I've worked year round for the last two years) financially struggle through this university. The Senate Officers are required to work a minimum of 40 hours a week, as well as to spend much of their summer time in Amherst. If Senate officers are not paid, then they must either be independantly wealthy, not fulfill their obligations, or go into personal debt.

The four of us officers elected two weeks ago will meet our obligations to you, the student body, no matter what the referendum outcome. We are asking for your support so that we don't fall further into personal debt, for a vote of confidence for a more active Senate, and more importantly for long range support of the concept of "freeing" your student government officers so that can better represent your interests before the faculty, administration, and Trustees (who all make more than $125 a month).

One More Black Gown

To the Editor:

Students anticipating Commencement may be concerned to learn that no list of degree recipients, including the names of Honor students and those receiving advanced degrees, etc. will be available at the ceremony. This decision, apparently made last year by Whitmore (in view of the cases where some names are deleted or added at the last moment) is, I feel, at the expense of the many (relatives) who have waited for years to see sons, daughters, grandchildren, etc. graduate from college.

I feel that there is but little pleasure for seventy year-old bifocaled eyes, in the stifling heat or gentle rain, to behold a far-off mass of over 3000 black-gowned objects amidst the otherwise droll ceremony. Were these eyes to find one recognizable name on a piece of paper, then there would be one pleasurable aspect to the occasion.

Jeffrey H. Kendall

Another Minority

To the Editor:

The Listening Library in the Music Room of the Campus Center finally opened on Tuesday. Students immediately flocked to the Music Room to discover which (or how many) of their musical heroes had been deemed worthy of representation in the tape collection. While many were satisfied with the available selections, others were disappointed. We were among the dissatisfied, feeling that our long-gone classical heroes, ranging from Bach to Stravinsky, deserved more recongition than that given them by the present eight selections of dubious renown.

We hope that in the near future, this meager collection will increase to a healthier minority position.

Anne Davis and Nancy Mazonson

Always Time

To the Editor:

After reading Robert Nesti's article in Tuesday's Collegian, my reaction can only be one of shock and anger. He not only says that there will be no more concerts like the ones this last weekend, but he applauds the Student Senate's action of refusing to fund any future ones. How can he really call this last weekend a "wasteful and useless way to spend student funds?" I am not only speaking for myself, but for thousands of other students who went to the concerts and had a fantastic time. My attendance there does not mean that I am not interested in the Washington march, the war in Viet Nam or the Kent State students. In my mind, though, there is no connection between these and the concerts. I don't believe this campus' total purpose is to educate and to be politically active. There must be a time to relax and enjoy a weekend of love and music. Maybe Mr. Nesti describes this as "self indulgent luxury for all involved" but I describe it as enjoying a little extra in life and relaxing from the grind of schoolwork and classes. The Student Senate's funds are for the student's interests and not solely for politics. I will participate in the Moratorium this week, but I will be very disappointed if I never participate in another beautiful concert. In Mr. Nesti's words, if "the question is whether or not now is the time for a good time," I say yes, there is always time for it.

One of Those Days

To the Editor:

Thank you, Whitmore, for insisting that I spend my morning finding my Area Coordinator to sign my under-load card. I mean, even though he's never seen me before, he's obviously the right person to know whether or not I should take an underload.

Thank you, Casiao, for having me sit for an hour so that when I finally did get in to see the Dean, it only took 30 seconds for him to sign my card (see it was fairly automatic, considering it was a four-course load with Senior Honors zero credits this semester). This type of thing teaches patience and endurance.

And most of all, I want to thank the wonderful Classics Dept. In their infinite wisdom, they scheduled the Hebrew placement test (required of all those wishing to take the language) for 6:00 p.m. This meant that I ran from my class (which ends at 5:15 p.m.) to Southwest, stood in line at the Dining Commons for twenty minutes (oh, by the way, thank you, Dining Commons, for closing one line early), swallowed one mouthful of dinner (well worth the $2.00 I paid), and ran back to Thompson, only to discover that those who have taken Hebrew need only sign their names and addresses and then can leave. I mean, I really need the opportunity to lose weight by running around missing meals--87 lbs. is really overweight. All I can say is that the course had better be worth it.

(Also, I'd like to thank the girl who decided to conduct a psych experiment in the public corridor of Bartlett and so evicted me from my seat near the Bartlett-Herter tunnel, causing me to miss my boyfriend as he came out of class, so that both of us ended up looking all over campus for each other. Let's face it, what right could I possibly have to be in a public corridor near a much-used tunnel when she is trying to further knowledge?)

Thank you and may the bird of paradise fold, spindle, and mutilate your computer cards.

Evelyn Chimelis

What Is A Communist?

Barring an unforeseen eruption of a nuclear holocaust and other developments, 1971 is, undoubtedly, the year of the unprecedented diplomatic break-through. Little did we know that a virtually insignificant pastime like ping-pong would be the secret key to the Sino-American thaw. While this is still a "thaw", the ping-pong team itself, and, through it, America herself, found out for the first time since the Second World War that contrary to popular cliches and imperial sentiments, the Chinese people were neither "red" nor strangers to the homo sapiens species. Like all other members of the homo sapiens, they "discovered" the Chinese people were subject to all human emotions and their concomitant interactions.

The political and social significance of this "discovery" has been the subject of an opinionated debate among the so-called Sinologists. One has yet to come across an objective and comprehensive treatment of this development. But what are indeed the global implications of this proposed dente? This is not easy to say. But one cannot ignore the fact that some political solutions long considered as a pattern can no longer stand. The intricate problems of two Germanies or two Koreas assume some fresher dimensions to be reckoned with. Again the question of de jure regimes versus de facto units has to be redefined. Does it mean that genuine nationalism has acquired some legitimacy? Political scientists will have to come to grips with reality and legitimacy.

However, one thing is certain. If the proposed Sino-American dente has undercut the political legitimacy and claims of the Taipei oligarchy, it has indeed a chilling effect on the political back-bone of the white supremacists in Southern Africa. The legitimacy of African Nationalism, hitherto regarded as "communist-inspired", has assumed some cloak of respectability.

The white clique in Southern Africa, long accustomed to linking genuine freedom fighters with Chinese communists, ought to realize now that these African "communists," like those on the mainland of China, are not only genuine nationalists but the more so human beings. Nationalists like Sobukwe, Mandela, Sithole, Nkomo, dos Santos, Neto, and Tiovo Herman ja Tiovo are not thumb-sucking agitators. Like Chairman Mao, they have the "cosmic companionship" on their side.

The three dictators of Portugal, Rhodesia, and South Africa have persistently cast the African nationalists in the distorted images of the Maoists communists. This deliberate misrepresentation of the situation must now be exposed for what it is. It is nothing else but the implementation of their herrenvolk doctrine. Does it make sense that a man of international stature like the Late Albert Luthule be suppressed as a communist? Albert Luthile, it must be remembered, was a man who dedicated his entire life to the cause of human justice, political and social equality. A declared pacifist, he earned the much coveted Peace Prize. Communist!

An Experimental College

To the Editor:

We write in support of the creation of many options at the University of Massachusetts, options which would serve to free students from the existing lockstep march towards the degree which is imposed on the vast majority by the present single-track system.

An example of such an option could be Project Ten. Housed for the last three years in Pierpont (and Moore, until this year), it has become the University's closest approximation to a real experimental college. Whether this model implies Reed, Antioch, or Bensalem does not matter. What matters is that "attempts at humanism" (to quote last Wednesday's Collegian story on the Project) are given room to move.

An experimental college would involve close student-faculty interaction, maximum study option and a determinedly evaluative approach to the experiments undertaken. This is why we, all members of Project Ten, wish to invite others to join us in the creation of such an alternative. This is why we ask that any students drawn to such an experiment contact us at 545-0871 or 545-0472. And you should do so at once, for selection for next year's Project began this week and must be completed by the middle of next week, at the latest.

Zero Population Growth

Not All Contraceptives Are Effective

This article is the next in a series dealing with overpopulation. It deals with the contraceptive methods of population control. Anyone wishing further information concerning these articles or about joining ZPG may contact John Maytum 584-8597 or George Wilder 549-0768.

It should be obvious to most people by now that the world faces catastrophe from the "numbers game" of overpopulation. This catastrophe will occur in the form of wars, famine, and death, which are in themselves grim forms of population control.

There are, however, preventative measures of dealing with overpopulation available, primarily through birth control methods. Certain methods of doubtful value have been attempted by individuals for centuries, but effective techniques were not necessary, and were almost universally discouraged while nations attempted to build large population bases.

Now the problem is reversed and population growth must be curtailed, but governments are still dragging their feet on the development of truly effective birth control programs and methods. Methods of contraception which are available will be examined in this article.

The oldest form of contraception is called "coitus interruptus" which is the withdrawal of the penis from the vagina so that the semen is deposited outside of the woman's genital tract. This is an extremely unreliable method of contraception, requires considerable control on the part of the male and often limits sexual satisfaction of both male and female.

Ironically, "coitus interruptus" has recently been used to treat a form of male sterility in which the man has an inadequate quantity of sperm in their semen, since the first few drops of the ejaculate are usually the most concentrated, and in "coitus interruptus" this portion is usually deposited in the vagina.

Douching is another and perhaps the least dependable method of contraception with reported pregnancy rates in excess of 30%. The average sperm can travel approximately an inch in eight minutes, thus, by the time douching occurs, most sperm have made their way into the uterus.

Norforms and other feminine hygiene suppositories with no spermicidal capacity, have often been used as a contraceptive. The only result of using these suppositories as such is an unwanted pregnancy.

A useful contraceptive used by the male is the condom, also known as the "rubber" or "safe". It essentially functions by preventing the sperm from entering the vagina. In addition to this function it also offers protection against the contraction of venereal disease. They can, however, fail when the device ruptures and there is a spillage of the semen. It is known by spot checks of these devices by the Federal Drug Administration that one out of every 350 devices is defective.

The condoms do have the advantage that they can purchased without prescription, with price ranges from less than $1.80 to $7.00 per dozen. These devices have absolutely no side effects.

The diaphram is a more reliable form of contraception. This method is employed by 25% of all couples using any form of contraception in this country. The diaphram is a dome shaped rubber cap measuring anywhere from 5.5 to 10 centimeters in diameter. It is inserted into the vagina and over the cervix prior to intercourse and removed afterwards. It should always be used with a spermicidal jelly on the surface.

Essentially the mechanism of the diaphram provides a barrier to sperm entering the vagina. The diaphram must be properly fitted by a trained physician and does take a certain amount of practice to learn how to insert the device properly. It should not be inserted more than two hours prior to intercourse, nor removed until at least six hours afterwards.

The diaphram requires a medical prescription, the fitting procedure is painless, and the fitting must be checked annually. Advantages of the diaphram are no physical side effects, no interruption to sexual foreplay (since it can be inserted early), reasonable cost ($4-5) and durability (the device can last up to two years).

The disadvantages are that its pregnancy rate is from 5 to 10%, some women consider it unesthetic and others consider invaginal manipulation repugnant.

Another form of contraceptive is the vaginal spermicidal, jelly, cream or suppository. These devices work in essentially two ways: killing sperm and chemically blocking the cervix. They must be applied immediately prior to coitus (maximum of a half hour).

This method unfortunately has a pregnancy rate of from 8 to 30%, with an average between 10 and 20%. However, when used in combination with another method, such as the condom, they are very safe.

Two other disadvantages are that they may interrupt sexual foreplay and some couples find it "messy". The combination method carries an effectiveness rate of 90%. Spermicidals are inexpensive and available on drug store counters.

Another method of contraception is the "safe period" or "rhythm" method. The rationale of this method is as follows. Ovulation usually occurs on the fourteenth day of the menstral cycle. The egg is only capable of being fertilized within forty-eight hours of ovulation, and these sperm are short-lived and incapable of fertilizing an egg for more than forty-eight hours after ejaculation.

So theoretically, if the exact time of ovulation can be ascertained, and abstinence from intercourse is arranged on that day, and two days before and after ovulation, conception would be unlikely.

Unfortunately, ovulation does not occur with any such clocklike precision. Before the probably ovulation date can be calculated, careful record must be made of the three most recent menstrual cycles, and women who have variations in their menstral cycles of eight days or more are advised not to use this method at all.

A doctor's supervision is necessary in attempting to establish an adequate rhythm method. The accuracy of such a record can be increased by the use of a basal temperature occurs for the remainder of the ovulatory cycle.

This method is essentially unreliable for the great majority of women. The fertile period extends from and includes the nineteenth day before the earliest likely menstruation up to and including the ninth day before the latest likely menstruation. At time between these fertile periods, coitus can take place.

A very safe and reliable method is the intrauterine device. The most common devices are the Lippe's Loop, the safety coil and the Dalcan shield. These devices somehow increase the motility of the egg and make the uterine environment unsuitable for its implantation. It may also change the enzymes present in the lining of the uterus.

None of these theories have really been proved, but the devices are safe and have a high effective rate of 98%, in women who have had a full term pregnancy, but only 50% in women who have not. Occasionally however, the I.U.D. has fallen out without the woman knowing it, and this has led to unwanted pregnancies.

In women who have not been pregnant, explusion rates increase and there is more pain, vaginal discharge and bleeding problems. The device must be inserted by a physician at an expense of from $25 to $100. The insertion is reversible with no impairment to fertility.

The most effective and safest and enjoyable form of contraception especially for young women is the pill. It contains synthetic hormones and inhibits or stops ovulation. It creates a state of "pseudo-pregnancy" and forms a hostile mucus around the cervix which is unreceptive to sperm and effects the lining of the uterus in which it would be difficult to implant an egg.

It also helps regulate painful periods and controls heavy bleeding. Most commonly the first pill is taken on the fifth day of the period, subsequently taken for three weeks and stopped for approximately a week. The pills must be taken consistently: forgetting the pill for one day rarely results in a pregnancy but if more are forgotten pregnancy may occur.

Most side effects one hears about are really related to the amount of estrogen in the pill and usually disappear after the second cycle. If taking the pill is stopped, a period may not result for 6 to 8 weeks.

Incidents of blood clotting are higher among pill users (3 per 100,000 but, only 1.3 per 100,000 were from age 20 to 34. However, the incidence of blood clotting is 20 to 30% higher among pregnant women. Neither the pill nor any other method of contraception described here cause cancer. The pill is close to 100% effective.

The next articles in this series will deal with two other preventative methods of controlling overpopulation: sterilization of both male and female and abortion.

S.W. Assembly Chooses Officers, Plans Frosh Orientation Program

In a meeting of the Southwest Assembly Tuesday night the following students were elected to serve as next year's officers with a unanimous vote of confidence.

President--Lester Meyers
Vice President--Larry St. Cyr
Treasurer--Lon Dexter
Secretary--Candy Hopkins

Students from Washington Middle presented a proposal for freshmen orientation. Plans included movies, a grinder party, a midnight snack, a brunch, and a folk night. The prupose of these activities is to facilitate a smoother transition from high school to dorm Southwest and University life. Eighty dollars was allocated for the grinder party, and the rest would be paid by those eating. It was decided that if any money were made on the party, it would be returned to the Southwest Assembly, up to the amount of eighty dollars.

In other actions, a bill providing for approval of the Southwest Patriots' Constitution was passed unanimously. A bill appropriating 25 dollars for an ad in the Collegian that people would be collecting bail money in the dorms for UMass students jailed in Washington, D.C., was defeated.

Even More Courses

Orchard Hill courses are now open for enrollment from the entire campus, as well as for students from the other four colleges in the area. Students electing these courses must first preregister with the Master's Office, 101 Field, Orchard Hill, on Thursday and Friday, May 6 and 7 from 9:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. (The list that follows includes several courses not previously announced.) Foriegn Students Hold Mixer

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

NOT TOO BAD—UMass student George Courmouzis samples one of fifteen different wines at the International Club's mixer last Saturday.

Last Saturday at Amherst College, over 400 College foreign students from the Five College area attended a mixer sponsored by the UMass International Club. Many countries, races, colors and religions were represented at the very successful event.

Preceeding the dance was a wine tasting party which featured wines from 15 different countries. The dance which featured Flight and the loght show was the evening's main attraction. Conversation in many different languages gave the evening an extra sparkle.

The event was planned and carried out most successfully by three foreign students from the Five College area. Two UMass students, George Courmouzis from Greece and Mohamet Ullah from Pakistan along with an Amherst student Steve Harrold conducted the event.

The UMass International Club which has a membership of over 600 students from 75 different countries, has a full slate of events planned for the Fall semester. Some of the future events planned are a huge International Fair being preceded by an international week of dances and various cultural activities.

UMass Joins Nuclear Research

UMass and 14 other organizations have joined together in supporting a unique, cooperative venture in fundamental nuclear research to increase man's knowledge of the basic structure of matter.

The new project will involve the construction and equipping of a research facility at the Atomic Energy Commission's Oak Ridge (Tennessee) National Laboratory. An on-line electro magnetic isotope separator is to be added to the Oak Ridge cyclotron, a multi-million-volt-range nuclear particle accelorater.

Joining the AEC in sponsorship of the project are 11 universities; the State of Tennessee; Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU), an AEC contractor for educational and research programs; and Union Carbide Corporation, which operates Oak Ridge National Laboratory for the AEC.

This is believed to be the first time that a group of public and private universitites and a state government have collectively proposed to buy a major piece of experimental equipment for installation at an AEC national laboratory and then to provide continuing support for its operation over an extended period.

The project is known as UNISOR (University Isotope Separator-Oak Ridge). The initial founding organizers of UNISOR are the Georgia Institute of Technology, University of Kentucky, Louisiana State University, UMass, University of South Carolina, University of Tennessee, Vanderbilt University, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, Furman University, Tennessee Technological University, Emory University, ORAU and ORNL. Each of the sponsoring institutions will contribute both to the initial equipping and the annual operation of the UNISOR facility over an initial six-year period.

UNISOR will afford the sponsoring universities and others an opportunity to explore an important new frontier of nuclear physics and chemistry. This is the study of short-lived nuclei, far from the line of nuclear stability, which holds promise for extending the knowledge of nuclear structure that so far is based largely on the investigation of more stable nuclear configurations.

Addition of the isotope separator to the Oak Ridge cyclotron facility will make it one of the best facilities in the United States the research with tailor-made nuclei. When UNISOR operation begins, Oak Ridge will first provide, under controlled conditions, desired reactions between accelerated particles and nuclear target materials. Then the isotope separator will make possilbe identification of the reaction products by their masses or atomic weight, for detailed investigation of the short-lived nuclei.

Volunteers Collect Food, Clothing For Cairo Blacks

The Committee for Peace in Cairo, Illinois, a student group from the five college area (Amherst, Smith, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges and UMass), is conducting a two-week drive to collect clothing, food, medicine and money for citizens of Cairo, Ill.

Volunteers from the five colleges are visiting businesses, shopping areas, and schools in the Holyoke, Springfield, Northampton, South Hadley, Amherst area between now and May 17 to speak about Cairo and conduct the drive.

The Committee was formed at a meeting of representatives from 34 colleges and universities at Southern Illinois University in April. The students discussed problems in Cairo and then visited problems first-hand.

According to Jim McElroy, a junior at UMass and a member of the Committee for Peace, the Black United Front has been conducting a boycott of Cairo businesses for several years. The boycott has been successful, he says, but it has left the citizens without the basic necessities of life, and has torn the community apart, resulting in violence.

In 1940, says McElroy, the population of Cairo was about 20,000. In 1969 it had dropped to 12,000, and it is now down to less than 7,000. The community is in such conflict and there is so little money that the City Council ordered all public schools closed on April 30, McElroy says.

June 19 has been set aside as Black Solidarity Day in Cairo, and all goods and money collected nationally will be shipped to Cairo on that day to be administered by the Black Unity Front.

5-College Courses Open To UMass Students

On campus design, Southeast Asian politics, Black autobiography, and history of women's liberation sound interesting to you?

These topics are covered in courses offered respectively at Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke, Amherst, and Smith. They, and many other courses are open to students on all five campuses of the five college cooperation.

Catalogues of the colleges may be found in the registrar's office. Also, to offer more information or help in signing up or choosing a course, members of the Five College Student Coordinating Board will be outside the registrar's offices from May 3 to May 7, Wednesday, and Friday, from 9:30 to 11:00 A.M. and Tuesday and Thursday from 2:00 to 5:00 P.M.

Bail Funds Needed For UMass Prisoners

TheWashington Bail Committee completed its first full day of collection yesterday. Collection took place almost exclusively in Pierpont and in the Student Union, due to a lack of sufficient organization. Collection will continue today and tomorrow.

According to Ed Bryant, spokesman for the group, there are still between fifteen and thirty UMass students still jailed in Washington, D.C.

"It's difficult to tell the exact number. Reports have been coming in sporadically, and each time we find out some one else from here is still in jail. The money we're collecting is intended primarily for UMass people, but we are also attempting to help out others who are in the same predicament," Bryant said.

Arrests have continued in Washington. Two thousand more were made on Tuesday. Bail has been alternately set at $100 or $250, which means arrested students must post bondsman's fees of $10 or $25, Bryant said. There are several bail funds established in Washington and throughout the country, but the need for more money still exists.

"There are still a lot of people down in D.C.," said Rich Dinkin of the Bail Committee. "None of them have any bread, and we need to collect all we can get, because they're still busting people."

Today's collection will be held in the Student Union. There will be a table once again in the Student Union Lobby, and in addition there will be students collecting in the Hatch.

Venture

Participation in UNISOR will be open to all scientists and engineers with an interest in the construction, development or scientific use of the facility, on recommendation from their respective institutions. The isotope separator is scheduled for installation by the end of 1971.

UMass participation in the project stems from the research of two physics department members in the area of experimental nuclear physics. They are Professor Arthur R. Quinton and Associate Professor K.S.R. Sastry. Professor Quinton is a member of the UNISOR executive committee.

Tiger, Tiger Burns Out Early

By PAT SUPRENANT
AND BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Towards the end of West Side Story, a group of the Jets sing a sardonic song "Gee Officer Krumpke" which lashes out at those who they felt victimized them. The song, addressed to the local cop on the beat, filled with mock self--pity.

This five minute number sums up aptly what a three hour melodrama, "DOES THE TIGER WEAR A NECKTIE", takes to accomplish, and the song does it with more subtlety and less bombast.

Soaked in sleazy atmosphere upon entering the theater, the audience arrives long after the characters initial actions. We see them contemplating recovery from drug use, and not actually participating in it. The author has anticipated this and has attempted to compensate by having his characters make continual references to shooting up or kicking the habit. They only became stereotypes of your television view of the young junkie, which is to say, nearly hysterical.

The play opens with the characters milling around what appears to be the hallway of a drug rehabilitation center. Some go to the john and make clandestine deals, others just make obvious sexual references in speech or action, while still others fall all over the apron of the stage in what supposedly showed drug withdrawal. There's one young man who barls on the left, lies sweating and prone on the right, and disappears after this first scene. He was there to "create an atmosphere", one which hurts the texture of the play. For it becomes less a drama about people and more a reinforcement of the slick journalistic fallacies of a socio-economic problem.

The play begins at this emotional peak and remains static. It states and restates through its characters and contrived situations things we have all read in weekly news magazines about junkies. The play is a sailboat with its keel in the mud; it states nearly everything it has to say in the first five minutes and merely is boring after that.

The characters, for the most part, are uninteresting. Either they merely wander around in a synthetically-induced stupor or scream their little dirty witticisms in a vain attempt to entertain. There's nothing interesting in hearing all sorts of cunning sexual innuendoes and hyperbolic remarks, but that's all the play offers.

Even worse is that it's done at such a high-pitch. The intensity of acting only emphasises the lack of substance behind the play. It's much like watching Bob Hope do another one of his tasteless monologues with his ludicrous self--assurance as if he's saying, look--I'm famous, I'm good. Tiger comes off saying--"look, I'm funny, I'm relevant--I use four-letter words, I'm real, I'm good." No matter how many times Peterson bombards us with the word "bastard", he still can't shock us out of his rather contrived reality.

This is unfortunate because TIGER does have some things going for it. There is, for example, a number of striking sequences. A closet scene between Linda and Conrad, the black couple who end up something of the play's major characters, is compassionate and written with simple honesty missing from the rest of the play. The play's climax also is stunning, and extremely well-done, in this production. Here a most obnoxious and misunderstood bully, Bickham, a poorly-written part which benefits greatly from the cool performance of Robert A. Perry, gives a graphic and moving description of a most traumatic incident in his life. Here again the play lets us down by having him fulfill social and theatrical stereotypes in the final act when he turns up floating in the Hudson a few days before Christmas (no less). People stopped committing suicide in the third act with Lillian Hellman, at least one hoped.

The acting was erratic. Some people were just too hysterical to be of any positive value to the production. Those who were good, though, were exceptional. Rhonda Anderson as Linda made the production worth sitting through as she shone as the bitter black hooker. As her boyfriend Conrad, Bill Norris, held the part with authority.

The set by Jeff A. Fiala was more than adequate with platforms lending themselves easily to the fluid stage action The lighting and costumes also worked well within the production.

DOES THE TIGER WEAR A NECKTIE? unfotunately answers its question early, far too early to be of any interest.

Danielson Receives Grant For Study

Asst. Prof. John T. Danielson of the psychology department at UMass has received a $27,700 grant to study the correlation of behavior to neural sensitivity.

The grant, which is for two years, was given by the National Science Foundation, and will enable Prof. Danielson to continue earlier studies.

In his new research, rabbits will be subjected to light flashes of different degrees. Dr. Danielson will attempt to measure the rabbits' neural signals as they are associated with the flashes, and correlate this information with the rabbits' behavior toward the light. The project is titled Increment Sensitivity of the Visual System.

Prof. Danielson received his B.S. degree from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and his M.S. and Ph.D. from Boston University. At UMass he teaches courses in sensation and perception.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Gemini loves to play tricks. If your competitor is a Gemini, it is best to distract him. If your ally is a Gemini, it behooves you to help him concentrate. Gemini may irritate, but will seldom bore anyone. Key number for Gemini is 5; the planet associated with this zodiacal sign is Mercury. When it comes to speculation, Gemini displays nerve. Natives of this sign may appear cool, collected but after a big gamble, close observation will reveal beads of perspiration on forehead and a touch of hands will make obvious that palms are wet.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Laugh at your own foibles. Make concession to mate; business associate. The more flexible your position, the better for you. Expand mental horizons. Heed advice of attorney. Be cautious.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Even apparent minor details may now form like major obstacles. Strive for sense of balance. Sharpen perspective. Some red tape actually proves of benefit. Don't be in a hurry.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Affairs of heart dominate; emotions now tend to take over from logic. Realize you do have to face yourself in morning. Means avoid actions that create embarrassment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One who issues ultimatum really lacks power. Realize this and respond accordingly. You have strength behind you; build and create. Older individual may sing blues. But you have right to happiness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid premature action; take time to develop ideas. Relative is helpful, but impatient. Pisces individual now can steer you along proper path. You gain in spiritual sense.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial status improves. You make gains. Valuable possessions are appraised, appreciated. Capricorn individual helps you to see the light. Fine for paying, collecting debts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lunar cycle moves up; you can safely take initiative. Create policy, set pace. Stress originality, independence. Assert yourself. Highlight self expression. Creative methods succeed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra message. You can begin projects, meet and influence people. Your dynamism, magnetism soar to forefront. One behind the scenes is fascinated. You will know.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on special associations, friendships. This is a time when you gain by sharing. Don't hide feelings. By expressing yourself, you gain valuable allies. Act accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some who appear charming may have ulterior motives. Don't be fearful, but protect your own interests. You can climb to top. Refuse to be tripped by careless actions of another.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on journeys, added knowledge. Expand horizons. Break through emotional barriers. You can learn, experience and gain. Key is ability to have faith. Refuse to be discouraged.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Much that you deal with now may appear shrouded in mystery. Someone is not telling all. Realize this, maintain sense of balance. Member of opposite sex is involved.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have a way of making others feel secure. There is a sense of reliability which is your strongest characteristic. Even when you personally are in doubt, others feel you are strong. By October, you will be happier, able to be more flexible in thoughts, actions.

JV's Blank Wor. JC

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

Worcester-Workhorse Steve Merrill stymied Worcester Junior College on two hits here Tuesday afternoon as the UMass JV's triumphed 1-0 on the ace lefty's second shutout to run their season's mark to 4-5.

For Merrill 1-0 victories are starting to become a habit as he bested Amherst College by the same score earlier in the season. But Merrill greeted this damp, uncomfortable day in Worcester with his finest effort to date. Using a live fastball and an off-the-table curve, the southpaw registered 15 strikeouts and walked but one in a splended performance.

The sharp yearling was never headed as not once did a host reach third all afternoon. After Duffy laced a ground rule double to open the ninth, Merrill bore down to get a pair of hitters on strikes sandwiched around a routine fly to left. The win boosted Merrill's mark to 2-1 for the season.

The visitors backed their hurler with all the support he needed with the deciding run in the second frame. Rick Hansen powered a line shot up the alley in leftcenter for three bases. After Hansen's encour Winchester Wollard rifled a single to right to herd Hansen with the winner.

UMass mustered up only seven hits off starter and loser Glen Robert. Once again UMass was unable to come up with that clutch hit when needed. The visitors could have opened things up in the fifth when the Redmen left the sacs full.

A single by Steve Newell, a walk, and Ken Stuart's infield bleeder loaded the bases. But with two down, Robert got Mike Phillips on an infield roller to end the threat.

For the winners Rick Hansen and Winchester Wollard banged out two hits apiece. On the mound Merrill, with today's masterpiece, now has dominated the action with five starts in eight ballgames.

For Merrill and possibly Steve Newell, promotion looks awful promising. If the varsity makes it to the Division 1 playoffs, don't bet that coach Berquist wouldn't hestitate to recall the pair for added depth on an already potent as well as youthful nine.

The Little Redmen will try once again to climb atop the alluvive .500 plateau with a 3 p.m. encounter with Leicester Junior College at home behind Earl E. Lorden Field today.

Derby Winner A Gourmet

BALTIMORE (AP)-Canonero II, the Kentucky Derby winner, drinks only distilled water and he has been provided with a special bedding in his stall at Pimlico.

But the colt, the only one of this year's 3-year-old crop with a chance at winning the Triple Crown, is barred by his handlers from participating in the common equine parttime of eating grass.

When he was led onto a grassy area next to the stakes barn Wednesday at the request of photographers, Canonero II started nibbling a few grassy tidbits.

Juan Arias, trainer of the Kentucky-bred colt who had raced previously in Venezuela, can't speak English, but bystanders understood the string of "No's" he blurted out to the groom in Spanish.

Later, with Dr. Jose Almenar, the co-owner of the colt, serving as interpreter, Arias said Canonero II is not permitted to eat grass.

"He eats nothing but prepared food, like pellets," Arias said. "We don't even let him eat green grass at home."

The special bedding, which resembles wood chips, was provided when Canonero II arrived Tuesday to begin preparations for the $150,000-added Preakness on May 15.

The conditioning program began Wednesday when the Derby winner cantered around Pimlico's one-mile main track. He was ridden by Earl Whye, an exercise boy who handled Canonero II without stirrups, as requested by Arias.

"It is just what he prefers," Arias said of the Pimlico track. "I'll work him five or six furlongs Sunday or Monday. He doesn't need much work. The derby showed he is ready."

The size of the field for the 1 3-16 mile Preakness remained fluid Wednesday, with 22 names still on the probable list.

THE GALLOPING GOURMET—Kentucky Derby winner, Canonero II eats only prepared foods and keeps from particfpating in the common equine pastime of eating grass. The Kentucky-bred colt runs in the Preakness on May 15. (AP photo)

Glover Signs With Celtics

BOSTON (AP)—Top draft choice Clarence Glover signed with the Boston Celtics yesterday and immediately became the heir apparent to Tom Sanders as the National Basketball Association club's defensive specialist.

The 6-foot-8, 210 pound forward came into national prominence while helping his Western Kentucky team reach the NCAA semifinals this year. He was on hand for the signing ceremonies in the Celtics' office.

His lawyer, Norman Blass, told newsmen that Glover signed a multi-year contract, but neither he nor the Celtics would disclose any other details of the agreement.

Glover said the "Celtics' tradition" was one of many factors which eventually led him to sign with Boston rather than with the Carolina Cougars, who picked him in the American Basketball Association draft.

"I've liked the Celtics ever since I was a kid," the 23-year-old native of Horse Cave, Ky., said. "After following them so long and wanting to be a part of them, this is a great opportunity. I never dreamed I'd have a chance to play pro ball with the Celtics."

Blass said he and Glover preferred the NBA to the ABA "because it is a more established league, the contracts are sounder, and there are better fringe benefits."

He said they also were influenced by the Celtics' apparent intention to groom Glover to eventually replace the 32-year-old Sanders, who has been bothered by knee injuries the past two seasons.

"You can do for this club what Tom Sanders has done for 10 years-play the big defense and take the other team's tough guy," Blass quoted Boston Manager Red Auerbach as telling Glover.

Strong rebounding and tough defensive play were Glover's most notable assets in college, and he said he goes along with the Celtics' idea of concentrating in these areas.

"I'll specialize on defense and let the offense take care of itself," he said.

Garber Aims Stickers At Brown, May 12

By FRED ROSENTHAL

Lacrosse coach Dick Garber is not about to march for women's lib, but at yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon he introduced the first female managers on any athetic team at UMass.

Mary Beth O'Brien and Carol Christienson are this year's lacrosse team managers, and Coach Garber calls them "the best looking managers in the league." The successful head coach added that they are the most efficient managers he has ever had and recommended that other coaches in other sports follow suit.

Working with sports teams is nothing new for Miss Christienson who kept statistics for the track team at her high school, and speaking on why she took the job with the lacrosse team she remarked "I'm always pleased to work with men."

Coach Garber also related the details of a recent phone conversation he had with the chairman of the NCAA tourney board who said in so many words that UMass must beat Brown on May 12th to make the tourney. When Garber told him that his team still had to play Brown the chairman said, "It looks like that's it."

Garber stressed though that UMass can not afford to overlook any of the other teams on the schedule.

In the second part of the split luncheon Coach Berquist introduced one of his three seniors, second baseman Jack Conroy. Conroy commented on the season so far and called it a "huge success." He remarked that the credit for the successful season must go to coach Berquist, the freshmen on the team, and the pitching staff.

Conroy singled out freshman center fielder, Charlie Manley, as one of the big reasons for the team's remarkable record (15-4 and 12-1 up north). He pointed to a few of Manley's statistics; he has 26 hits, 21 runs, and 21 stolen bases in 22 attempts (Conroy is 14 for 14 himself in that dept.).

"He has helped me tremendously," said Conroy, "I bat second behind Charlie and he has the opposing pitcher in a dither." Batting behind Manley, Conroy has 22 walks in 19 games.

Coach Berquist also spoke and said that no matter how good the baseball team's record is it must still win the Yankee Conference to make the playoffs.

This weekend the Redmen play an important conference double header at New Hampshire. Scheduled to pitch for UMass are Tom White and Tom King.

Big Two Head Nelson Field

DALLAS (AP) — Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus are in a familiar struggle for the No. 1 money-winning spot going into today's first round of the $125,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

The two giants of the game, co-favorites for the $25,000 first prize in this 72-hole test that begins Thursday, have finished 1-2 in the annual money standings three times since Nicklaus turned pro in 1962.

And they're in that situation now, Nicklaus leading with $106,775 and Palmer second at $103,928. No other player has won more than $100,000 this season.

Neither has led the money standings, considered by many of the touring pros as the real determination of the top player of the year, since Nicklaus led and Palmer finished second in 1967.

Both are looking at it seriously this year, however.

"I haven't been the leading money-winner in a long time," Palmer said, almost wistfully.

"If looks like I've got a pretty good chance this year if things keep going well."

"Since there no longer is a chance for a slam, I'll be back playing the tour more than I'd originally planned," Nicklaus said. "And you like to be first in as many categories as possible."

Nicklaus, who beat Palmer in a sudden death playoff for this title a year ago, has been ninth or better in his last five starts.

He won the PGA and the Tournament of Champions two weeks ago, but saw his dreams of a professional grand slam of all the major championships destroyed when he finished second to Charles Coody in the Masters.

Palmer, playing a much busier schedule than he has in years, also has won twice, the Bob Hope Desert Classic and the Citrus Invitational.

They face an extremely strong field on 147 who begin play today on the 7,086-yard, par 70, Preston Trail Golf Club course.

Redmen Host Crusaders

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

If you happen to see a group of men hanging over the right field line fence or peering intensley from the stands this afternoon they'll most likely be the pro scouts who have followed every move this spring of Holy Cross' ace pitcher, Mike Pazik, who will be on the mound this afternoon when the Crusaders due battle with the UMass baseball team at 3:30 at Earl E. Lorden Field.

Pazik has had this large following since his high school days and is regarded as one of the best college pitchers in the country and right now is the only bright spot in a dismal Crusader season.

The Cross comes into this game with a 5-6 record and no heavy or consistant bats in the batting order to compliment the pitching of Pazik. It was only last week that Pazik struck out 22 batters against Hartford but still lost the decision, 2-0, in twelve innings.

Pazik is also the top hitter for the Crusaders with an average of around .375 and for this reason he has to be at his best, which is practically everytime out, to keep his team in the game. He has an earned run average 2.14 and a win-loss record of 1-3 which shows the extent of the support that he gets from his teammates.

For UMass, coach Dick Bergquist has named 6'9 Tom Austin as his starting pitcher this afternoon. The tall righthander has worked only one inning thus far tat Dartmouth) but his coach feels that he is ready to go. His one inning against Dartmouth was a sharp outing. He has a real good slider and live fastball and with his size can make it hard on any batter.

The remainder of the lineup will have Tom McDermott behind the plate, Dan Esposito, Jack Conroy, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau in the infield and Charlie Manley, Brian Martin and Mike Sawyer or Dan Kelly in the outfield.

The Redmen are riding a ten game win streak into this encounter. They have won 13 of their last 14 outtings and are on a collision course with UConn for the Yankee Conference title.

On Saturday they have a tough two game test with UNH at Durham and today's game should be a good opportunity to sharpen the bats up against one of the best hurlers in the nation.

DIAMOND DUST—Palau still leads the Redmen at the plate with a .411 average...Manley follows with .356 with Esposito third at .333 following his big Maine series...The team batting average has risen to .284 with six hitters over the .300 mark...The pitcher's e.r.a. has also risen to 1.19 with all seven Redman hurlers with e.r.a.'s of under two...In a big look to the future, Mike Flanagan, one of New England's outstanding pitchers from Manchester, N.H., has announced his intentions of attending UMass in September. He is a 6'1, 185-lb. left-handed pitcher-outfielder. He averaged 18 strikeouts per game in high school and Legion baseball last year while hurling the Sweeney Post to the New England Championship and a berth in the World Series at Klamath Falls, OOregon. He batted .375 at Manchester Memorial had a 17-2 record. The Legion team finished 35-7. He also averaged 22 points for Memorial which won the N.H. State basketball championship in the winter. He joins teammate Ron Beaurivage, another fine baseball prospect, in selecting UMass for next year. Coach Bergquist stated, "Flanagan and Beaurivage are the two best baseball prospects in New England. I'm delighted they have decided to enroll at UMass.

TWO FROSH—Tom Mc Dermott (left-No. 6) and Ed McMahon (right) are two of several freshmen who have helped this year's Redman baseball team to a record of 15-4. McDermott is the starting catcher and is hitting .318. McMahon has been starting at shortstop and is batting at a .328 clip with nine stolen bases in 12 attempts. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

Cards-Phillies

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Home runs by Lou Brock and Jose Cardenal keyed a four-run eighth inning rally that snapped a tie and carried the St. Louis Cardinals to a 5-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Wednesday night.

The Phillies had tied the score 1-1 in the bottom of the seventh off rookie right-hander Reggie Cleveland.

St. Louis took a 1-0 lead in the second on Torre's single, a double by Cardenal and Ted Sizemore's sacrifice fly.

Pirates-Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Juan Marichal tossed a three-hitter and Ken Henderson drove in both San Francisco runs with a single and an infield grounder Wednesday as the Giants edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-1.

San Francisco fell behind 1-0 in the second inning when Bob Robertson slammed his fifth home run of the season over the left field fence.

But the Giants knotted it in the fifth. Alan Gallagher opened the inning with a single and Marichal was safe when Richie Hebner threw late to second trying for the forceout. Then, with two outs, Henderson drilled a single to center to score Gallagher.

They took the lead in the seventh when Bobby Bonds hit a one-out double and moved to third on Chris Speier's single to short left. Henderson then grounded into a force play and Bonds came home with the deciding run.

By HOWIE BLOOM

For all those who didn't have the willpower to stay awake until the end of yesterday's lacrosse game against Amherst College, UMass won, 12-2. In a game chock full of inaction and unexciting plays, both teams somnambulated their way through 60 minutes of what looked to be, at some points during the contest, the eastern regional in a nationwide search to find a better cure for insomnia than Sominex.

The first period was all UMass as Garber's Gorillas held the ball for the opening four minutes of the stanza before Amherst got the ball into Redman territory for the first time. The lone score of the period came at 8:25 when John Gannon scooped up a loose ball right in front of the Lord Jeff goal and swept it up and in, unassisted.

Amherst scored its first goal of the game six minutes into the second period, Petrie Peters getting credit for the score. One minute later Paul Ritch scored his first of the game to start a streak of ten straight Gorilla goals.

With UMass playing a superb defensive game, Chuck Hardy and Dwight Bloomquist closed out the first half scoring, both garnering unassisted goals in the final five minutes of the frame. During one halftime break Amherst goalie Harpo Huskins was awarded a Purple Heart for standing in the way of 40 Gorilla shots in the first 30 minutes of the game.

The Redmen scored five more times in the third period, another humdinger. A power play goal by Phil Sheridan made it 6-1 at 3:23. A minute later it was 7-1 as Steve Hershcopf lulled the ball to Dwight Bloomquist standing to the left of the crease, who ho-hummed it past the Lord Jeff goalie.

Amherst didn't have a shot on Crawford until the ten minute mark of the period, and by then UMass had upped their lead to seven goals, as Louie Marinacci, with fire in his eyes, was just dying to drill one by the Amherst goalie. After faking left and right back and forth across the field for a good fifteen seconds, Marinacci's wish came true as the Amherst goalie never saw his cannon shot coming.

By the end of the period UMass led 9-1, and Amherst was getting very tired chasing the Redmen up and down their own end of the field.

Tom Brennan got credit for goal number nine with the assist being given to Hardy, who raised his record chasing assist total to 34.

Hardy made it 35 early in the final period as he worked his favorite play, moving the ball around in back of the Amherst net, faking back and forth, and finally passing the ball out front on the left side of the net to Rick Anderson. John Nagle got into the action at 4:49 when the ball accidentally landed in his stick at the same moment he decided to take a swipe at a Lord Jeff who was blocking him in front of the crease, and it was 11-1.

Amherst's stickmen became party poopers a little while later when they broke UMass' consecutive goal string on an unassisted goal by Schultzy Schmeerler. With one second to go in the game Bloomquist closed out the afternoon's scoring unassisted, and it was finally all over, 12-2.

LACROSSE LOWDOWN: All told, UMass had 79 shots on the Amherst net and after the game Coach Garber kidded, "With all those shots and only 12 scores, I think what we need are wider goals. The Amherst goalie did a superb job in blocking all those shots and he was pretty gutsy getting in front of a few of them."

Campus Gov't. Discussed

New Calendar May Be Used In 71-72

The adoption of the already approved 1972-73 calendar was an imminent possibility considered at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting.

Other matters under discussion were steps towards reconsideration of the proposal for campus governance, a proposal for additional students representation on the Athletic Council and a recommendation regarding nepotism in cases of hiring and tenure. Also considered was a proposal for the establishment of a department of Exercise Science in the School of Physical Education.

A motion, put forth by Paul Hollander of the Sociology Department made the recommendation that an inquiry be made into the possibility of instituting the new 1972-3 calendar this fall. This was greeted by a statement by David Booth of the Space and Calendar Committee that in response to anticipated sentiment and student pressure his committee had drawn up a calendar for this fall which implements the new changes. After some subsequent discussion the motion was postponed until next week's meeting so that faculty members might have the opportunity to see and consider the new calendar.

(In remarks made prior to the formal discussion of these matters Student Senate President Lee Sandwen asked that the Senate consider the adoption of the compromise calendar for the next academic year. He said that the Student Senate would like to begin discussing means towards closer ties between Faculty and Student Senates. He also mentioned the fact that there have been UMass students and Faculty involved in the demonstrations in Washington and that a Bail Fund has been set up to aid the one faculty member and students who are still being held.)

Under the motion approved yesterday a new committee will be formed with the responsibility of investigating and formulating a new proposal for campus governance. This proposal will serve as an alternative to the unicameral proposal which has been issued by the Special Commission on Campus Governance.

faculty, four students of which one is to be a graduate and three undergraduate and one to be an officer of the Faculty Senate. A further stipulation was made that a note be attached to both proposals saying that neither proposal was ever voted upon by either the Faculty, Student or Graduate Student Senates.

In connection with the Annual Report of the Athletic Council, Sandwen noted that a majority of the funds for the Council comes from the students through their Student Activity Fee. It was then proposed that a study be made of a proposal for additional student representation on the Council which would still be in accordance with rules set down by the NCAA. It was further recommended that the possibility be investigated of the representation of female students and faculty on the Council.

The recommendation regarding nepotism in hiring and tenure matters would have the Board of Trustees adopt a clear concise written policy that all candidates considered for appointment be appraised on their professional and academic qualifications only and that hiring and subsequent personnel actions (promotions, tenure merit increases, sabbaticals, etc.) not be prejudiced by familiar relationships. This was in response to growing concern over the fact that spouses of faculty members who are otherwise qualified are sometimes denied appointments or tenure because of the presence of their spouse or other family member on the faculty of the same department. It was viewed as the basis for a series of recommendations to the Board of Trustees concerning this very important matter.

The proposal for the establishment of a Department of Exercise Science comes in the wake of similar moves by schools across the country. The new department, if approved, would concentrate on existing courses relevant to exercise science. The motion was tabled until next week's meeting pending examination of the implications such a department would have on the administrative make up of the School of Physical Education and the composition of the faculty staff who would be involved in the department.

Bombers Hit Calif.

SAN JOSE, Calif (AP)—Bombers struck Thursday at a utility company substation and an oil refinery 450 miles apart in the latest of a long series of explosive attacks on big businesses in California.

The newest targets were a Pacific Gas & Electric Co. substation near this San Francisco Bay area city and a Standard Oil of California refinery in East Los Angeles.

A pipe-type bomb planted at an unmanned substation 10 miles west of San Jose knocked out a 60,000-volt regulator and temporarily stopped electric service to parts of nearby Los Gates, Los Altos, Big Basin and Davenport.

At the refinery 450 miles to the South, a bomb on an empty railroad tank car hurled debris from the car through the metal walls of a nearby warehouse and smashed 200 windows. Deputies said the bomb apparently was made of sticks of dynamite.

Late Wednesday night a fire bomb scorched the front of a bookstore in the town of Chico in the upper Sacramento Valley.

Summer Brownouts Feared

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Federal Power Commission reported Thursday that some parts of the country may have electric power shortages this summer and almost every region has potential problems.

While the FPC considers 20 per cent of expected peakload to be a necessary margin of safety in generating capacity, its report said the nation as a whole has reserves of only 15.3 per cent.

None of the six study regions has a 20 per cent reserve.

The lowest reserves, the FPC said, are in the Southeast with 12.4 per cent, a slight increase from its 11.8 per cent last summer, and the East Central region with 12.6 per cent, a decline from 16.7 per cent of last summer.

The West Central Region has risen from last year's 12.7 per cent to 14 per cent reserve capacity.

The South Central region stood at 15.1 per cent the commission said. With 10 out of 21 systems reporting reserves of less than 15 per cent.

The Northeast brought its generating reserves up from last year's 13.9 per cent to 8.3 per cent, with all three of its coordination areas reporting reserves higher than 15 per cent.

The highest reserve capacity was reported in the west with 18.8 per cent, but even that was a decline from last summer's 23.6 per cent. The FPC said the slippage was "due mainly to the shutdown of the 800 megawatt Hanford nuclear Plant."

The commission said that out of the 164 power systems which reported to it, 62 would have reserves of less than 15 per cent but 24 of those were small systems with loads of less than 500 megawatts.

The commission said "the most pronounced problems are those resulting from delays in placing new generating facilities in service on schedule and the continued growth of weather sensitive loads."

Despite the comparitively thin reserve capacity, the commission said the outlook this summer is better than the summer of 1970.

The commission warned, however, that reserve figures are only a partial measure of the system's ability to meet demand.

In some instances," it said, "systems that appear to have adequate reserves may experience difficulty if one or two large units become unavailable or if scheduled new units are delayed."

A Look At May-Day By The People Involved

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

It was obvious to the observant but uninvolved eye from the beginning that the Mayday activities scheduled for the third, fourth, and fifth of May would never really make it off the ground. A marked lack of organization, coupled with the MayDay tribe's unrealistic approach to planning the whole affair, condemned it before the seed had the chance to germinate.

Advertising weeks ahead of time, the organizers of MayDay proposed publically to shut down Washington by practicing mass civil disobedience - sitting in the streets, blocking traffic, and thus preventing federal employees from reaching their places of employment.

The lack of organization made the affair especially susceptible to police and federal troops, who were much more organized than were the protestors. The superior organization of law forces precluded the possibility of the MayDay people shutting Washington down, as had been originally planned.

The fact that the MayDay celebrations would probably curl up and die was also realized by observant, extremely involved eyes, belonging to many members of the YSA, SMC, and Women's Lib.

According to Tom Moriarty of the YSA, MayDay failed in its attempt to augment anti-war sentiment. "MayDay proved nothing. The only people who went were already devoted to stopping the war. They were also people who could afford to pay jail fines, who didn't have jobs that they had to look out for, who didn't have classes they had to attend, and who didn't mind getting their heads knocked together. The MayDay tribe in their organization of the activities, prevented a lot of interested people from coming to Washington. It was a counterpdoductive event."

Our main concern is in the complete and unconditional withdrawal of American troops from Viet Nam," Moriarty continued. "The best way to accomplish this is through a mass mobilization of people from all different levels of society - labor, women, Chicanos and Blacks, older people, the middle class. Through its lack of timing and organization, MayDay discouraged many people who might have become deeply involved in the anti-war movement. I hope this lack of planning will not have lasting repercussions, making it difficult for the anti-war movement to maintain a high level of activity."

When questioned about student participation in May 5th memorial activities, Moriarty expressed disappointment.

Claire Moriarty, Co-chairwoman of the Mobe and a member of Women's Liberation, had similar opinions on the efficacy of MayDay.

"Through the planning of the activities, it was as if the MayDay tribe said to the nation, 'This is our demonstration, you can't be in our anti-war movement.' It was an old-style liberal, masochistic, ineffective thing. The organizers didn't seem to be aware that there is nothing more radical than realizing that the war is wrong and proceeding to work against it."

Miss Moriarty also asserted that the demonstration was geared to the wrong type of people, missing the point of the anti-war movement, which is to involve people in reaction against the war.

She expressed different opinions concerning the May 5th 'strike' which was planned for this University.

"Wednesday's strike was never intended to be on the order of last year's," she said. "It was not important how many people cut classes for one day - that was not the point. What was important was that, sometime in the day, students would make some kind of gesture in memory of the students killed at Kent State and Jackson State last year. We hoped that a diverse group of people would remember the killings, but not in a narrow religious perspective.

Tom Bias of the YSA also voiced opinions concerning the MayDay activities.

"The primary objective of any anti-war tactic should be orgainization, which MayDay lacked. A most important facet of the anti-war movement is the inclusion of coalitions from different strata of society, especially off-campus contingents. The May activities were not geared to building increased opposition to the war and were not designed to reach an off-campus audience."

Bias was of the opinion that MayDay would discredit the anti-war movement, but expressed hope that the damage done would not be far-reaching or permanent.

Most of the people consulted were of the opinion that MayDay was not productive in terms of building opposition to the war. All were of the opinion that work of that sort could only be accomplished through a day-to-day grind. But they were optimistic about garnering support.

As Claire Moriarty said, "Support of this campus is growing, just as it is growing throughout the state and the nation. Tactics, not basic opposition, has become the question. There has been significant change - people against the war are no longer in the minority, and the inefficacy of events like MayDay will not be ultimately detrimental to the movement."

Eqypt Moves Toward Peace But Refuses To Concede

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—An Egyptian spokesman appraised talks between Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Cairo leaders Wednesday as "definitely toward peace" but said "we shall not make concessions."

Rogers spent more than six hours in private sessions with Prime Minister Mahmoud Riad and others.

He sees President Anwar Sadat on Thursday, then flies to Israel to complete his Mideast journey aimed at promoting a peace settlement.

Rogers' top priority topic was a method whereby Egypt and Israel could agree to reopen the Suez Canal.

U.S. sources said the session had gone rather well, but they declined to give specifics.

The spokesman for the Cairo government told newsmen:

—Fawzi and Riad made Egypt's position on all aspects of the Mideast issue "as clear as could be" and Rogers responded with clarifications of U.S. views.

"This in itself is progress," the spokesman said, in explaining how he thought the talks were contributing toward peace.

As for Egypt's position, "We shall not make concessions-I think that is quite clear."

Rogers put forward ideas about a possible Egyptian-Israeli agreement on reopening the Suez Canal, but made plain that "he was not speaking in behalf of the Israeli government."

Cairo's terms for a Suez reopening continue to include "a complete commitment by the Israeli side to withdraw to the international frontier," the border before the 1967 war.

Rogers did not hand the Egyptian leaders a written proposal, either one in behalf of Israel or of Washington. "It would have been more preferable" to have something specific in writing.

Nor did Rogers submit what could be called a concrete proposal for a canal-reopening accord.

S.U. Fee Upped To $60 Next Year

By EMORY ROUNDS
MDC Staff

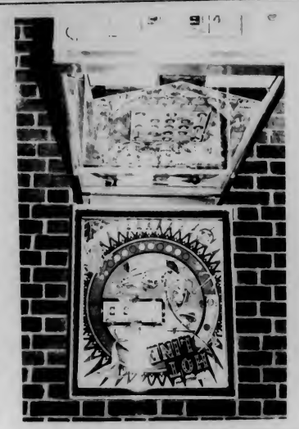
The Campus Center-Student Union Governing Board voted last night to increase the Student Union fee from its present rate of $45 dollars to $60 for next year.

Debate centered on the Capital Expenses portion of the total operating budget, and in particular a crafts center proposal.

The center proposal was accepted, it was decided that the division of the Capital Expenses between the various building departments would be decided at a later date.

The Crafts Area will be open to the student population to use for such activities as leather working, metal smithing, photography, wood working, sculpting, automotive, and candle making. A full-time supervisor will manage the crafts area, and will be responsible for maintaining security and enforcing safety regulations within the center. He will also serve as an instructor, and will coordinate the activities in the area.

The supervisor will be assisted by part-time instructor-helpers, who will be students or persons who live in the local area who have some expertise in one or more of the crafts being offered. There will be five instructor-helpers to help supervise the crafts center, and to give informal instruction in the crafts area he specializes in.



The Crafts Area will be governed by the Crafts Area Council, who with SUG Board approval, will set policy within the Crafts Area, and will be responsible for directing activities within the area. The Council will consist of three members (one from the SUG Board, one from Program Council, and one from the Craftsman's Guild) who will be responsible to the SUG Board.

Several crafts center proposals had been offered, but for the sake of keeping the fee as low as possible, many amendments dealing with cutting various portions were debated.

The Capital Expenses portion of the total budget for next year concerns the building departments in the areas of Food Services, Building Maintenance, the University Store, the Print Shop, the Audio Visual Aid services, the games area, RSO, the building administration and business offices, and the games area. Problems occured when the Board attempted a list of priorities with the different building areas, and for the sake of time (the budget will be presented to the Board of Trustees next week), the Board decided to table making a list of these priorities to a future time.

Some of the ideas to be debated in the quest for priority will be a rathskellar in the Campus Center Cafeteria, an expanded games area, expansion of the Coffee Shop into the adjoining patio, enlargening the Top of the Campus a Grocery?Deli take-out service in the Hatch, and the refurbishing and refurnishing of some of the rooms in the Student Union Building.

A committee will be appointed by Robert Nims, SUG Board President, to work with the building management to decide the allocation of the $60,000 in Capital Expenses.

Sandwin Looks Back On Fast: Not Pleased

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

Looking back on his 5 day fast, Senate President Lee Sandwen wasn't particularly pleased. It's primary purpose, according to Sandwen, was "to bring attention to the Mayday demonstrations in Washington. It wasn't successful because the majority didn't take part."

"I didn't think there was too much significance in doing it. It's not a good way of getting attention. It is, however, a good way of showing support."

"We wanted to show people that we were concerned. Demonstrators were dragged away and arrested to show this."

"I do think that fasting is a great way to lose weight. I lost ten pounds."

John Hogan, the Internal Vice-President, kept the fast for two days, but was forced to quit for personal reasons. He, among others, felt that the fast wasn't for getting attention as much as it was for personal or spiritual reasons. "Anti-war rallies and speeches are losing their effectiveness and stopping traffic or more violent forms of demonstrations isn't where the answer lies."

Danny Sterns, a Senator from Brett House, feels that if a large number of citizens refused to pay their taxes then more would be accomplished. "We fasted to show that we can pay more than lip-service to a cause. It is not successful except in numbers, however. There is a great deal of personal satisfaction involved."

Larry Ladd, the External Vice-President of the Senate, was disappointed that the other officers weren't able to sustain their fast. He agrees that there was a lot of personal satisfaction involved.

"Fasting is still considered an unusual mode of protest. It is not frequently used. It is significant when leadership is involved. It would have been nice if thousands of demonstrators did participate in the fast but I'm not disappointed. It is an individual act."

"I think that any individual who decides to protest the War in any means he sees fit is right. I would support, but not participate in any violent means. Stopping traffic is as effective as any other means."

"Resistance is the best form of protest, whether it be with taxes, the draft, or boycotting. These are all non-violent. They would choke off all the supplies needed. It threatens the system at it's foundation — the economics."

Reps On Campus Meet With Students

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

Legislators of the Joint Education Committee of the Massachusetts General Court were on campus yesterday as the University and State Communications Council sponsored legislators day.

The legislators talked with students, ate in a dining commons and took part in seminars at the School of Education. The following account is a report of the discussion this reporter participated in.

The individual's role curriculum structure was discussed by the Futuristics Group and Representatives Alan Sisitsky from Springfield, Henry O'Donnell from Salem, and Nicholas Briglione from Methuen. The topic of this seminar was given as: "Educational Futures: Alternatives and Options."

Alan Davis, of Futuristics, commented that: "The University experiments with everything but its own structures," citing resident colleges, work-study off campus, interdisiplinary institutions, and research as "alternatives".

Davis suggested that, in order to "solve the problems of school and environment, the University create more options for independent studies, creating options for faculty and students."

He also recommended that the University: "help people become more flexible, take up new skills. People learn in different ways," he commented. "Let the individuals decide how to pursue their own education."

Representative Sisitsky spoke of "democratizing of the educational process," while one student defended his "freedom to make mistakes."

Representative O'Donnell cited "racial imbalance" as a value to be challenged, and suggested "Springfield as a laboratory."

The methods and functions of education were also discussed, with one student defining his own concept as: "Having an experience and then trying to make some sense out of it."

Other guest legislators included: Representative Michael Daly, House Chairman of the Committee, Boston; Senator James DeNormandie from Lincoln; Representatives Dave Vigneault from Springfield, Edward McCiligan from Northampton, Ann Gannett from Wayland, William Arvanitis from Lawrence, George Young from Scituate, and Peter McCarthy from Peabody.

Their seminars were entitled "Schools Without Walls", "Music and Social Studies" and "The City as Curriculum".

Anti-War Forces Gather

Senate Opens Debate On Draft Extention

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate opened debate on extension of the draft Thursday as antiwar forces mapped plans for a major drive to force total U.S. withdrawal from Indochina by the end of 1971.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, warned that "failing to renew this induction authority, whether by vote or by inaction caused by extended debate, would be calamitous."

Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said, however, he thinks the draft measure is a proper vehicle for the McGovern-Hatfield amendment to bar funds for U.S. forces in Southeast Asia after Dec. 31. Mansfield also said he might renew his proposal for a sharp reduction in U.S. troops in Europe.

Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and a leader of the antiwar forces, called a meeting for Friday afternoon to consider alternative courses.

He told reporters he favored bringing up the McGovern-Hatfield amendment on the draft bill "if it has a good chance of success."

He declined to say if he thought there were enough votes in his committee to approve the amendment. He said any decision would likely be deferred until hearings end May 27 on various proposals dealing with Vietnam.

Mansfield, meanwhile, called again in a Senate speech for a terminal date on U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia, saying it could lead to the release of U.S. prisoners held by North Vietnam.

"If a termination date is not set," he said, "then we are confronted with the paradoxical situation which results in more and more American casualties, perhaps more and more POWs and more and more of a determination on the part of North Vietnam to hang on to the POWs."

Sen. George D. Aiken of Vermont, senior Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, expressed hope President Nixon's next troop withdrawal announcement Oct. 15 "is the latest we would be able to announce a definite date for the withdrawal of our forces from Indochina."

If the McGovern-Hatfield amendment is brought up on the draft bill, it probably would come after the Senate has considered a series of riders dealing with the draft itself.

First, the Senate will vote on a proposal by Sens. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., and Harold E. Hughes, D-Iowa, to limit the draft extension to one year, an effort rejected by only two votes to the House and believed to have a good chance to success in the Senate.

Schweiker, a longtime advocate of an all-volunteer force, has said that limitation of the draft extension to one year now would pave the way for its elimination in the 1972 election year.

Besides extending the draft for two years, the bill before the Senate would authorize President Nixon to end deferments for college undergraduates, set limits on draftees and overall military troop strength, and raise military pay by the approximately one billion dollars the administration asked.

Fighting Breaks Out, Ends Lull In War

SAIGON (AP)-Heavy, ground fighting broke out Thursday in eastern Cambodia, ending a lull in the Indochina war.

Tank-led South Vietnamese troops, under a cover of air and artillery strikes, clashed in a daytime engagement with about 400 North Vietnamese near the town of Snuel, a few miles inside Cambodia.

Saigon headquarters claimed 72 North Vietnamese were killed and it announced that South Vietnamese losses were one dead and six wounded.

The new Cambodian fighting followed by a day of heavy strikes by the South Vietnamese air force against North Vietnamese troop concentration 15 miles from the Cambodian border town of Kandol Chrum, 100 miles northwest of Saigon.

A South Vietnamese military spokesman, Lt. Col. Do Viet, said Vietnamese F5 Freedom Fighter jets attacked the North Vietnamese for four hours Wednesday afternoon and that air spotters afterwards counted 50 dead.

In another action Wednesday, U.S. helicopter gunships killed five enemy soldiers in an area 52 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital, the U.S. Command said.

U.S. helicopters are lending heavy support to the 22,000 South Vietnamese troops still deployed in Cambodia, flying more than 300 support missions on Wednesday alone.

Some 300 miles to the north, U.S. B52 bombers returned in force to the A Shau Valley sector.

Twenty of the eight-engine bombers hammered suspected North Vietnamese troop concentrations and bunkers inside the jungle covered valley and six miles north of it.

Another three-plane formation of B52s struck in the much-battered northwest corner of South Vietnam.

As they have daily since April 21, the bombers hit again at one of Hanoi's major infiltration corridors that crosses into South Vietnam just below the demilitarized zone.

As the war pace quickened somewhat, President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam announced a 24-hour cease-fire to mark Buddha's birthday anniversary on Sunday.

South Vietnamese forces will hold their fire from noon Saturday until noon Sunday Saigon time and will be joined in the cease-fire by United States and other foreign troops on the allied side.

A few hours later, the Viet Cong declared a 48-hour cease-fire for the Buddha birthday. A Viet Cong broadcast said its cease-fire would run from 6 a.m. Saturday to 6 a.m. Monday.

In the past, all of the temporary truces called by each side have been marked by numerous violations.

The anniversary of Buddha's birth is the most important religious holiday of the year in this nation of more than 17 million people. About 80 per cent of the people are at least nominal Buddhists.

John Toto reaches over to feed two Canada Geese. He's been taking care of lately. The geese built a nest and laid eggs that got in the way of a construction project at Roosevelt Field. Toto was ordered to move dirt over the area where the eggs were. He refused, knowing if the eggs were touched or moved the geese wouldn't hatch. Now construction has been halted until the eggs hatch around May 12.

U.S. Insists N. Viets Withdraw Forces

PARIS (AP)-The United States has told Hanoi there can be no negotiations on a total American withdrawal from Vietnam without a corresponding agreement for withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces.

U.S. negotiator David K. E. Bruce challenged North Vietnam's Xuan Thuy at the 112th weekly session of the Vietnam peace talks Thursday to clarify a hint he dropped last week that Hanoi might envisage a tacit understanding on mutual withdrawal of its own as well as American forces.

In reply, Thuy reverted to the long-standing Hanoi position rejecting any mutual withdrawal, tacit or otherwise.

President Nixon's "Absurd demand for a 'mutual withdrawal' places the American aggressor on the same footing as the Vietnamese people fighting against aggression," Thuy said.

The meeting in effect snuffed out the faint hopes raised last week of a possible dialogue between the two sides.

Bruce expressed interest in a remark made by Thuy at the 111th session that a negotiated settlement-including the total withdrawal of American forces-would permit "all military men to return to their homes."

"If this means that you are now prepared to withdraw North Vietnamese forces from South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, then I believe we can make serious progress here toward an honorable and lasting negotiated settlement," Bruce said.

400 Feds, Police, Start Gambling Crack Down

WASHINGTON (AP)-More than 400 FBI agents and local police began today a Michigan roundup of 151 persons, including a Detroit police inspector and 15 other officers, on federal gambling charges returned by two federal grand juries.

Fifteen indictments, returned by grand juries sitting in Detroit and Grand Rapids, were announced by Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell in Washington.

Mitchell said federal authorities coordinating the arrest raids in 37 Michigan cities described the operation as "one of the largest in United States history in terms of the number of arrests."

Major cities in which authorities either made arrests or executed search warrants this morning were Detroit, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Flint, Saginaw, Battle Creek and Kalamazoo, the Justice Department said.

The police officers were charged in the indictments with obstructing law enforcement antigambling activity and conspiracy to violate federal gambling laws.

The indictments said the gambling operations outside of metropolitan Detroit consisted mainly of betting on numbers.

One indictment said there is a link between a gambling group in Detroit and similar groups or persons in Las Vegas, Chicago and Miami. The Justice Department said four of the indicted persons were being sought in those cities.

Nixon Asks Loan To Save Lockheed

WASHINGTON (AP)—Against expected heavy opposition in Congress, President Nixon proposed Thursday to put the government's backing behind a $250 million loan for Lockheed Aircraft Corp. and its troubled TriStar jumbo jet project.

Lockheed desperately needs the money "to keep it from going broke," Treasury Secretary John B. Connally told newsmen. And he said the economy needs a healthy Lockheed and the investment in money and jobs in the TriStar program.

Although the loan guarantee is expected to encounter trouble in Congress, Conally said he rates its chances for passage as "quite good."

The administration said Lockheed needs the loan to finish production of the TriStar L1011 airbus, which fell into jeopardy when the manufacturer of the TriStar engine, Rolls-Royce Ltd., went into receivership in Great Britain.

Connally said the British government will put up $288 million in additional funds to help produce the engine.

He said $1.4 billion already is tied up in development of the TriStar, which he called "a very excellent airplane...probably the most advanced today."

"The impact on the economy by the bankruptcy of Lockheed would be enormous in my judgment," Conally said.

Not only would thousands lose their jobs, he said, but the Treasury would lose revenue and industries directly related to the nation's biggest defense contractor would be harmed.

Connally denied that the loan gauarantee proposal would set a precedent. "The government has done it before. The government is doing it almost everyday," he said, through export-import loans and defense loans.

"I am assured that this amount is sufficient to carry Lockheed through the period of financial stress during the production of the TriStar," Connally said. "We do not anticipate any cost to the taxpayer from this loan guarantee."

Connally said banks have already put up $450 million in loans for Lockheed. In addition, he said, Lockheed suppliers have invested $350 million and airlines have advanced $240 million in progress payments in anticipation that the airbus will be built.

Daniel J. Haughton, Lockheed's chairman of the board, said although the TriStar program was adequately financed when launched, "the cash drain from about $500 million in losses on four defense programs and the delay resulting from the Rolls-Royce receivership have created the need for additional funds."

The proposal is thought to be in trouble because of Lockheed's past difficulties with cost overruns on the C5A transport plane and other military projects.

Gov. Reagan Claims He Paid Tax

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—Gov. Ronald Reagan announced Thursday he paid more than $90,000 in state personal income taxes since becoming governor in 1967 and accused a Democratic senator of tipping newsmen that he hadn't paid anything on this year's return.

The senator, George Moscone of San Francisco, said, "I absolutely did not." What's more, said Moscone, Reagan has "earned every dime he's ever made. I don't blame the governor. He took advantage of the system."

Reagan, a Republican, was asked at his Tuesday news conference if he had paid a state income tax for 1970, due in April. He said he couldn't remember. His office later issued a statement saying he had not paid a tax because business losses offset his taxable income.

The next day he accused newsmen of an invasion of privacy in asking such a question and said whoever gave them the information broke the law.

Asked if he paid any federal income tax this past year, he snapped at reporters Wednesday "Aren't you guys ashamed enough?" He said it was none of their business and added: "Frankly, I think the Capitol press corps yesterday demeaned itself a little bit by engaging in an invasion of privacy. They asked a question they already had the answer to."

At a news conference Thursday, Reagan said he had paid federal income taxes, and departed from a prepared statement to name Moscone. Reporters were not allowed questions.

Reagan, a reported millionaire who earned $44,100 during 1970 as governor, said that last year "investment losses in relation to earnings were such that while I still owed and paid a federal income tax I did not have a state tax liability." His salary now is $49,100.

Auto Industry Must Reduce Emission Pollutants By 1975

WASHINGTON (AP)—William D. Ruckelshaus, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, warned the auto industry Thursday it must exhaust every effort to reduce significantly the emission of air pollutants by 1975.

A Ford Motor Co. official said the deadline may be impossible to meet.

"We do not at this time know whether we will be successful in meeting 1975 emission requirements," said H. L. Misch, a Ford vice president in charge of engineering.

Misch's statement came at the opening of a two-day hearing into the auto industry's ability to comply with the 1970 clear air act. It requires auto makers to achieve by 1975 a 90 per cent reduction in the emission of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides.

"We cannot and will not accept anything less than a wide open research and development effort to meet the act's requirements," Ruckelehaus said.

The law permits EPA to extend the deadline for one year if the industry can not meet the standards.

Ruckelshaus said "if any member of the industry could meet the act's deadline for compliance, all applications for a suspension will be denied."

Both Misch and Herbert Heitland, a director of Volkswagen, said they were making every effort to devise the technology to reduce the level of air pollutants.

Misch dismissed the possibilities of alternative power sources such as steam or electric engines. He said the time necessary to mass produce an engine means that research efforts must be directed to the internal combustion engine because it will be the only one that could be manufactured in sufficient quantity.

Misch said the 1975 goal will require lead free gasoline, and he called on EPA to issue regulations to insure general availability of lead free fuel nationwide for 1975 models.

Poisons Abound

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States may be poisoning itself with "a myriad of potentially toxic substances," the President's Council on Environmental Quality warned Thursday.

It urged passage of legislation proposed last February to fight "this growing national problem," in a report on the increasing use and disposal of substances that may be and in many cases are already known to be harmful to human health or the environment.

Board Suspends Officer In Race-Related Incident

BRISTOL, Conn. (AP) — The Bristol Police Board voted unanimously Thursday to suspend a patrolman who shot and killed a 23-year-old black man in a shoplifting investigation earlier in the week.

When it was announced late Thursday afternoon that Patrolman Thur Hewitt had been suspended indefinitely, some 50 demonstrators demanded the action broke up their protest march outside City Hall.

Hewitt, a veteran patrolman, was suspended without pay pending an investigation into the shooting by the state's attorney's office. The six-member, all-white police board took the action at an emergency meeting.

A board spokesman said Hewitt was suspended for violating departmental regulations regarding the use of firearms by police officers.

On Wednesday night, following a demonstration outside City Hall by 150 persons, Mayor J. Harwood Norton declined to suspend Hewitt but ordered him taken off his beat and assigned to police headquarters.

Authorities say Hewitt stopped a car Monday afternoon carrying James McMillan, 23, of Hartford and three other persons. Hewitt was investigating a complaint of shoplifting from a Bristol store.

Authorities said McMillan broke away from the car and ran. Hewitt fired one warning shot in the air, then a shot which struck the fleeing McMillan in the back and went through his heart, police said. McMillan, who was unarmed, was dead on arrival at Bristol Hospital.

Police said they found about $50 worth of stolen goods in the car, and the other three occupants were arrested.

Police department regulations stipulated that officers may use firearms only to protect their own lives or the life of another person or in the apprehension of a felony. The shooting incident is under study by the state's attorney's office and the police department's detective division.

Some 50 persons assembled Thursday afternoon at the point where McMillan was shot and marched two blocks to City Hall, singing "We Shall Overcome."

Late Thursday afternoon, the mayor notified a spokesman for the domonstrators about the police board action, and the demonstrators dispersed.

Rogers Appeals To Israel

JERUSALEM (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers, arriving in this Holy City on the last stop of his Mideast tour, appealed to Israel Thursday "to meet the challenge and, indeed, the agony of peace."

That there was no peace was dramatically underscored shortly before his arrival from Cairo by a land-mine incident in the northern Sinai that wounded eight Israeli soldiers.

Rogers went promptly into a conference with Premier Golda Meir and other Israeli leaders. State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey said there was "a good and animated exchange of views throughout the two hours and 20 minutes" of the meeting.

He added that Rogers summarized for the Israeli policymakers the impressions he had received from his journey to four Arab countries, but he brought no specific proposals for a broad settlement or a deal to reopen the Suez Canal.

Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban said there was "an exchange of views. We haven't gotten yet to discuss the real problems."

During his two-day stop in Israel, Rogers is scheduled to visit some of the hot points of Arab-Israeli disputes. His schedule Friday includes an aerial inspection tour aboard his presidential jet; a visit to Sharm el Sheikh, the strategic waterway point captured by Israeli forces in the 1967 war, and a tour of Old Jerusalem.

McCloskey said Rogers' sightseeing visit to Old Jerusalem did not imply U.S. endorsement of Israel's annexation of the sector. Washington favors internationalization of the Holy City in accordance with U.N. rulings.

The secretary of state, on his arrival here at the end of a two-week Mideast peace mission, spoke of U.S.-Israel friendship and "the constancy of American support for the well-being and security of Israel."

Neither here nor in Cairo, where Rogers conferred with President Anwar Sadat Thursday morning, has there been outward evidence of any policy change by the Mideast rivals as a result of Rogers's visit.

As Rogers was motoring from Tel Aviv Airport to Jerusalem, a Cairo spokesman reported "a disagreement of views" with the United States over ways of bringing about a peace settlement in the Middle East.

"Having fruitful talks is one thing, but gettting satisfactory results is another," said Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammed Riad.

"There has been a clear disagreement of views between the two wides," he added. Nonetheless, U.S. officials said Rogers left Egypt after two days of candid talks with some slight encouragement over peace possibilities.

Before leaving Cairo, Rogers said he would meet with President Nixon Monday after returning from his tour.

Gay Lib Festival

Come Out, Come Out

"Out of the closets" is the theme of the Gay Liberation Festival being sponsored this weekend by GLF Amherst. Gay people from all over New England and New York State have been invited to participate.

The festival will get started Friday night with a Gay dance at Hampshire College. This event is being hosted by the newly formed Hampshire College Gay Liberation.

Saturday at 1:30 P.M. Peter Wilson will speak on Gay Liberation in the S.U. Commonwealth Room. Mr. Wilson is a gay news commentator on WBAI, radio station in N.Y.C.

Workshops on such subjects as Sex Roles and Sex Stereotyping in our Society and Political Action to end Gay Oppression will be conducted by area GLF members. They will take place from three to five p.m. on the 8th floor of the Campus Center.

Gay people will picnic at 5:00 p.m. by the Campus Pond. The theme "out of the closets" will be physically represented at 7:00 p.m. when the closet that has been sitting in the S.U. Lobby is carried to the Pond for a gigantic "coming out". The closet symbolizes the homosexual life of hidden identity.

Everyone is invited to a Liberation Dance in the New Hatch Saturday starting at 9:00 p.m. GLF is inviting the campus community to liberate themselves and dance to the music of Steel. There will be no admission charge, courtesy of Gay Liberation.

The festival will climax with a "Gay In" by the Campus Pond Saturday afternoon. This event will coincide with the Folk Concert provided by the University.

This festival is a celebration by Gay people of their refusal to accept society's definition of their nature. Gay people are coming out on Campus to enjoy themselves despite our uptight straight society. Gay is Good; Gay is Proud. Celebrate!

Abbie Released

NEW YORK (AP)-Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman was released in $20,000 bail Thursday on a charge of interstate travel to incite to riot during antiwar demonstrations in Washington this week.

Hoffman, arrested Wednesday night in the lobby of his East Village apartment house by FBI agents, also was accused of assaulting a Washington policeman last Monday.

U.S. Commissioner Earle N. Bishopp set May 17 for a hearing on whether Hoffman should be removed to Washington.

An FBI agent, in an affidavit, said that on April 29, Hoffman encouraged students at the University of Oklahoma to join the demonstrations that began in Washington last Saturday.

The agent said an informer in Norman, Okla., reported that Hoffman told the students the activities in Washington "will make Chicago in 1968 look like a YAF meeting."

DVP Elects Officers

Members of the Distinguished Visitors Program elected new officers for the 1971-72 academic year this week. They are: Ed Larkin--Chairman; Jacki Berryman--Vice-Chairman; Bob Pierce--Program Chairman; Tim Brown--Treasurer; and Colleen Roche--Public Relations Chairman.

Each year, the entire committee brings to campus lecturers with a diversity of backgrounds and life styles to present topics of contemporary interest in the sciences, humanities, arts, and internal and domestic affairs, which stimulate critical thought and debate within the University community. Thus, students are sensitized to the larger part of the world in which we exist" said a spokesman. Some lecturers sponsored by DVP in the recent past are: Muhammed Ali, Dick Gregory, Bernadette Devlin, Senator Bob Packwood, Ralph Abernathy, Bill Russell, Hubert Humphrey, and Ralph Nader.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is now in the process of planning for next year, and welcomes any suggestions for guest lecturers.

Young People's Socialist League Schedule Conference Tomorrow

The editor of the Socialist Party Newspaper and a Czech immigrant professor at Boston University have been added to the list of speakers at tomorrows conference on "Labor and Students: The Possibilities of Coalition".

Paul Feldman is the author and Exarim Kohak is the Professor of philosophy at BU. Co-sponsors for the conference are the Western Massachusetts A. Philip Randolph Institute and the Young People's Socialist League.

In the morning panel, Feldman will give a short presentation explaining the need for an alliance not just between students and workers, but a coalition broad enough to embrace all progressive forces in American society. He is an experienced socialist activist and theoritician, also a close associate of Michael Harrington, and his successor as editor of New America, the party paper. Along with Harrington, Tom Kahn and Bayard Rustin, Feldman has been a leading spokesman for a massive coalition of liberals, radicals, workers, the racial minorities and the poor, an alliance that can be overwhelmingly mobilized through electoral action to make the basic changes necessary to humanize and democratize American life.

Kohak will conclude the conference with a 3:30 address on "Toward A Democratic Foreign Policy" in the S. U. Council Chambers. He was an active member of the Czech Socialist Party until that organization was disbanded by the Communists.

After the disbanding of all social democratic political organizations, Kohak participated in illegal and clandestine socialist organizations attempting to resist totalitarian Communist rule. For Kohak and his socialist comrades, this was the second experience in resisting totalitarianism; they had all been active in the Resistance to Nazi rule.

With the harassment and legal sanctions imposed against social democrats, Kohak was eventually forced to flee his homeland, according to a YPSL spokesman. Since settling here he has become a frequent contributor to socialist periodicals such as Dissent, and has become known for his advanced theories on the nature of post industrial society.

Despite his unpleasant experiences under Communist rule, Kohak has been a strong defender of West German Chancellor Willy Brandt's attempts to rapprochment with the East. Kohak's lecture will center on the problem of constructing a foreign policy that is strongly anti-Communist, while at the same time avoiding militarization and support of reactionary regimes.

The conference, which starts with the morning panel at 10 a.m. in the SU Council Chambers will include a general perspective on building a student worker coalition in the morning panel, workshops on specific aspects and problems of building and holding the coalition together and a perspective on foreign policy.

Schedule For YPSL and Randolph Institute Conference

Zero Population Growth

No Real Food Abundance Exists

The following article is the next in a series published on the problems of overpopulation. It deals with present and future food productivity and documents forecasts of imminent worldwide famine because of population growth.

"MIRACLE SEEDS"

After the disastrous droughts suffered by India in the mid-1960's, many experts predicted early famine for mankind. Dr. R. Ewell was quoted to have said in the following congressional testimony: "The world is on the threshold of the biggest famine in history. If present trends continue, it seems likely that famine will reach serious proportions in India, Pakistan, and China in the early 1970's..Such famine will be of massive proportions affecting hundreds of millions."

Also during the 1960's, new "miracle seeds" of high yield food grains, principally wheat and rice, were developed. The development of these and the subsequent boosts in food production have been referred to as the "Green Revolution". In South Asia, from 1965 to 1970, the number of acres planted increased from 20 to more than 40 million. According to P.J. Lewis, it appears that food production has increased in India and some other Asian countries during the past three or four years. He predicted that, with appropriate policies, further increases would be sustained for some years. Accordingly, India and other nations have pinned their hopes on the new high yield foods to avoid famine during the 70's and possibly beyond.

There are several important points to consider in regard to the green revolution. First and most important, it cannot eliminate hunger if population growth remains unchecked. (If indeed, it will ever provide sufficient food for a population of the present size). Its success also depends on other conditions, which seem unlikely to be met.

In regard to the first point, Dr. Borlaug, who received the Nobel Prize for his work in initiating the green revolution, recently stated that "we have only delayed the world food crisis for another thirty years. If the world population continues to increase at the same rate, we will destroy the species." Lester Brown, a leading expert in agricultural development gave us even less time, when he said: "the new seeds buy some time, perhaps an additional 10-15 years in which to stabilize population growth. If within 15 years we are not well on our way to stabilizing world population growth, Dr. Borlaug's monumental contribution will have been in vain." Some sources, such as our local Daily Hampshire Gazette, even question the logic of awarding the Nobel Prize to Dr. Borlaug. It stated that the results of that work tend to worsen a global problem which, if not resolved may in the end make a shambles of the world and a mockery of peace.

There are other prerequisites for the success of the green revolution. While not as critical as population control, these factors could cripple an effective food production scheme.

Lord Boyd-Orr, an expert on food production, recently wrote a particularly optimistic article suggesting that we can produce "food enough for everyone". He stated that if advances in agricultural science "were applied to the full in countries with surplusses, the surplusses would be doubled. If applied to food-deficit undeveloped countries the output would be doubled and redoubled". He concluded that sufficient food could be produced to support three or four times the present world population.

Justin Blackwelder subsequently took issue with Boyd-Orr's argument as follows:

"To quadruple the yield per acre anywhere in the world costs a great deal of money. Whose? Certainly, it will not be the money of the starving two-thirds of the world. They don't have it...The extent to which these miracles may be performed is largely dependent upon just how much the Western World, and particularly the U.S., is willing to do it...what matters is only what American tax payers are willing to pay for...and if we were to multiply our international generosity a hundredfold, it wouldn't be enough. Even if it were, we would not be buying a solution to the problem; we would be buying only a little more time--time to bring the population growth rate down to zero..."

The U.S. has barely enough money to finance domestic programs, let alone new and grandiose schemes for foreign aid. Mayor Lindsay of New York City stated that "the city...is no longer financially able to meet the rising costs of public assistance and increased Medicaid fees, both of which are mandated by the state and Federal Governments."

As the population grows it becomes necessary to cultivate increasing amounts of land in order to avoid famine.At present almost a third of the earth's land area is already tilled or in pasture. One fifth of the remaining land lies under ice and snow and two-fifths consists of mountains, inhospitable plateaus, deserts and arid zones. In 1969 G. Borgstrom, Professor of Food Science and Geography at Michigan State University and author of The Hungry Planet, stated that 950 million acres still remained available for tillage. He added that 125 million or 13% of the remaining acres needed to be brought under cultivation just to supply the minimum food needs of the annual increment of 70 million people.

Yet such figures are really meaningless because land must be put to more uses than just providing food. If men farmed more than a given portion of the land, insufficient acreage would remain to provide forest products. A given area cannot provide food, forest products and a host of other necessities at the same time. Hence man is facing a hopeless dilemma. With great effort he might solve one or two major problems without immediately resorting to population control. But he could not solve all of them.

Those who advocate leveling of forests for food production apparently overlook the extent of requirements for pulp and lumber in the U.S. and elsewhere. The projected demand for forest products in the U.S. at the end of the century so exceeds the foreseeable domestic supply that at present yields, approximately 300 million acres would have to be added to the existing 484 million acres of commercial forest land to meet requirements.

According to C. Ogburn the green revolution is further hampered by a world-wide paucity of fresh water. Fresh water is being withdrawn from all inhabited continents faster than it is being returned by precipitation. So far man has obtained sufficient water for farming only by mining "fossill water", i.e. ground water accumulated as a result of the last ice age. The tapping of water for irrigation in dry regions has often caused water levels in the latter to drop below the reach of many pumps. In coastal areas the lowering of water tables has caused salt water to seep into aquifers.

According to one estimate, the rivers of the world could ultimately be used to irrigate 14% of the world's cultivated acres at current prices of water and farm products, if they were properly managed. This figure might be increased to 20% by building expensive conventional irrigation projects.

But to irrigate more than this, water could be obtained only by desalinizing sea water. Suppose we irrigated with only 6 inches of desalinated water annually the potentially arable 4 billion acres that the streams and rivers would be unable to supply.This would require 600 cubic miles of desalinated water, an amount 270 cubic miles more than all the rivers in the U.S. annually discharge into the sea. Desalinizing that much sea water would require enormous expenditures of energy. At present it appears that we have neither the money nor the technology to do it.

The construction of the Aswan Dam in Egypt has recently demonstrated the folly of trying to solve the food problem without controlling population growth. Paddock and Paddock indicated the following in Famine 1975:

"The Egyptian solution to the need for increased food production is the Aswan Dam. It is planned that this dam will increase the arable land by one third...Alas! during the...period of construction Egypt's population itself will have increased by one-third."

As man has been unable to grow food on land rapidly enough to accomodate increase in human population, it is important to determine to what extent the oceans may provide food.

Men are already overtaxing the oceans for food. From 1968 to 1969 the fish take of all nations dopped 3%. That of the developed countries dropped 1%, and of the underdeveloped countries 5%. It thus appears that the developed countries have the power and facilities to outfish the open water surrounding the underdeveloped countries.

A recent newspaper article indicated that South American nations "argue that foreign vessels, especially those of the U.S., have plundered reserves of coastal fish to the point where some species are endangered." The New York Times article continued saying that the declines in population of oceanic fish are clearly reflected in the frictions developing between nations which rely on the sea food. Nine Latin American nations, including Ecuador, Peru and Chile, have maintained that they control fishing rights up to 200 miles off shore. As of January 30, 1971, 109 American boats were seized over the last ten years--74 by Ecuador and 35 by Chile--and were made to pay fines totalling $1,546,000.

William Ricker of the Canadian Fisheries Research Board concluded that the sea is unlikely to provide more than 150 metric tons of fish per year. This is two and one-third times the present fish take of 64 million tons. It has been suggested that the maximum sustainable yield of fish in the ocean is about 2-4 times the present catch, and that this yield could be obtained only with difficulty.

As men become increasingly dependent on food from the sea, pollution may be foreclosing the possibility of the sea as a food source. An appropriate article in the Population Bulletin states the following: "Two-thirds of the species of commercially prized Atlantic fishes depend in some way on the marshes bordering our eastern coast. Yet, we have already lost 7% of these marshes to dredging and filling. Trash disposal, oil spills, pesticides and other chemicals have polluted a large share, and real estate developers threaten much of the remainder."

After Cast Just Came Off, Student Joins Amherst Walk

By BARBARA ANN CLEARY
MDC Staff

A UMass student who recently had a cast removed from his leg after about thirteen weeks will attempt to walk twenty five miles Sunday for the Amherst Walk for Development.

Bob Parodi is being sponsored by Kennedy Upper for $1.00 per mile. Friends are also sponsoring the recent convalescent with "excellent response for really good ideas".

The Amherst Walk for Development will take place Sunday under the auspices of the Young World Development branch of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation. Thousands of communities will hold similar Walks this weekend.

Each individual walker is sponsored by some person or persons who have pledged a given amount of money for each mile he walks.

At 8:00 Sunday morning the walkers will begin their twenty-five mile course from the UMass Stadium. After passing through ten check-points the walkers will return twenty-five miles later at the Amherst Commons, where most of the sponsors will be there to greet and reward them.

Based on last year's walk results, pledges this year are expected to total at least $10,000. This will be distributed among the Amherst ABC (A Better Chance) Program, Operation Breadbasket, the Ghana Village Development Program, the American Freedom from Hunger Committee, and the Northampton High School Drug Abuse Program.

There will be a great variety of people walking on Sunday, from high school students to housewives to older people. A large number of UMass students are contributing to the walk in many different ways.

The local office of Walk for Development is at the old Junior High School (phone: 253-2958). Walk cards may be picked up at this location or at the committee table in front of the Book Store in the Campus Center.

Any support, in the form of walkers, sponsors, or workers is welcomed

Three Groups To Present Video Free America

On May 14th, 15th and 16th, for 6 performances only, WTOY of UMass Visual Information Systems of New York and Video Free America of San Francisco will present and experiment in alternate television in room 174-176 of the Campus Center. Amherst was one of five campuses chosen for visits this year (Stanford, U.C.L.A., University of Oregon and Reed College are the others).

Not just one tube in a room – instead a multi-screen, double track video theater system will provide the environment for the 1-1/4 hour programming. Works created especially for this presentation, called "For Your Viewing Pleasure", will include THE CONTINUING STORY OF CAROL & FRED, a documentary soap opera about a couple escaping from their work in San Francisco's erotic film industry, by Art Ginsberg; and VIDEO FEEDBACK, video graphics and electronic mandalas, by Skip Sweeney.

This program of video taped entertainment-information is being sponsored by WTOY to turn students on to the potential of 1/2" video tape technology.

Seating will be limited to 150. $1 tickets will be available at the door. One of the producing artists will be on campus to rap after each performance.

Politics Lecture

Martin Kilson, professor of government at Harvard University will speak on "Politics of the Dispossessed" today at 4 PM in room 163 of the Campus Center.

A specialist in African politics, Kilson also writes American political scene and Black politics. He is regarded as an intriguing speaker and scholar.

The program is sponsored by the Department of Government.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The capital's weeks of antiwar protests reached a straggly end Thursday with a thousand demonstrators still in jail and their efforts to jam the city's traffic a failure.

Only 50 young people, outnumbered 10-1 by police, showed up for one last outcry at South Vietnam's embassy — the tag end of 20,000 who were here earlier in the week.

As the antiwar people left the city, their leaders promised to regroup and return in the summer.

Meanwhile the Rev. Carl McIntire made plans for his "Patriots March for Victory" Saturday, billing it as "our answer to Haiphong's hippie haranguers."

His rally is to be near the Washington monument after a march up Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol. There, he said, "anti-Communist and pro-victory leaders" will speak to the crowd by radio from points around the globe.

These, McIntire said, will include President Chiang Kai-shek of Nationalist China, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky of South Vietnam and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

He also called for picketing of the Federal Communications Commission "to give us freedom to identify the victory-constructors, the freedom-destructors and the surrender-constructors." McIntire, a fundamentalist radio evangelist from Collingswood, N.J., had had a running battle with the FCC.

Courts were processing the last 1,160 people of the 12,000 arrested this week. The last were taken into custody Wednesday in a demonstration on the Capitol steps.

A court order cleared the temporary prison compound at a sports arena of the remainder of 7,000 demonstrators arrested in the stall-the-traffic attemps Monday when police abandoned normal procedures in making wholesale sweeps. The 2,200 arrested Tuesday at the Justice Department were fined and processed through courts that operated on a 24-hour basis.

Those arrested at the steps of Congress, charged under a statute that bars demonstrations there, faced fines of $100 or 100 days in jail.

Antiwar leaders Rennie Davis and John Froines, out on bond after being charged with conspiracy in the traffic-disrupting attempts, spoke to the American Psychiatric Association. "We are going to do it again," Davis said.

Froines said the demonstrators may return on July 4. "If the government has not stopped the war," he said, "we are going to continue to stop the government of the United States. We're not going to be stopped."

The Association's board of trustees unanimously adopted a resolution saying the group "wishes to add its voice to that of the great masses of the American people who have so firmly expressed their agony concerning the war:"

Tide Of History

We are resigned to the fact that the United States will still be bombing the hell out of Indo-China next year at this time. We are willing to bet that the United States will still be causing directly and financing the death of thousands more two years from now.

There is no tangible evidence that the United States military effort in Southeast Asia will ever end. Somewhere in the heart of America there is a cancerous growth, that has gnawed away at our ability to act morally as a nation.

The nation still has more people making bombs and weapons for war than have ever marched in the streets against the horror of weapons and war. More than 20 million Americans get paid to make the damn weapons that have killed more than a million people in Southeast Asia.

Perhaps it is time to put down our righteous desire for a peaceful world and say to those who claim to want peace that they can keep right on murdering. The strings of world reality are pulled by men who know that war and destruction is true to human nature. They know that there are more people willing to die senselessly in any kind of war, than will ever challenge their right to wage any kind of war.

* * * * *

Those 200 out of 20,000 people on Amherst Common who still had it in them to hold "vigil" against the war yesterday, are to be congratulated for their peacefulness. Everyone else here on campus should be congratulated for their dedication to the routine of their daily lives.

The nation will still be here when school starts next September and we can always try to keep convincing our leaders that there is a better way to run the world.

We can even vote for politicians who will vote against excessive military spending and who might be smart enough to stop the war in Indo-China and reverse the tide of history that has always managed to punctuate itself with war.

Business As Usual

(Ed. note-The following column was written especially for the Greefield Recorder)

Remember the saying, "What would they do if somebody gave a war and nobody came"? A couple of years ago it was a catch phrase in the then rapidly growing peace movement.

Now, in the midst of nearly universal anti-war sentiment on campus, a cloud of weariness seems to have settled over most students. Debate over Pentagon policies has been replaced by an internal questioning and debate within the movement itself. It's gotten to the point where one might ask, "What would they do if somebody gave a demonstration and nobody came?"

Students, weary of all the demonstrating, are questioning its value more than ever before, although their support for the cause is as strong as ever. For the majority, the weariness has grown out of frustration from personal experiences.

* * *

KIDS REMEMBER how exciting the strike was last May. The workshop discussions, the mass rallies, the neighborhood canvassing attracted an overwhelming portion of the student body. But they also remember how their own interest died after a week or 10 days. The tactics didn't bring tangible results, any more than had the massive Washington demonstrations the fall before.

Students, frustrated by the futility of their past experience, are questioning the usefulness of this week's demonstrations.

Only a few dozen went to Washington from UMass. Those few are straggling back to campus with tales of being targets of police hurling tear gas and, allegedly, even bricks. They tell of girls being singled out by the police, or police riding motorcycles into crowds, of innocent bystanders being herded into the "concentration camp-like" pens with demonstrators.

The veterans of the protest claim a duty to spread their stories because they feel the kind of things being reported in the mass media are not the things going on in Washington.

STUDENTS hearing these tales are upset by the examples of alleged "police brutality" but their response is restrained. Their reactions seem to be cooled off by the reservations they have concerning the tactics of the demonstrators themselves.

There is more to the students' coolness and uninvolvement than their sense of futility. There is also a general questioning of the motivation behind those who are demonstrating.

Sentiment seems to be spreading that a lot of the demonstrators are attracted by what might be called the glamor of the activities. Phrases like "fashionable radical" are being used to express some students' belief that many activists are participating just because it's the "chic" thing for students to do these days.

People questioning the motivations point out, for instance, the attractiveness of the free concerts put on by big-name rock groups at the Washington demonstrations. They wonder if protestors are maybe being at least partly drawn to the city by the concerts and the thrill of being where the action is.

SOME HAVE ALSO questioned the motivation behind the several UMass students fasting for five days ending Wednesday. Those who fasted explained they were making a personal commitment to the cause by individually sharing a little of the physical suffering they believe the United States is causing among the peoples of Southeast Asia.

Students who say they are just as strongly against the war discount the fasting technique because of its futility. They say it may have been chosen just to serve the egos of those fasting.

Actually, only a small part of the campus is even involved in the debate over tactics and motivations. Most seem to be just sitting back, watching the demonstrators and listening from a distance to the complaints of those who question the driving spirit behind the activists.

The uninvolvement appears to be growing. More and more students are getting weary of the whole anti-war topic. They still want the war ended, but many of them seem to have given up trying to do or say anything about it.

UMass was unofficially on strike Wednesday. The Student Senate, Veterans for Peace, and ad hoc faculty group and several other campus groups had declared Wednesday a day of mourning for students killed last May and had urged a one-day moratorium of university affairs. For most of the student body, however, it was "business as usual" yesterday.

It was almost like giving a demonstration and having nobody show up.

The Luck Of The Aged

Kent State, Viet Nam..., Death. What is this thing that is turning and ripping at us. I don't know. Perhaps it's the idea dying isn't a very pleasant thing: that death is something that has to be avoided at all cost: that where it is commited unnecessarily, it has to be stopped.

Perhaps the noise is being made because there is a realization that when somewone says you have to die for something that something should be examined very carefully.

It's such a damn final thing, such an eventual thing that you can never really comprehend it. We can observe it such as at Kent State, or Viet Nam or at a bomb shattered building. We can follow it to its door, we can bang and scream at that door, we can paint the door with various colors, but we can not look to its other side. Unless of course we die, or someone has us die for something.

That's not to say that the giving of one's life for a particular thing is wrong. It's to say the giving of your life by someone else is wrong.

At the present time the Supreme Court has not yet ruled on the constitutionality of the death penalty. This week though it did rule that a jury can sentence a man guilty of murder to death.

What a sickening thought, the death of a man at the hands of supposedly another intelligent man. Do you punish death with death? I really don't know. I've seen enough death to last me a life time as have most people of my generation. If anything ever comes out of this, our age, I hope it is the final realization that life itself, for us on earth, is the most important thing. That life is the circle that we all travel out from. That every man's life is his own which no one, no state, no cause, has any right to take.

To achieve this I supposethat we have to start realizing that each individual is a state. That these states form laws with other such states so that each may survive. This of course is another thought that I will not get into here.

I ask my readers to be patient while I subject them to these thoughts. It's my memorial to the Kent State Four, and all others that have died for someone else's goals.

In these times of national turmoil there is another group of Americans that we have forgotten, the old. It would appear that after an individual, in this nation, reaches the age of 65 he automatically begins to lose his rights as a citizen.

He can no longer work on a job which he has most likely spent his life at. He can no longer depend upon himself to support himself, not that he is incapable of supporting himself or continuing to work on the job, but because he is over 65.

But unfortunately the lucky ones are the ones that can manage to live on that insult of an income that the government sends them once a month. That is they can live on it if the bureaucratic screw-ups get it in the mail on time. They can live on it for perhaps one or two weeks.

But the unlucky ones, they get stuck in rest homes. Where the little dignity they had remaining is taken away. And we treat them like idiots, and tell them how lucky they are.

Referendum Reaction

The results are far more encouraging than I had expected. As people become more and more aware of the positive accomplishments of the Senate leadership, they shall increasingly see the necessity of compensation. Anyone who gripes about this fucked-up University yet has voted "no" on this referendum had better not gripe if things get worse. He has forfeited his opportunity for a major thrust for change next year."

Larry Ladd

Large Class?

Class size varies inversely to the intelligence and creativity of the students within the class.

(Filmore Law, #43, 1970)

Proof: If a student is both intelligent and creative, then he is seeking to learn and understand that which is about him. If such a student takes a course, it is to learn and to understand. Since he does not have complete knowledge of the course area, questions should arise which he will want to discuss with the instructor and class. If the number of students in a course is large, all the course time will be spent on questions and discussions. But most large classes are lectures, with little or no questions or discussions, therefore very few intelligent and creative students are in large classes.

Letters To The Editor

The Grass Is Always Greener

To the Editor:

This letter is in reply to three letters by Douglas L. Murphy and Bob Callahan concerning the area surrounding the Campus Center. I disagree with very little that these people have said, however, I would like to clarify this issue for them and the University at large.

I was once a student here myself and understand the problem confronting these two gentlemen. They do not know where and how to find an answer. That is why I am writing this letter.

First, my position on campus is Assistant Landscape Architect. The University Landscape Architect for whom I work is William A. Lambert. Joseph DiCarlo is also a Landscape Architect in association with the Physical Plant. The three of us are all graduates of this school's Department of Landscape Architecture. Most important, our offices are in the Physical Plant (overlooking the Varsity Baseball Field), and can be reached by phone, 8:30 - 5:00, at 545-0600. We invite you to contact us anytime you have questions or comments about any site work or landscaping on campus. This includes lighting, walks, lawns, planting, parking, roads, recreation areas, "muddy quagmires", or anything outside of the building walls. Many students, faculty, and staff have done so in the past and appear to have been satisfied, or at least informed. If we don't know the answers, we'll tell you who does.

We do know the answers to your questions concerning the Campus Center. Chronologically, this is what happened: When the building was first designed, the architect also designed the surrounding area. The V.I.P. ramp is about all that remains of it. The rest was considered impractical, either because of cost or conflict with the adjacent areas. When the architect's landscape design was withdrawn from the project. This office then took on the job of landscaping the area. We found ourselves in a position of having a design for an area sorely needing work, but no money to make it materialize. This is hardly a unique situation for us. We haven't received any money for landscape projects since 1966 (for Boulevard and area surrounding Whitmore Hall), and we have little hope of seeing any in the near future. This is why areas such as the Campus Center are not being improved overnight. However, we are working on it.

In response to Mr. Murphy and Mr. Callahan, a design for the area was produced by this office in 1968. A plan for pedestrian lighting from the Graduate Research Center to Herter Hall 9232 lights) was put out to bid this spring, and a contractor will be selected this month. Last summer, enough money was found to construct the drainage and walk systems that now exists in the area. During the winter, we ordered a large amount of trees specifically for this area, and in the last two weeks, they have started to arrive from many locations throughout New England. What remains now is to find the time and equipment for the University's own Grounds Department to finish the job. And, this is no easy task. With the dorms on Eastman Lane nearing completion, the grounds crew will have to move in the new furniture. There are also several other jobs that they must complete first.

The Campus Center area still needs a great deal of work. A large amount of fill must be brought in to raise the unpaved areas to the desired level and make the drainage system functional. The trees, most of which are quite large, must be planted. Loam has to be spread and grass planted. Seeding is best done in mid-August, and tree planting can be done now, and with certain apecies, in the fall.

We hope that this area will be completed this year. After all, we realize that other areas also need work. Never hesitate to contact us for any reason. We work for you and your parents, the taxpayers. Douglas Murphy and Bob Callahan got our attention; so can you. Coincidentally, the work progressing around the Campus Center has been in the works for months and is not a product of the letters, however such concern on the part of any member of the University community is appreciated.

Financial Aid

To the Editor:

Yesterday wasn't particularly gratifying. Today we will try a more personal approach. We wish to remind people that our table will still be there, and that people

We don't logically expect that people who do not seek to end the war would wish to contribute to a Bail Fund established for demonstrators against the War. What we do hope is that anti-war people will be generous and help out those who chose this method to show their opposition.

Ken Mosakowski's letter in yesterday's paper was quite intelligent. I certainly agree with him that there is more than one way to try to stop the war. The Silverman-Ladd debate on the fast also comes to mind. If one believes that supporting Congressional legislation is the most effective way, then he should doubtlessly follow that course.

This should not entail bad feelings within the broad spectrum of opposition to the war. If 73% of the people do nothing, then the war will not end. Those arrested in Washington, wore buttons saying "If the government won't stop the war, we'll stop the government." Even if you disagree with the methods used, the intent is nevertheless to end a war which all of which would have like to see ended a long time ago. We ask for your financial support. Peace.

Rich Language

To the Editor:

An Armenian Studies program should be offered next year. I urge all interested students to participate for such a course will offer an unique opportunity to study the culture and language of an old civilization. Too often Armenia's position in world history has been ignored, and this must be rectified. A complete and accurate picture should be presented. Become aware - - Armenia established much of the contemporary philosophy in our world!

Seriously consider Lord Byron's thought; "I have begun, and am proceeding in the study of the Armenian language...It is a rich language and would amply repay anyone the trouble of learning it..."

Keep Walking

To the Editor:

"I can prove to young people that it's completely possible to take care of all humanity at a higher standard of living than anybody ever thought of;
that the war which they deplore
is the same as other wars, which have been based on the assumption that there's not enough to go around
so that somebody is going to have to die.
But that's no longer true.
...if you can go to the moon
and under the Arctic ice, you can make the world work."

--Buckminster Fuller

How? By participating in The Walk for Development. The procedure for the Walk is as follows: Several days before the Walk, each individual walker will approach his friends, neighbors, relatives, etc., and ask them to sponsor him by pledging a given amount of money for each mile he walks. At 8:00 on the morning of May 9, the walkers will assemble at the twenty-four mile course in the greater Amherst area. Each walker will carry a walk-card which he will have stamped at each of the ten check points along the route. After the walk is completed, each walker will return to his sponsors and ask them for the funds they have pledged for his efforts. The funds will be allocated to certain local and foreign self-help projects. By participating in the Walk, each individual can hasten the realization of a world free of hunger, disease and poverty.

Perls' Pearls

To the Editor:

HI!

I'm writing this letter to fulfill my Value Clarification (Educ. course taught by Sid Simon) requirements of a published letter to the editor.

After considerable contemplation, I've decided not to try to disclose and be myself to you via this media, because I experience you as a frightening/unknown mass audience--my typical rationalization that "you are like me" doesn't help this time...my experience is not your experience (R.D. Laing)...I am heaping elephant shit on you...Perhaps you and I will meet and touch someday under the better/safer circumstances of expressed, shared, mutual expectations.

Bob Weslow

P.S. I do feel like sharing some famous words by Fritz Perls:

"I do my thing, and you do your thing.
I am not in this world to live up to your expectations
And you are not in this world to live up to mine.
You are you and I am I,
And if by chance we find each other, it's beautiful.
If not, it can't be helped."

Letters

Letters to the Editor must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

Editorial Points

It looks like students don't want to pay Senators no matter where you hold the referendum.

There's a lot you can say about the government but none of it means very much.

* * *

In case you missed it, Austin Soneman was - Thaddeus Stevens.

Pretty soon they'll be holding referendums in your rooms. Actually, it might be a good way of getting some people to vote.

Nine legislators were on campus yesterday to discuss education. They scheduled fifteen minutes for a press conference which means one of two things. Either they didn't expect many questions or they didn't have many answers.

The answer to yesterday's query was Congress. Get it?

To inspire a little creativity out there, a contest is being held for Editorial Points. All you have to do is finish this sentence: "I think a good Editorial Point would be...." The winner gets to read his answer aloud before an assembled multitude of college journalists.

Ignorance In Common

Over 1300 citizens in this area signed a statement last week urging "that all our men in Vietnam be brought home by December 31,1971." The statement also calls for a deadline for bringing the troops home from Vietnam, as well as calling upon the President to end U.S. involvement in the Indo-China war by December 31, 1971. The citizens signing the statement indicate their support of the march in Washington on April 24 sponsored by the "peace action coaltion". The statement was paid for by those who signed their names.

The people who signed this petition are of diverse ages, different backgrounds, and come from different towns, but they all share one thing in common-they are ignorant of the issues involved in the proposals which they make. To follow their urgent plea that the U.S. end its involvement in Vietnam would be disasterous. Their support of the March on Washington is visible evidence of their foggy thinking which would encourage them to embrace a scheme whose only purpose is to embarass the administration and to demoralize the Vietnam war effort.

It is interesting to note that the statement is addressed TO our two senators, which is a laugh, since they already favor the basic proposal of Vietnam disengagement, presenting the enemy with a deadline for our withdrawal from South Vietnam. They are already committed to summary withdrawal. However, we hope the President will stand fast in his determination to continue his policy of Vietnamization with American logistics and bombing support, applying the pressure required to convince the communists that they cannot hope to achieve the victory which is their goal in South Vietnam.

There can be little question but that this is the intent of the North Vietnamese, and they are greatly encouraged in their attainment of this goal by the general confusion and lack of unity which is so manifestly evidenced in this country. It is this lack of cohesion and determination to back the administration which has constituted perhaps the greatest threat to eventual peace. There is every evidence that the President's policy is working. The strain on the enemy has been tremendous, and the destruction of his war-making potential and the demoralization of his troops has been much greater than generally realized.

The President has been bringing the troops home according to the schedule outlined months ago, and he plans to continue. He has assured the people that his plan will ensure the South Vietnamese a chance for democracy, as well as providing the most realistic chance for lasting peace in that section of the world, so coveted by the communists since it stands as a direct obstacle to their further conquests. To establish a deadline for getting out would be a timetable for disaster, since the enemy would wait for the right moment, and over-run South Vietnam. Of what significance then would be the sacrifices made by so many brave American boys and their parents? Of what use the expenditure of billions of dollars of hard-earned tax money? A policy which would allow such an end result would make a mockery of our nation as one of principle, strength, and courage. It would make us the laughing stock of the communist world. It would discourage our allies in that part of the world and make them ripe for communist plucking.

In their statement, the petitioners for a march on Washington refer to its being sponsored by The National Peace Coalition. Do they realize that the Communist Fourth International was the first to call for demonstrations on April 24? Do they realize that the National Peace Action Coalition is chiefly led by Trotskyites and former members of the Students for a Democratic Society? Four of its members, according to the Boston Herald, are affiliated with the Socialist Workers Party. The other communist front group is the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice, which is principally led by Stalinists, according to the Herald, "crazies" from the New Mobe and "Chicago 7" defendants Rennie Davis and David Dellinger...

An organized minority can defeat a disorganized majority. This has been proved many times by the communists. They are also masters of the technique, divide and conquer. They are employing both these devices in their attempt to bring about the eventual downfall of this country. This is a long range goal. Right now they are concentrating on the abortion of the President's program of bringing meaningful peace to South Vietnam which would prove to the communists on the field of battle that they cannot win victory in Vietnam. All those who support this march or press for the imposing of a deadline on withdrawal of American troops or an end to the fighting are helping to undermine the President's policy. If South Vietnam falls to the communists, the whole of Southeast Asia will follow suit, and where will communist conquest and aggression stop in the vacuum? If we want to stop it, we will have to pick another battleground at much greater disadvantage closer to our own shores.

There is no quick way to peace. The President's way is the best way, and he should be supported. Those who actively seek to undermine it are playing into the hands of the North Vietnamese and their quest for complete political victory in South Vietnam. Further, they are playing into the hands of the world-wide communist comspiracy which sees the United States as its only major obstacle to the imposition of world-wide communism.

Weekend

Theater

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

The Adventures of Tom Sawyer
A professional musical version of Mark Twain's story by a company of 75. At ARHS, Saturday, 11 A.M. and 1 P.M. ($)

Does The Tiger Wear A Necktie?
The final University Theater production of the season is, alas, something of a let-down. The fault lies not in the production, but in Don Peterson's script which contains a maximum of stereotypes and a minimum of dramatic action. Some excellent performances and a highly-spirited cast cannot save the script and the result is a boring two-and-one-half hours. At the Bartlett Theater, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30. ($)

Our Lan'
A play presented by the UMass Black Repertory Theatre. See related article on page for details.

The Trojan Woman
Euripides' classic anti-war play was originally prompted by the massacre of the people of Melos during the Peloponesian Wars, and incident which recalls My Lai. At Theater 14, Smith College through Saturday evening at 8. ($)

One of the fifteen puppets which will perform as part of the UBU, an original puppet show, which will be in the Five College Area this week.

Under Plain Cover and Victims of Amnesia
Original plays written, directed, and performed by Amherst College students. Through Sunday evening at 8:30 at the Stone Theater, Amherst College.

UBU, An Original Puppet Show
Part of the Dada-Surrealistic Festival now happening in the Five College Area. Eighteen characters participate in the 45-minute show which is not recommended for children because of its excessive violence. Free performances will be Saturday, Hooker Aud., MHC; Sunday, Porter Lounge, Coverse, AC; Monday, East Lecture Hall, Hampshire; Tuesday, Flannigan Studio Theater, Smith; and May 12, SU Ballroom, UMass.

Films

Alice in Wonderland, (Monday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:30)
The controversial interpretation of Lewis Carroll's classic fantasy story was originally made for British television but was considered too unconvential for BBC audiences. Conceived and directed by the British genius Jonathan Miller, the film is a highly psychological interpretation of Alice's adventures.

The Boys In The Band (Friday and Sunday, Hampden Dining Commons, DC 5, Southwest, 7:15 and 9:30)
The acting is what makes this film worth seeing for it contains perhaps the finest ensemble acting in recent memory. Otherwise, though, the film version of Mart Crowley's play about a homosexual birthday party suffers from complete character sterotyping. The script itself is extremely well-written and funny, the problem is its focus is less on people and more on a social condition and even the fine acting cannot save it from becoming grossly exaggerated.

Either Way (Monday, Wednesdaay, Friday, Campus Center Auditorium 6, 8, 10, also Friday at 12)
The premiere of a feature--length film by two University professors, Tom Clark and Jack Deaver, prior to a national release this summer. The film, made in this locale, concerns a young man's quest for sexual identity and attempts to show the complex psychological make-up of the hero's heterosexual and homosexual development.

Frankenstein (Friday, Hampden Dining Commons, DC 5, SW, 11:30)
The original film version of Mary Perce Shelley's classic romance. Boris Karloff is Frankenstein's monster.

In The Heat Of The Night (Saturday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
A highly-overrated film. On one level it works as a murder mystery (and it's not that hot at that), but as a social drama about black--white relationships, which is where the film was generally praised, it's pat and nearly offensive in the way it strives for Social Significance. The film concerns what happens when a college-educated, black detective arrives in a Southern town to investigate a murder. Sidney Poiter stars as Mr. Tibbs and Rod Stieger won an Oscar as the Southern detective. He's been better in other films.

Harper, (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
Paul Newman plays a Bogart--style detective in a murder mystery that takes good advantage of the relationship and makes for some good fun. Lauren Bacall is an added treat.

Joe (through Saturday, Academy of Music, Northampton)
Made on a shoestring, a most pretentious film which attempts to show what happens when the hard hat meets the speed freak. It's only saving grace is the excellent performance of Joe Boyle in the title role, otherwise its genuine lack of subtltety and grosse stereotyping make it the leading candidate for the Stanley Kramer Relevant Social Film Of The Year. Previous winners include Easy Rider, In The Heat Of The Night, and, of course, any film of Stanley Kramer.

Lawrence of Arabia (Showcase Cinemas, West springfield)
David Lean's massive and beautiful film about the mysterious and mystical T.E. Lawrence. It's not only beautiful to watch, but also is blessed with fine performances, notably that of Peter O'Toole as the enigmatic Lawrence. A most satisfying spectacle film, watch for the cuts though in this somewhat shortened--re-released version.

The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
Directed by Tony ("Tom Jones") Richardson's the film features an all-star cast which includes Tom Courtenay as the rebellious young Colin Smith, Sir Michael Redgrave and Alex McGowan is set against both the grim working class environs of urban Great Britain and the equally depressing, misty countryside. Colin Smith is a frustrated youth, a product of an unhappy and gloomy home who is sent to reform school after attempting robbery. It is there that the Headmaster (Redgrave) tries to fashion Colin into a champion runner. The conflict between Colin's own restiveness and dissatisfaction and the high ideals of the bourgeois headmaster come to a gripping climax the day of the big race.

M*A*S*H (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A most funny film. Elliot Gould and Donald Sutherland, play cynical Army medics during the Korean conflict. The only difference between their actions and those of the kind found at a fraternity house is the blood--and there's a good deal of it--in the operating room sequences. It's a satire on army life and is probably the best ever made.

Patton (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The big taker at this year's Oscars winning best picture, actor, and script. A far better film than could have been done.. It's intelligent, and almost devoid of any political biases making it a film for both hawks and doves. George C. Scott is Patton in a bravura performance.

The Sterile Cuckoo (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:30 and 9:30)
A low-keyed, touching, almost romantic film about the love affair of two college freshman. Liza Minelli plays Pookie Adams in the kind of film debut that wins major awards and Wendel Burton, as her boyfriend, gives a most believable performance.

Waterloo (Amherst Cinema)
Perhaps the year's most disappointing film. The director of the epic Soviet film "War and Peace" teamed with Rod Steiger and Christopher Plummer and a cast of millions in massive historical spectacle about Napoleon. Excellent battle sequences can't make up for the poor acting and direction.

Music

Folk Concerts
Phil Ochs, Jonathan Edwards, and Ron Gamache will present an afternoon of folk music by the pond beginning at about one. See article below for further details.

Mount Holyoke--Amherst Chamber Orchestra
Works by Beethoven and Bach are featured along with the world premiere of Two Pieces for Orchestra by Lewis Spratian conductor of the orchestra. At Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, Saturday evening at 8:30 and Sunday at 8:30 at Pratt Auditorium Mt. Holyoke.

Student Recital
Patricia Chiang, soprano; Wayne Raymond, trumpet; and Phillip Tomposki, clarinet will present a Senior Recital on Sunday, May 9 at 3:00 P.M. in Herter 227 at the University of Massachusetts.
The program will include works by Johann Sebastian Bach, Philip Tomposki, George Frederic Handel, Claude Debussy, Matyas Seiber, Orlando Gibbons, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, and Hans Werner Henze.
This concert is open to the public free of charge.

UMass Symphony Orchestra
"The "Spring" Symphony in B Flat by Robert Schumann will be the featured work on the program to be presented by the UMass Symphony Orchestra, May 12, in Bowker Auditorium on the University campus. The Symphony, sketched in the short space of four days, was acknowledged in a letter by the composer as having been written "...in the spring urge which comes afresh over everyone, even the oldest." In the same letter to the composer Spohr, Schumann stated that "...the period in which it was composed influenced its character and partly made it what it is." The period referred to was his first year of married life.
Ronald Steele will conduct the performance which will also include compositions for organ and orchestra: Handel's Organ Concerto No. 4, Op. 4; and the Prelude and Allegro for Organ and Strings by Walter Piston. John King, a member of the UMass Department of Music Faculty, will be heard as organ soloist.
The program, which begins at 8:15, is open to the public without charge.

Phil Ochs This Sunday

Phil Ochs, Jonathan Edwards, and Ron Gamache will be part of a free afternoon of Folk Music this Sunday by the pond beginning at one.
Phil Ochs has been since the early sixties one of the leading articulate singers of student-leftist protests. His early songs include the ever-popular "I Ain't a Marching-Any More," a song which is just as true of us today as it was seven years ago, and the beautiful "There But For Fortune" made popular by Joan Baez.
His later albums included the biting "Outside of A Small Circle of Friends" and the self-parodying "The Party". Ochs recently attempted a change to Fifties style rock (gold suit and all) but still includes his earlier material in performance.
Jonathan Edwards is one of the most talked about folk singers in quite some time. Originally lead singer of a group named Sugar Creek, he went solo and has recently completed his first album. His appearances everywhere have brought him the kind of critical acclaim usually reserved for a John Sebastian or Tom Rush or a Taylor family member. If you haven't heard of him before, you will after Sunday.
The folk afternoon will begin at one with newcomer Ron Gamache; Ochs and Edwards will follow at 2:30 and 4.

Jonathan Edwards

Black Rep Play Opens Tonight

During the weekend of May 7 through 9, The UMass Black Repertory Theatre is presenting Theodore Ward's Our Lan' in Bowker Auditorium. There will be two evening performances--Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and a Sunday matinee at 3:30 p.m. Admission to all performances is $1.75.
The Director of Our Lan' is Esther Terry, a Ph. D. candidate in the Department of English and a member of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies. Serving as a consultant to Esther is the author, Theodore Ward, who has been in Amherst since March for an eight week stay as Black Artist in Residence.
Our Lan' is a play in 10 Scenes and 2 Acts. The play concerns the struggle of freed slaves to retain the land given to them and has been described as a "tragic heroic drama." It is also the story of the heroism of a group of people the foundation of whose heroism is the indomitable capacity to endure, to work, and to sustain determination and optimism in the face of obstacles and setbacks.
Our Lan' had a five weeks run on Broadway at the Royale Theatre in 1947. Although Our Lan' was ready for Broadway, Broadway was not ready for Our Lan'. Some critics and spectators went to the Royale Theatre in September of 1947 expecting to find another Green Pastures. According to Lofton Mitchell, Black playwright and critic, Our Lan' failed on Broadway because the director tried to make a musical out of a play that had a revolutionary theme.
For this production, the Director of Our Lan' utilizes the talents of veteran members of the UMass Black Rep, members of the UMass Black Repertory Children's Theatre, students from Hampshire College, and people from the Amherst and Springfield communities.
The play features Ronald Murphy, a UMass undergrad majoring in theatre, as Joshua Tain, the leader of a group of freed slaves involved in a struggle to retain the land given them. At one point in the play, he tells the freed slaves:
"The planters might skeer some. But not us--not us, who's felt de lash, who know what tiz to see er brother's brains dashed out, er father shot down in de middle of de field, 'n er mother hanged for liftin her hand against de overseer. No! They don't skeer us, cuz we was brought up in de house of horror!"
Vivian Hayes, a UMass junior, plays opposite Ronald Murphy as Delphine.

An Expression Of Black Spirit

TAKE TWO

The Dark Side of The Moon

By Robert Touake

The street car, the gas mask, the traffic light and the first successful open heart surgery might seem unrelated upon first observations. And I guess in many ways they are except for one important exception. The gas mask, street car and open heart surgery are only a few of the many contributions made by black people in the interest of this country.
Inventions such as the boat propellor or clock, two other inventions by black people, have their place in today's society. Where would our navy be without a simple device like the propellor? Before Benjamin Banneker invented the clock, people depended on pocket watches to keep time. And the electric trolley car an idea innovated by Granville T. Woods was a major source of transportation in many cities for a long time. In fact in some cities, such as Boston, they are still used in place of buses and subway trams. The latter, by the way, is still another form of transportation Granville Woods, a black man, made possible.
Yes, these are, very important inventions but just as important as the inventions themselves are the circumstances under which they were invented. Many black inventors never had the opportunity to complete even an elementary school education. At an early age many of them had to work and only through native intelligence, perseverence and a strong desire were they able to succeed.
Granville T. Woods, who had over sixty patents to his credit at the time of his death, worked at an early age and never had the chance to finish elementary school.
At the age of sixteen Woods worked both as fireman and engineer on a railroad and it is here his interests in electricity developed. Through books obtained at the library and borrowed from friends, Woods spent his spare time studying electricity. Later on Woods took a course in electrical and mechanical engineering. This training along with his earlier studies culminated in Woods opening a factory in Cincinnati, Ohio around 1881; where he manufactured telephone and telegraph equipment.
During this time Woods became interested in thermal power and in 1884 patented plans for an improved steam-boiler furnace. This was only the beginning of a long line of inventions which were to include a Tunnel Construction for electric railways in 1888, a galvanic battery in 1888 and an egg incubator heated electrically and controlled by a thermostat similiar to those used in houses today to control heat.
Perhaps one invention of Woods people today might be familiar with is the telephone transmitter. Although Bell invented the telephone in 1876, it was ineffective over long distances because the sound of the voice would fade in and out.
Essentially Woods' telephone transmitter is a device for sending sound over a distance by electric current. In the telephone the sound causes a thin piece of metal (diaphragm) to vibrate and press against a little box holding tiny grains of carbon. When the disphragm is pressed against these grains electricity is conducted well, if it isn't electricity is conducted poorly. This produces a series of strong and weak currents, which are conducted by telephone wires to the receiver at the other end. There it causes an electromagnet to pull a diaphragm strongly or weakly, depending on the strength of signals from the transmitter. The diaphragm in the receiver vibrates exactly the same way as the one in the transmitter. These vibrations are turned into sound.
Woods' telephone transmitter was able to carry the voice over much longer distances with louder and more distinct sound than the transmitter then in use. This was done by a man who, except for an electrical and mechanical course, had no formal education at all.
In 1887 Woods came up with the idea of railway telegraphy, probably one of his most important inventions. Up until this time messages could only be sent between stations. Woods' invention changed all that. Railway telegraphy allowed messages to be sent between moving trains and from moving trains to railroad stations. This invention prevented numerous accidents by warning engineers of washed out bridges and other obstacles in the paths of trains.
During his lifetime Granville T. Woods sold patents to General Electric, Bell Telephone, the American Engineering Company and the Westinghouse Air Brake Company. Today much of the brilliance and progress in industry is due to the work of a black man named Granville T. Woods.
Distinguished by their intrinsic good, inventions by black men have, ironically, made life better for people. Back in 1912 a black inventor, Garrett A. Morgan, had the idea of a Safety Hood or as Morgan himself referred to it when he patented it in 1914 a "Breathing Device". During World War II the army improved upon Morgan's Safety Hood and called it what we know it today, the gas mask.
Morgan's Safety Hood consisted of a hood placed over the head of the user with tubes running from it for the inhalation and exhaulation of air. The inhalation tube could be placed beyond the reach of the gas fumes or smoke.
The National Safety Device Company was founded to produce and market the Morgan Safety Hood, with Morgan as general manager. The success of the device is shown in the rapid rise of the companies stock prices. The first three months the stock was selling at ten dollars a share; a month later it sold at a hundred per share and two years later its market value exceeded $250 dollars a share and not one was for sale.
At the Second International Exposition of Safety and Sanitation in New York City in 1914 Morgan gave several successful demonstrations with his Safety Hood and won first prize. Firemen made good use of Morgans' helmets when they borrowed them from the exhibition to rescue victims of a subway disaster. The example set by New York firemen was soon followed by police and fire departments all over the country, as Safety Hoods came into general use.
A criterion for any inventor is an ingenious mind. Garrett A. Morgan was no exception. One day he witnessed an accident involving an automobile and a horse and carriage at an intersection. Morgan realized if there had been some sort of warning at the intersection, the accident might have been avoided. Morgan thought a good deal and came up with the idea of electric signals with colored lights at intersections. Today most people know Morgan's idea as the traffic light. Morgan patented his traffic light back in 1923 and sold the patent rights to General Motors for $40,000.
Garrett A. Morgan a creative man, who happened to be black, which is no extraordinary occurence. Black innovators are not uncommon when one realizes the first successful open-heart surgery was done by a black doctor, Daniel Hale Williams or a black surveyor, Benjamin Banneker, made possible the planning of our nation's capitol or a black, Jan Matzeliger, invented a machine that could turn out a one piece shoe.
Everyone knows Thomas Edison invented the electric lightbulb; Graham Bell invented the telephone and Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin. Who knows Elijah McCoy invented automatic lubrication for machinery; Lewis Latimer was responsible for producing carbon filaments that made Edison's lightbulb burn longer or S. L. Dickinson invented the player piano? Why is it we know so much about Thomas Edison and nothing about Lewis Latimer? Perhaps the answer lies with the first slave brought to Jamestown.

The Real Christ

(In answer to an Ohio Preacher who called the conviction of Lt. William Calley a modern day cruxification.)

He was Christ.
White skinned. Light.
Blue eyes.

No long hair though.
Close cropped.

Neat.

In the best of Military traditions.

No coarse robe
Of course. Creased
Khakis. Medals
Buttons and Lieutenant's bars
glistened.

In the best of
Military traditions.
No sandals. But
The spit shine on
His jump boots
Reflected the light
Of God.

In the best of Military traditions.

No Cross. Yet.
But he carried
A heavy load. M16
With 30 round clip.
Cradled gently

but

Ready.

In the best of Military traditions.

Yes.
He was Christ
As I stepped forward
"Arms raised"
To be blessed
And felt the smack
And saw the smoke
And heard the snarl
Of his blessing.

After he shot

He whispered --
"God bless you Gook."

In the best of
Military traditions.

Third World Conference Opens on Campus Today

TODAY Brothers & Sisters begins the Third World Conference on campus. Students from all over the east coast will be arriving today to share with an investigation into the theme of "Pan-Africanism". The members of Harambe wish to thank all those people who helped plan the conference and wish to remind you that only your participation will guarantee a meaningful conference.
Registration begins at 3 p.m. in the Student Union. Tickets for the dinner and dance will be available at that time as well as programs and other relevant information about the full weekend. We have been fortunate to obtain the Harambee Singers from Atlanta to entertain us during the dinner on Saturday. The Ambitions Band from Boston will also provide us with the latest sounds at the dance. Other surprises are in store and very serious discussions about our role as students in the Pan-Africanist struggle are guaranteed.
The program is below. It is hoped that everyone will take the time to participate.

FRIDAY

3:00-6:30	Registration
6:30-7:00	Opening Remarks
7:00-8:00	Cortland Cox
8:00-10:00	Movie "Battle of Algiers"

SATURDAY

Black Corridor Checks It Out

On May 12, at 8:00 P.M., in the Orchard Hill Bowl, the Brothers on the Black Corridor will host a show open to all of the campus community.
The show will consist of a special guest speaker from Springfield, three original, one act plays by Phillip Pettijohn; a Slide series by Vinnie Richards; films on Black changes by Glenroy Buchanan and John Davis; poetry by Ola Shair, John Davis, Orrie West, Yma Arrington, Raquiem Walker. African dancing by Maxine Johnson, Brenda Gray, Oya Benn; music by Tony Tatum, Teddy Patrick, Carl Shelton, Ola Shair, Bobby Mason.
The purpose of the show is to define some of the goals and aspirations of Bl k people, based not upon the presupposition of racism, but rather upon truth and excellence.

MDC Close-Up

From Novelist To Biographer

Stephen B. Oates, associate professor of history, first tried to make it as a writer in New York. Later he brought the skills he had acquired to the telling of history in his recent biography of John Brown. To Purge This Land With Blood. (MDC Photo by Bob Nesti)

TO PURGE THIS LAND WITH BLOOD, A Biography of John Brown, by Stephen B. Oates Harper and Row. $10.

By ELLIOT EISENBERG
MDC Staff

On the evening of July 15, 1857, John Brown sat down in an Iowa camp to write to twelve-year-old Henry Stearns of Medford, Mass. Some months earlier he had entertained the boy with tales of his adventures on the Kansas frontier. Now he was writing to fulfill a promise he had made young Stearns to "sometime write (him) a letter, and tell (him) what sort of little boy (Brown) was." It was more than coincidental that Stearns' father, George L., was a potential source of monetary and other support.

"The story of John," wrote Brown, "will be mainly a narration of follies and errors..."

The story of John Brown, from his Connecticut and Ohio childhood, misadventures in business, guerilla warfare in pre-Civil War Kansas, to his death on the gallows following an abortive attempt at uprising at Harper's Ferry in October, 1859, is the subject of an interesting biography by UMass history professor Stephen B. Oates.

Brown's life, as he himself had described childhood, was a "narration of follies and errors," although the mistakes of his adult life he often ignored or denied. It is to Oates to give us a more even-handed version of Brown's career.

In Kansas, for instance, Brown could lead a small group of free-soilers in the cold-blooded assassination of five men he regarded as enemies, albeit after pro-slavery forces had murdered six free-state men. Later he would hem and haw on his part in the massacre, at times denying he had had any part in it.

After Kansas, and in his mind as he wrote the Stearns boy, was a raid on the federal armory at Harper's Ferry, Va. This raid, involving less than twenty men, he hoped would set off an uprising of slaves across the South, a conflict which would end the 'peculiar institution' in this country once and for all.

The assault on Harper's Ferry, as we know, failed, and a number of its conspirators were put to death. It failed, as had Nat Turner's revolt in the same state almost three decades earlier, because no one, least of all the slaves, rose up in its support. Less than thirty-six hours after it began, most of the raiders at Harper's Ferry were dejor in jail.

"But the story of John Brown," says Oates, "does not end with a silent grave in the stillness of the mountains. His raid and public execution had set in motion a spiral of accusations and counter-accusations between Northerner and Southerner that spun the nation inexorably towards civil war."

TO PURGE THIS LAND WITH BLOOD reflects its author; it is done in a no-nonsense, richly documented manner. Yet it reads easily and concludes with the suspense of a nove.

Terrorizing And Spellbinding

An Interview With Stephen B. Oates

By ELLIOT EISENBERG
MDC Staff

"When I was in graduate school," said Stephen Oates, the associate professor of history whose book is reviewed on this page, "everyone viewed a teaching assistantship as a grant to finish a Ph.D. I don't recall even carrying on a discussion with the other TA's about the problems of teaching, of motivating students.

"These TA's are great. That's all they talk about," said Oates, who is coordinator of the history department teaching assistants, one of the most popular instructors on campus, and a successful author.

> "An activist who meets scholars is going to sweep them off their feet."

As his words indicate, he is completely serious about teaching. He will not stand for sleeping or newspaper-reading in his class of about 120 juniors and seniors.

Holding up a stack of course evaluations, he pointed to one. "I just can't understand this one," he said; it had called him a liar and a thief. "I can't understand it; I try to draw the students into a dialogue and get them to challenge me. This fellow, if he has anything concrete, I'd be willing to give him the class for a day and have him try to refute what I've said."

In general, what did he think of the students he's taught? "My impression," he said, "is that there is a hard core of them who want to learn." Despite the impersonality of a large course, "those students will seek out the instructor. The rest run from disinterest to absolute boredom.

"I seriously yearn, and I know others do, to walk into a class that's awake and questioning."

Apathy is not just a problem here, said Oates. At Texas, where he had taught before coming to UMass, there were large numbers of apathetic students. "Why?" he asked, partly to the interviewer, partly to himself.

It's the mind-killing, regimented, military-style secondary schools. They destroy the curiosity and excitement that human beings intrinsicly have.

"High school students are discouraged from questioning the teacher;" he held up his hands to signify quotes, "and they are taught too many courses such as American History which are nothing but chauvanism.

"That kind of course doesn't encourage questioning and thinking," he said. "It destroys it."

His book, TO PURGE THIS LAND WITH BLOOD, a biography of John Brown, speaks in a scholarly yet clear way to modern readers. "If the book has any message at all," said Oates, "it is this:

"That any society which institutionalizes its moral contradictions is inviting revolutionaries to take to the streets.

"What was it that made John Brown, a businessman, a capitalist, a part of the system, into a violent revolutionary?"

Stephen B. Oates

Historians, said Oates, for years have tried to explain away John Brown as insane. "Once you do that," he said, "then you don't have to deal with the problems which produced him.

"That generation of Americans proved itself unwilling and unable to abolish slavery. The northerners wanted to keep it out of the West, not because they detested slavery, but because they wanted to save the frontier for free, white labor. The country was not going in that direction; in fact it was going the opposite way."

But as his book relates, the attempted uprising of Brown's raiders polarized the reaction as reflecting Brown's abolitionism, and the country headed towards civil war.

Our own society is doing much the same thing, Oates emphasized. We are refusing to deal with the problems of racial injustice and war; there is still a gulf between what we profess and what we practice. "And our marijuana laws," he said, "are ranked with contradiction."

> "Any society which institutionalizes its moral contradictions is inviting revolutionaries to take to the streets."

Oates' own philosophy was formed in the fifties and early sixties as a student, teacher, and part of the civil rights movement at Texas. It is the parallel between a hundred years ago and now which upsets him, the revolutionaries coming from the ranks of peaceful protesters.

"Look at John Brown's career," he said. "Brown was able to go East to the liberals, intellectuals and philanthropists, to state his case and receive their support.

"A man who is completely sure of his beliefs, an activist who meets scholars," said Oates, "is going to sweep them off their feet."

"I tried not to analyze Brown," he said. "I was content to capture an enigma. I was sensative to the power of implication."

This he said he had learned in a brief attempt at writing fiction. Coming out of Texas two years after Willie Morris, who was until recently editor of Harpers, Oates, too, went to New York to "try to make it as a writer." Later he returned to academic life, where he was able to apply the tools he had acquired to the telling of history.

On Oates' wall hangs a poster of Abraham Lincoln, subject of his next biography. Already the author is beginning to get himself into his character.

No doubt he will continue with the same kind of exhaustive research which made TO PURGE THIS LAND WITH BLOOD such a success: beyond all of the standard sources as letters and the literature, to visiting the places where the character lived, walking where he walked.

"I got so psyched over John Brown," said Oates, "that once I turned around and thought I saw him standing in the doorway."

A Guggenheim fellowship to cover the next nine months should help the progress of his current work. Then once again he will be terrorizing and spellbinding the students of Ante-bellum history.

Faculty Attend Slavic Conference

Five faculty members of the newly approved Soviet and East European Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst are presenting papers or participating in discussions this week at the Northeast Slavic Conference in Montreal.

The Soviet and East European Studies Program, which was approved by the Board of Trustees April 26, involves interdisciplinary study in such fields as history, literature, and economics--with language competency in either Russian or Polish. Fifty courses will be taught by about 25 faculty members from six departments in the College of Arts and Sciences, and other schools in the University so that students will have an opportunity to study from the perspective of several disciplines.

At the Northeast Slavic Conference, papers will be presented by Prof Laszlo M. Tikos, "Lyricism in Solzhenitsyn's Works;" Prof. George Ivask, "The Roman Sonnets of Viacheslav Ivanov;" and Prof. Maurice I. Levin, "Variant Forms of Russian Conjugation." All are in the department of Slavic languages and literatures.

Prof Zdenek Salzmann of the anthropology department will present a paper titled "Concerning a Recent Trend in Czechoslovakia Toward an Integrated Study of Man." Prof Paul Hollander of the sociology department will participate in a discussion of problems of teaching Soviet studies.

Prof. Robert A Rothstein, who will come to the UMass Slavic languages and literatures department in the fall, will present two papers--"The Linguist as Dissenter: Jan Baudouin de Courtenay" and "Slavic Civilizations and Ethnic Consciousness."

End to Special Fares Urged

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Department of Transportation urged Wednesday the elimination of special air fares for families and for young people. The department told the Civil Aeronautics Board such fares are unjustly discriminatory and should be replaced by experimental short term fares that are truly promotional in nature.

In a brief in the board's passenger fare investigation, the department said the airlines should be permitted to offer reduced fares for flights operated in off peak hours, instead of family fares and youth fares, to help cut costs by distributing traffic flow more evenly.

Small groups of up to four persons also might be offered small fare discounts, the department suggested, because it is cheaper to ticket such passengers together rather than individually.

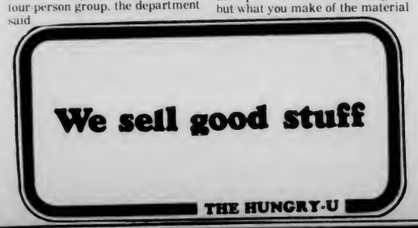
Thus a fare might be cut as much as $4 if ticketing is for two persons, $8 for three persons, or $12 for a four-person group, the department said.

UMass Scientist To Survey Materials Science Field

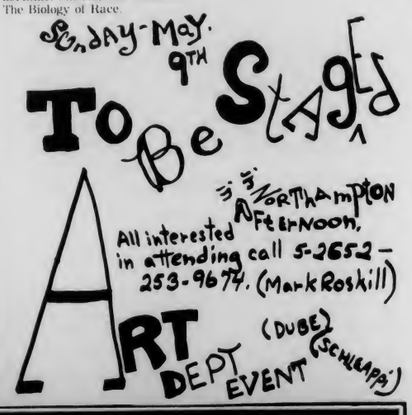
The National Academy of Sciences has named a University of Massachusetts scientist to a national committee that will make the first comprehensive survey of the materials science and engineering field.

Roger S. Porter, head of the polymer science and engineering department at the University's Amherst campus, has been named to the Committee on the Survey of Materials Science and Engineering (COSMAT). Its 23 members are drawn from industry, government and universities. The committee will make an 18-month study support by the National Science Foundation and the Advanced Research Projects Agency of the Defense Department.

The study will be "an assessment of the ways in which materials science and engineering can contribute to the national wellbeing over the next several years," according to the National Academy of Sciences, which serves as the official advisor to the federal government in matters of science and technology.



According to the National Academy, "The field of materials science and engineering embraces such seemingly diverse areas as metallurgy, ceramic engineering, polymer science and solid state electronics. Although these materials are different, the scientific concepts underlying their behavior and properties are similar."



The field has grown rapidly in recent years as new types of materials have been developed for use in jet aircraft, space exploration, nuclear power reactors, communications, artificial organs and highspeed transportation systems.

Dr. Porter was a senior research associate at the Chevron Research Company before coming to UMass in 1966. He is the author of 90 scientific papers and has edited three books in the chemistry and polymer science field

Evolution Course Clarified

Untortunately because of lack of space in yesterday's Collegian the notice regarding this course was cut short and therefore the intent of the notice was completely lost. The new section II (M W F., 2:30 P.M., French, Rm 209) is to be run as an experimental comparison with the usual morning Section I. Section II, like the more popular courses and popular departments will be run on a completely pass-fail or grade yourself basis. The lecture and discussion coverage will be the same as described for Section I in the April 29 issue of the Collegian, but what you make of the material presented will be your business, not mine. One test will be added--- The Biology of Race.

People's Union Here In Amherst

The People's Community Union has begun to function in Amherst. The PCU is an attempt by a large number of political and cultural radicals to create a self-aware, powerful counter-community in the Connecticut Valley.

"There's incredible energy not yet coming together," John Clayton said at last Saturday's Founding Party, "We have to get it together. To some extent we can make our own life here: our own food distribution, our own health services, our own tool-sharing co-op, our own newspaper. Many people feel isolated and powerless in the shadow of official institutions. We've got to be together taking care of our own needs."

The 150 people at the Founding Party have signed up to support or create a number of community groups and study groups; the community newspaper, recycling, high school organizing, day care, and a food co-op are already beginning. Some other projects include radical art, gardening, a study of the Amherst power structure, and living collectives.

Temporarily, the People's Community Union is located at 55 Gray Street, Amherst. (253-2154). This Center is open and staffed by community members Monday through Saturday from 10 A.M. to 9 P.M. Open meetings will be held on Tuesday nights, 7:30 P.M. at the Center.

According to Ann Brentlinger, the Union's first job will be to find out what's going on in the area, and to inform as many people as possible, so that we can come together to create a community.

"People will call up to get involved with a free store or health services--we'll help them make contact with existing groups or set up new projects. "We want to help create a new kind of life--not just better services," Brentlinger adds. "To get rid of the idea of organizers and organized or of professionals and clients. We want to develop participatory institutions which can be a radical model for the kind of life we demand in America. At the same time, we intend to pressure existing institutions to meet these demands."

The People's Community Union prides itself on being not unique. "All over the country this kind of thing is going on," Clayton says. "Berkeley, Ann Arbor, Cambridge, New York." The PCU hopes to work closely with existing groups, not duplicating projects but feeding new energies into ongoing ones.

New Eng. Bishops Question War Policy

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Roman Catholic bishops from four New England states have signed a pastoral letter in which they "urge that the most rapid possible termination of the war and the establishment of peace in Vietnam be given the highest priority by our government."

The 14 signers of the letter included Archbishop Humberto S. Medeires of Boston, bishops from Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, five auxiliary bishops, one retired bishop and the Melkite Apostolic Exarchate.

The five-page letter was published Wednesday in the Vermont Catholic Tribune.

The bishops said that if policies "of massive conventional air power pursued in conjunction with the declaration of 'free fire zones'" and "practices of search and destroy" and "harassment and interdiction fire" "...have in fact caused the civilian deaths reported, then we must sadly but resolutely affirm that they violate the principle of civilian immunity from direct and indescriminate attack and therefore merit the severest moral censure."

"Apprehensive"

The letter said the signers were "extremely apprehensive from a moral viewpoint about the announced policy of Vietnamization."

They said "the declining number of our American casualties, which will come with withdrawal of our combat forces, may easily dull our moral sensibility to the tragedy of intensified human and material destruction in a far off land.

"We commend the diligent persistent efforts to save American lives, but we must in conscience criticize the ethical validity of any doctrine, attitude or policy which seems to give American lives an intrinsic superiority over those of other people.

All Life Sacred

"Every human life, regardless of nationality, color or ideology is sacred and its defense and protection must be of deep concern to us."

The bishops said they "do not question the sincerity of the motives of our elected officials, but if the evidence we see and hear is accurate, we are constrained by conscience to question the wisdom and morality of at least some aspects of our policy."

They preceded their call for a rapid ending of the war by saying:

"We realize the difficulties involved in establishing the conditions for an orderly withdrawal of our military forces and for a peaceful political settlement in Vietnam.

"We have a moral and political obligation to protect those who have been our friends and allies from savage reprisals.

"We recognize that the setting of an exact date for the withdrawal of all our forces is a complex diplomatic and strategic issue."

"In a Democracy..."

The bishops also said that "A people cannot be responsible for the actions of individual soldiers, but in a democracy the people must ultimately accept political and moral responsibility for the policies and actions of their government.

"We cannot disregard the principle of personal responsibility and thereby approve and allow in war actions which we condemn in peace time."

They added that "The moral questioning provoked by the war must not be confined to this issue; it must extend to the analysis of the very fabric of our lives as a people."

The signers said that "the effects of the prolongation of this war at home are also of grave consequence and concern..."

"Americans have turned against Americans in a degree seldom witnessed in our history as a nation. Too many billions of dollars which might have been used to relieve property and promote domestic programs of social need have already been allotted to this war."

Signers

Signers in addition to Archbishop Medeiros included: the Most Rev. Robert F. Joyce, bishop of Burlington, Vt.; the Most Rev. Ernest J. Primeau, bishop of Manchester, N.H.; the Most Rev. Peter L. Gerety, bishop of Portland, Maine; the Most Rev. Christopher J. Weldon, bishop of Springfield, Mass.; the Most Rev. Bernard J. Flanagan, bishop of Worcester, Mass., and the Most Rev. Daniel A. Cronin, bishop of Fall River, Mass.

Berrigan Lawyers Ask For Contempt Citation

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Lawyers defending eight persons accused of plotting to kidnap presidential aide Henry Kissinger have asked U. S. District Court to cite government lawyers for contempt for publicly releasing purported evidence. The defense also asked the court to dismiss the charges against the eight and order government lawyers to quit talking publicly about the case and not to release any more alleged evidence.

U.S. District Judge Michael Sheridan, sitting in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., ordered Deputy Assistant Atty. Gen. William S. Lynch, head of the prosecution, and U.S. Atty. S. John Cottone, to show cause in Harrisburg next Monday why they should not be cited for contempt. A federal grand jury, sitting in Harrisburg, indicted the eight on charges of plotting to kidnap Kissinger and blow up Washington heating tunnels to force the country out of Southeast Asia. A motion filed Tuesday by Leonard Boudin, a defense lawyer, asked that they, "and all other persons acting in concert with them" be held in contempt for "the purposeful and deliberate violation of the defendants rights."

Boudin's action followed release last Friday of new expanded, indictments that contained passages of letters allegedly exchanged between two of the defendants, the Rev. Phillip Berrigan, an antiwar Catholic priest, and Sister Elizabeth McAlister, 31, a nun from Tarrytown, N.Y.

Passages in those letters spoke of a proposed "citizens' arrest" of Kissinger. Lynch said the purported letters were produced to support a charge of sending threatening mail, and said such action was customary in such cases.

Boudin's motion also sought permission for the defense to examine the grand jury's minutes and exhibits. It also asked the court to find out if Cottone's and Lynch's superiors in the Justice Department knew in advance they planned to release texts of the letters, and if so, who were they.

Boudin, in a statement attached to defense motion, claimed at least two national magazines were offered copies of the letters and added there was a "reasonable inference" the offers came from the government.

"To their credit these magazines decided that in the interest of fair trial and in the light of questions as to their authenticity, the letters should not be published."

Besides Berrigan and Sister Elizabeth, others indicted are John T. Glick, 21, Lancaster, Pa., an antiwar activist; Mary C. Scoblick, 32, a former nun, her husband, Anthony Scoblick, 30, a former priest, both of Baltimore, the Revs. Neil McLaughlin, 30, and Joseph Wendroth, 35, both Catholic priests from Baltimore, and Eqbal Ahmad, 40, a Pakistani graduate student, now a resident of Chicago.

The government charges the kidnapping and bombing plot was hatched while Berrigan was jailed in a federal prison at Lewisburg, Pa., serving time for destroying draft records.

Maine To Consider Pollution Amendment

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — The state Senate will give initial consideration Thursday to a proposal to amend the state constitution with an Environmental Bill of Rights. The House disapproved the legislation Wednesday on a 71-67 roll call.

The State Government Committee issued a divided report on the measure sponsored by Rep. Marion Fuller Brown, R-York.

Six committee members favored a new draft of the original amendment filed by the GOP national committeewoman. Six others on the panel recommended instead a statutory declaration of policy concerning the state's environment.

Most of Wednesday's debate by representatives centered on the relative merits of the amendment and statutory declaration. Rep. Kenneth A. Mills, D-Eastport, who represents a constituteuncy with a high unemployment rate, made the motion to indefinitely postpone both committee recommendations and the original bill.

Soviet Studies Major Available

Approval has recently been granted by the Board of Trustees for an undergraduate major in the Program of Soviet and East European Studies. This program comprises some fifty courses taught by approximately twenty-five faculty members from six departments within the College of Arts and Sciences, as well as from other schools in the University. It thus provides students with an opportunity of studying the Slavic and East European area from the perspective of several disciplines.

The Chairman of the Program is Professor Karl Ryavec of the Department of Government, who this year is on sabbatic leave at the Harvard University Russian Research Center. Professor Maurice I. Levin, Head of the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures, is Acting Chairman of the Program for this year.

Five members of the faculty of the Soviet and East European Studies Program will be presenting papers or participating in discussions at the Northeast Slavic Conference in Montreal, one of the most comprehensive events of its kind in North America.

Professor George Ivask will present a paper entitled, "The Roman Sonnets of Viacheslav Ivanov." Professor Laszlo M. Tikos, "Lyricism in Solzhenitsyn's Works," and Professor Maurice I. Levin, "Variant Forms of Russian Conjugation." All three are members of the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures.

Professor Zdenek Salzmann of the Department of Anthropology will present a paper entitled "Concerning a Recent Trend in Czechoslovakia toward an Integrated Study of Man." Professor Paul Hollander of the Department of Sociology will participate in a discussion dealing with problems of teaching Soviet Studies.

In addition, Professor Robert A. Rothstein, now of Harvard University, who will be joining the Program in the fall as a member of the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures, will present two papers. The first is entitled "The Linguist as Dissenter: Jan Baudouin de Courtenay," and the other is "Slavic Civilizations and Ethnic Consciousness."

Gov. Reagan Don't Pay Taxes

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)-Gov. Ronald Reagan said Wednesday that someone broke the law by leaking word that he didn't have to pay any state income tax for 1970. And he accused newsmen of invading his privacy by asking about it.

His comments came after he was asked to clarify if he paid any federal income tax. He replied by saying, "Aren't you guys ashamed enough."

The report that Reagan didn't have to pay state income tax was first broadcast by a college radio station. On Tuesday Reagan told newsmen he couldn't remember if he had to pay. His office later disclosed the governor paid no state tax because of offsetting business losses in the 1970 tax year. The losses were not specified.

The governor told newsmen Wednesday, in an impromptu hallway meeting that, "obviously I would have preferred to make money and owe a tax than to have lost money and therefore not paid a tax."

Asked to clarify whether he paid any 1970 federal income tax, Reagan shot back, his voice tinged with anger, "Why should I have to clarify the status"

"Frankly, I think the capitol press corps yesterday demeaned itself a little bit by engaging in a invasion of privacy. They asked a question they already had the answer to."

"They know that someone illegally provided the information from the Franchise Tax Board," he said.

Reagan earned a gross $44,100 as governor in 1970. One capitol tax expert said he could wind up having no state taxes by incurring a total business loss of $80,000 or so.

State tax officials said a California family of four earning $10,000 a year and receiving average deductions, would pay $63 a year state income tax and a similar family earning $14,500 would owe $204. This is assuming no large business loss.

A family with Reagan's $44,100 salary since raised to $49,100 and no big business loss, would pay $2,784 a year after taking off average deductions.

Cave-In Sucks 35 Homes Into Mud

CHICOUTIMI, Que. (AP)-A massive earth cave-in sucked 35 homes into a sea of grayish mud at the nearby town of St. Jean Vianney. Two bodies were pulled from the muck and rescuers feared Wednesday that 29 other persons still missing had perished.

Searching the disaster area was like "moving through cold lava," a civil defense official said.

Acres of ground sodden from weekend rains and a heavy spring runoff gave way Tuesday night. The neighborhood was pulled into the mud inside a pit half a mile long, 700 feet wide and more than 100 feet deep.

A government geologist, Jean-Ives Changnon, said the cave-in may have been caused by erosion of sandy materials at the base of the bluff on which the town is built, or by an earth tremor Tuesday believed centered in or near the area.

A pilot who flew over the scene said the area "just dropped straight down." A provincial official said the 29 missing were teared dead because the houses were "smashed to pieces" in the cave-in.

Screams from the pit helped guide rescue workers to victims. About 70 were pulled out soon after the disaster. Civil defense workers evacuated 200 persons from the area.

Over 200 workers, some plying the giant crater in rowboats, continued looking for survivors in driving rain Wednesday.

Rescue workers left the crater after some officials warned that further earth slides were possible. Searching later focused on a river junction seven miles south, where debris was washing up.

Constable Errol Fortin of the Quebec provincial police said a tidal wave caused by the cave-in demolished a new bridge several miles away on the Saguonay River. Telephone and power lines were down in the slide area.

Father Quigley Discusses Sex And Birth-Control

A member of A.S.P.I.R.E., a student group concerned with the issues of birth control and abortion, recently interviewed Father Quigley, the Newman Center's Roman Catholic chaplain.

Father Quigley prefaced a discussion of his views with a capsule history of Christian philosophy, stressing what he considers man's greatest asset: his rationality, which lays the groundwork for his search for truth (the intellect), and his search for goodness and beauty (the will). The vast majority of men, the Father optimistically maintains, do things because they are motivated by what they believe to be good and beautiful.

"For the Catholic," he says, "a thing is good only if it brings you closer to God." Man, the pilgrim, as he searches to save his soul through making wise judgments, has to cope with the internal and external pressures of an evolving environment. Within this context of change, however, Father Quigley says that marriage remains a basic psycho-biological drive, a constant.

Traditionally, the Roman Catholic Church has maintained that the primary function of marriage is the procreation and education of children with the mutual assistance of the partners the secondary one. Father Quigley seems to sympathize with the new school of thought in the church which believes that these two aims should be put on a parody basis. If conflict develops between them, procreation should be dealt with in the context of the problems the couple faces. Pope Paul VI's 1968 Humanae Vitae, which banned all means of artificial birth control, continues Father Quigley, is an ideal we should search for, but one we cannot always meet.

The chaplain believes that pre-marital intercourse is alway unhealthy for the woman, whose love is primarily sexless, while it is probably not unhealthy for the man, because of his profoundly different psychological nature. Asked whether this difference that he cites could be due to societal, rather than innate forces, the Father maintained that there are basic, differing drives.

When counseling a girl who has become pregnant, Father Quigley would first attempt to find out what SHE feels, and then encourage her to see a doctor. Severe emotional trauma, as well as physical danger, would be grounds for considering an abortion. Nevertheless, the Father supports his bishop's denunciation of the recently proposed (and defeated) abortion repeal bill, pending "further study." At least the law makes you "think twice," he concludes.

Phi Eta Sigma Elects Officers

Phi Eta Sigma, the freshman men's honor society, held a dinner and business meeting Saturday night in the Campus Center. These officers were elected for academic year 1971-72: President, David Young; Vice-President, Ken Olbrych; Treasurer, David LeFrancois; Secretary, James Lane; Historian, Walter Laliberte.

New members who had been unable to attend the regular initiation on April 4 were initiated at this meeting. Professor William H. Ross of the Department of Physics, who is serving as faculty adviser until Professor Louis S. Greenbaum returns from Paris, presented the new members with their certificates and keys.

Those initiated attained a G.P.A. of at least 3.5 in the first semester of their freshman year. Next fall another initiation will honor the men of the class of 1974 who achieve a 3.5 or better overall in their first year.

Phi Eta Sigma seeks to promote scholarship through such service projects as the distribution of pamphlets on study techniques to incoming freshmen during the Summer Counseling period. The group also initiates into honorary membership outstanding faculty and administrators.

Round-Up

Profs Get Around

Dr. Howard Peters, assistant professor of public health at the University of Massachusetts, has been elected a Fellow of the American Institute of Chemists, an organization with 7600 members in 29 chapters throughout the U.S.

Dr. Peters is a graduate of the University of Nebraska. He received master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. He joined the faculty of the University in 1964 as director of environmental health and safety and assistant professor of public health. Since September of 1970, his duties have been teaching only.

Dr. Thomas M. Fraser, professor of anthropology at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, delivered a paper entitled "Fish in the Forest," at a recent Northeastern Anthropological Conference at the State University of New York at Albany.

Dr. Fraser's talk was based on a study of the Mekong River and dam building schemes in northeastern Thailand and Laos.

Four University of Massachusetts mathematics and computer science professors at the Amherst campus gave addresses at the University of Florida during the second Florida Symposium on Automata and Semi-groups.

Prof. Robert J. Koch, mathematics, delivered a special tribute to Prof. Alexander D. Wallace of the University of Florida in honor of his 65th birthday. Prof. Wallace has lectured several times at UMass. The other UMass faculty members were: Prof. Michael A. Arbib, computer science; Prof. Haskell Cohen, mathematics; and Asst. Prof. Joseph T. Borrego, mathematics. Professors Cohen, Borrego, and Koch are former Ph.D. students of Prof. Wallace.

Dr. John A. Naegele, head of the department of environmental sciences at the University of Massachusetts Field Station in Waltham, organized and presented a symposium on air pollution in Los Angeles. The symposium dealt with such issues as the effects of air pollution on agriculture, the chemical basis of the air pollution problem, and the effects of aerial toxicants on plants.

"Government Patronage of the Arts in Great Britain," a book by Prof. John S. Harris of the University of Massachusetts, is available from the University of Chicago Press.

Dr. Harris, who has been with the UMass government department on the Amherst campus since 1956, received a Rockefeller Foundation grant in 1967 to study government support of the arts. In the summer of 1969 he spent three months in Britain gathering material on this topic, one he felt was beginning to command attention in the United States.

Grants Awarded For Linguistic Research

Grants and fellowships for research in linguistics have been awarded to three in the University of Massachusetts linguistics program.

Richard A. Demers, assistant professor of linguistics, has been awarded a fellowship by the National Institutes of Health for a year of research in linguistic theory at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He will begin the year in September.

His research will center on the processes by which languages change in their sound structures. This summer Prof. Demers will do intensive field research in the structure of Lummi, a nearly extinct Indian language, under a grant from the UMass Research Council. His work will involve tape-recording and analyzing passages of the Lummi language from the few remaining native speakers, who live near Bellingham, Wash.

Prof. Demers, who last summer won a research fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities, holds his Ph.D from the University of Washington.

Karl M. Laine, a junior from Fitchburg, has been awarded a grant by the department of linguistics at Harvard University.

Under Harvard's summer research program in linguistics, supported by the National Science Foundation, Mr. Laine will investigate the history of Finnish syntax, in particular the extent to which Swedish, the second official language of Finland, has affected the structure of Finnish. The two languages are from two entirely different language families.

The American Council of Learned Societies has awarded Gary L. Bevington, assistant professor of linguistics, a $1000 grant for research in the sound structure of Albanian. With the support of this grant Prof. Bevington will spend this summer doing research at the Albanalogical Institute in Prishtine, Yugoslavia, a region of Yugoslavia where Albanian is spoken.

Prof. Bevington's research will build on the foundations of his doctoral dissertation, "Albanian Phonology," for which he was awarded the first Ph.D. degree in the University's new program in linguistics. He holds A.B. and M.A. degrees in German from Middlebury College, and will become an assistant professor of linguistics at Northeast Illinois State College in September.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Most astrological authorities associate Aries with the diamond. Aries persons generally have strong, confident voices. Handwriting of these natives is hurried — the letters "m" and "n" are seldom clearly written. Some famous persons born under Aries include Rick Barry, Jacques Brel and David Lean.

ARIES (March 2 April 19): Changes occur in legal, marital areas. Friend may become involved in romantic triangle. Be concerned, but avoid becoming unduly involved. Be aware of various possibilities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some tasks have to be handled in other than a routine manner. This is time for change, for testing and additional investigating. Affects job, relations with associates and co-workers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message. Many implications apply to your domestic situation. Children are spotlighted. Your ability to move with the time also is emphasized. Key is to be perceptive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Investments, loans — these come about through unorthodox procedures, events. One born under Pisces knows something that is not being revealed. Proceed with caution.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check legal aspects before taking direct action. You actually gain now by adhering to certain rules, restrictions. A too free-and-easy attitude could be costly, result in loss.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What seemed an expense that could never end, does so. You can cut yourself loose from burden. Key is faith, power of will. There is no need to carry weight not your own.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Personal magnetism soars. You are vibrant. Opposite sex is drawn to you. Be daring. Take a chance on your own judgment, abilities. Stress originality, added independence.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Activity of a confidential nature occurs in relation to home, property. Follow through on hunch. Check values. You may be in possession of valuable hole card. Proceed accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lively friends help stimulate ideas. Accept social invitation. Be with those who share your interests, aspirations. Romantic interlude is indicated. You are especially vibrant.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You obtain resources which are required for solid advancement. Collect necessary data. Be aware of details, apparent minor points. Accent on prestige, elevation of standing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be ready for change, variety of experiences, including travel. Unusual publication, educational material play key roles. A Virgo individual can set wonderful example. Observe, learn.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You make definite gains. You are able to utilize natural abilities. Greater recognition of efforts is result. You receive encouragement from one dear to you. Money will be forthcoming.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, your own severest critic. Goals are high; your principles take precedent. You now make numerous contacts, have a meaningful relationship. If single, you could be on road to alter. If married, a sharing of experiences could bring you closer to mate.

Symposium On Sports

An Interdisciplinary Symposium on Sport and Society will be conducted Friday and Saturday, May 7 and 8, at the University of Massachusetts as the Amherst campus hosts 25 scholars interested in the study of the phenomena of play, games and sport.

The scholars include historians, philosophers, physical educators, and sociologists.

Principal speakers Saturday from 9 to noon in room 231 of Herter Hall will be: Prof. Richard D. Mandell, University of South Carolina, "The Transformation of Sport in the Twentieth Century;" Prof. Pearl Berlin, UMass, "The Collegiate Woman Athlete: A Demographic Profile;" and Prof. Gregory P. Stone, visiting professor at the University of Rhode Island, "Hustlers and Athletes: A Comparative Examination of Their Stages of Socio-Economic Development."

The public and members of the UMass community are invited to hear these presentations.

Co-directors of the Symposium are Prof. Harold J. VanderZwaag, physical education, and Prof. Charles H. Page, sociology

Cheerleaders A Vital Force For UM Sports

By DENISE MAGNELL
MDC Staff

In groups of three, prospective cheerleaders line up in front of the current squad to be judged during tryouts. They have attended three practice sessions before tonight, prior to "first cuts." Cheerleading tryouts at UMass don't last one long afternoon as in high school. Rather, the tension is spread over a three-week period.

Out of the approximately forty girls who were present at the first practice session, only 19 have stayed with it until the first cut. Each shows her nervousness in a different way: by straightening out her jersey, tugging on a pigtail, or biting on her lower lip.

After each cheer---a group cheer ("Fi-yi-yi-yit...") and a couple of solo jumps is expected of each tryout---most place their hands back on their hips. A smile is advisable at all times.

The grouchy janitor who yells at anyone who dares to touch the trampoline in the auxiliary gym and seems to view every participant, including the reporter, as an intruder, doesn't help much to reduce the tension in the air.

Marie Romanus tried out this year and made the squad. At the first cutting session she had an idea of who had been cheerleaders in high school, as she had, and those who would almost certainly be eliminated in the initial trials. But of final cuts she said, "All of the ten girls there could have made the squad...every one was excellent...by now they had everything broken down to minute details."

With eleven returning cheerleaders next season, only four girls and one guy were chosen. Until this year only freshmen women were allowed to tryout, but every class was included this spring to give transfer students and those who had missed once, a chance. Ironically, all four girls selected are freshmen.

Most cheerleaders seem to agree that their activity is strictly an "individual enjoyment thing"; there is no prestige to be had as in high school where sports are of foremost importance. If anything, "people make you feel as though you're living in an ideal, rah-rah world...I wish the campus attitude wasn't so critical...and it's usually derogatory, not constructive criticism," says last year's captain, Ann Premierlano.

"They think it's a passing fancy when really it's a vital force to the team and coaches. In high school cheers are oriented towards getting people to cheer with you...up here kids stop when the team starts to fall behind," she added.

One of several males in the group, Bob Beecy views them as "sort of a storefront for the school, a role that a college has to supply; in reality they are just a group of people who enjoy sports...(the activity) isn't indicative of any social or political feelings."

Next season's captain Louise Lane cheers "for the school, I should hope, but now I find myself directing my efforts towards the team, to make the players feel someone cares. If we didn't care, we wouldn't be there."

She finds that the changing of the UMass campus into a "sensitivity-type, more political atmosphere", and a degree of resentment felt against athletes on campus doesn't help the attitude people hold about cheerleaders.

There was a good deal of bad feeling against the cheerleaders last year particularly because, as Ann Premierlano puts it, "the squad wasn't unified...there were only three of us who went to all the games. But we gained some respect back this year and I think now it will get better."

As captain, Ann allowed no unexcused cuts on games, which most likely became the key to improved attendance. And the new "dance routines", an idea originated by Coach Leaman, brought new attention from basketball fans. Patterned after squads like Boston College and UConn, this new style had to be coordinated with the band and completely choreographed by the cheerleaders themselves.

Most fans don't realize that there were actually four different routines this year at the games, because there were only two songs to work with. Next year they (cheerleaders) anticipate 7 or 8 dance patterns and more music to fit them. The new captain realizes she has to take into consideration that not everyone in the group is a dance major like herself, and is therefore limited to certain basic steps.

If the interest of girls in cheerleading activities is declining (40 tried out this year in comparison to close to 100 just three years ago), the interest of men is reaching a critical point. Bob Beecy, a fraternity member of Phi Sigma Kappa, tries to stir up among Greeks but finds that "most men think it beneath them to try out for cheerleading...anyone you do get is usually by word-of-mouth." He became a cheerleader himself because he wanted to be more than just another spectator.

Sharing the same sentiment is Ralph Esterman who "felt I could contribute more from the field than the stands...it may seem unneeded but really does lend some inspiration."

"In football, we're essentially the only ones who cheer," he continued, "and when we're losing people dissociate themselves from the game and keep their mouths shut altogether."

Along with the fun of cheering comes the feeling of representing the school and "usually a sore throat," he added.

Esterman looks forward to having more dance routines next year "so the fans won't get bored." Although the men may not be taking part in the dances themselves he feels they are "still needed for voice and spirit support...maybe a comedy routine could be worked out for the guys...I'm sure we could fit in some way...there should be a place for us and I think there is."

When people try out for cheerleading, they are marked on voice, form, spirit, attitude, momentum, and jumps as well as other more specific qualities depending on the cheer. It's a lot to think about when you're standing in that line of three.

Netmen Topple Chiefs; Play at N.E.'s Today

MDC Staff

SPRINGFIELD—Springfield wanted the match badly. If the Chiefs netmen had upset the Yankee Conference Champions it would have made their season, but the Redman squad of seven pulled through 7-2, amidst some unbelievably close contests.

With the New Englands beginning this afternoon at Williams UMass worked out at the expense of Springfield. The hosts kept the match tight throughout the singles contests, but the doubles broke it wide open.

John "The Boomer" Bloom opened the affair with a 7-5, 6-4 win. Bloom has been the Redmen's ace consistent performer all year long and it was only fitting that he was the first victorious Redman. With his blistering serve and his even powerful forehand stroking his opposition to death, Bloom had earned what looked for a long time to be the only UMass point in singles.

As Robert Webman dropped a tight three setter, 1-6, 6-3, 6-3, Steve Ferber and Mark Brass were having two humdingers. First it was Brass who had swept through his opponent easily in set number one. Then after dropping his second set he found down to the tune of 5-3 in the third. But four games later Brass had earned the Redmen their second point of the day in a great comeback match.

But if Brass' comeback effort was great, Ferber's would have to be termed remarkable. After stumbling through the first set, losing it 6-3, he seemed to find himself at the start of number two. But when game number 10 rolled around his opponent was leading five games to four and had reeled off the first three points of the game. With three match points in his possession the Springfield player choked them away only to earn one more chance at the match. For the fourth time in the game Ferber held on and 12 games later the 3-6, 7-5 6-3 match was won by the Redmen's fourth singles man.

Alan Goldberg, looking sharper every day, ran through his first singles opponent 6-1, 6-1 with narry a flaw, and it was Goldberg and Brass who clinched the fifth point as UMass dropped Springfield to an overall mark of 5-4.

Bloom and Coffin, the unstoppable duo at second doubles did another job on their opposition, this time wiping them out 6-0, 6-1 in spectacular fashion. Then Ferber and Webman teamed at third doubles, as Braley sat on the sidelines due to a severe back injury he had incurred up in Orono just three days earlier. Webman and Ferber took the pro set 10-7 and departed from the home of the Chiefs in their last away match of the year.

The New Englands approach, and Bloom and Coffin look like UMass' best bet to place this year. The netmen aren't tremendously hopeful of placing high in the New Englands, as the Ivy teams and the likes of Wesleyan and Amherst will provide today's strength at Williams.

Bloom and Coffin looked sharp in their final warmup against Springfield and it is likely that they will be seeded. As for singles, Bloom will be moving up to the number two slot, as Coffin will occupy the sixth position for the first time this season.

Goldberg will naturally be the Redmen's top man and coming off of a strong Yankee Conference win, and an impressive victory in the Springfield match, it is hard to say just how far he might go.

Ferber, Braley and Brass will fill out the squad, all playing one position higher than in last week's Conference tourney. With Goldberg and Brass pairing up at first doubles, the combo of Braley and Ferber will be in the third slot and neither prospect looks hopeful, although anything can happen.

UMass' best hope would be to finish somewhere in the top ten in New England, and if they do that, the netmen can be more than proud of their 1971 season.

JV Nine Rips Leicester, 10-0

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

An explosive nine run first inning by a rejuvinated UMass JV nine, enabled the yearlings to finally reach the .500 level with a convincing 10-0 shutout over visiting Leicester Junior College yesterday afternoon.

Starter Ed Kurr hurled the first six frames flawlessly as the hard throwing righty was touched for only a pair of harmless singles. Kurr took the cue early as he went on to mow down the first ten hitters he faced. Southpaw Eric Levine finished up allowing only a pair of baseknocks as Kurr's save and the whitewash were preserved easily.

The shell that shrouded the UMass bats broke without warning yesterday. Before the dust had settled in the home half of the first, a dozen Redmen went to the dish and promptly produced nine runs on six hits. For all intents and purposes the contest was over.

To recap it all Ken Brewer and Bill Moran quickly slammed singles to center. Winchester Woollard, who was two out of four Tuesday, kept his bat afire with a two run double to left. But with one down, Larry Heron singled to right and Ken Stuart walked to jam the bases.

Ed Hamel then worked starter McEwen for a free pass forcing in run number three. Rich Farney then delivered the first of his three safties, a two run single to right. Ed Kurr then slapped a single to right for run number six while one out stood between the visitors and their busride.

The visitors then made their western trip a chore with a trio of errors good for three more runs. When you score nine in the first, you really don't feel the need to rub it in. So the hosts relaxed and hit double digits with a tally in the fourth.

Ed Hamel walked, reached on a Farney single and a fielders choice, and scored on a passed ball. Having expended all their energy in the first frame, the yearlings finished the contest with 10 runs on 11 hits in a free-lancing home affair.

While the offense gets the ink, due credit shall be awarded Kurr and Levine. The duo offered only four singles, fanned 8 (Levine 5), and did not walk a man. Only on two occasions did the visitors put runners in scoring positions, but both threats went by the board rather mildly.

Farney, in his first start of the year, banged out three hits to pace the winners. Woollard, not to be denied, poked a pair as the Little Redmen solidly backed the slants of winner Kurr and Levine.

UMass, now 4-4 overall, returns to action tomorrow when it squares off in a twin bill against Springfield College beginning at 1.

Bosox Rout Chicago; Peters, Griffin Star

CHICAGO (AP—The Boston Red Sox took advantage of six Chicago errors and breezed to a 10-1 victory over the White Sox yesterday while Gary Peters scattered seven hits.

Besides the errors the White Sox also let a pop fly fall for a double by Luis Aparcio that triggered a two-run first inning. Rico Petrocelli's double knocked in the runs.

George Scott, who later left the game with a wrenched back, hit his third home run in the fourth, and Doug Griffin doubled across another run in the inning.

Two singles in the seventh chased starter Bart Johnson, but errors by Rich Reichardt, Bill Melton and Tom Egan were responsible or the two runs that followed. Aparcio's two-run single highlighted a four-run eighth.

The White Sox spoiled Peters' bid for a shutout by scoring on three singles and Mike Andrews' infield out in the sixth inning.

YER OUT—Red Sox second baseman Doug Griffin tags out the man he replaced Mike Andrews, now with the White Sox, in yesterday's 10-1 Boston romp over Chicago. Griffin had a big day at the plate with three hits including a run scoring double in the big Red Sox fourth inning. The Sox are now 15-8 and remain a full game ahead of the Baltimore Orioles in the American League East. (AP Photo)

Redmen Slug Crusaders, 14-1

Big Twinbill Tomorrow At UNH

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

The big question before the game yesterday was whether Holy Cross pitching sensation Mike Pazik would be able to stop the hard-hitting Redmen. As it turned out, Pazik never took the mound, and instead lefty Dan Leyden started for the Crusaders and got shelled as UMass romped over the Cross, 14-1 at Earl E. Lorden. The Redmen now stand at 16-4 while the Crusaders dropped to 5-7.

It took UMass three innings before they finally figured out the junk that Leyden was throwing. Relying on mostly breaking stuff, the lefty baffled the Redmen batters until the third when they picked up two runs on a walk to Steve Newell, a triple by Charley Manley, and a base hit by Ed McMahon.

Meanwhile, big Tom Austin, making his first start of the season, was breezing along, mowing down the Crusader batters who might have been better off using yard-sticks the way they were hitting.

UMass broke open the game in the fourth inning with a five run outburst that chased Leyden. The home team collected five hits in the frame with the two big ones a two-run double by McMahon and a two-run single by Newell.

With the score now 7-0, the only interest was watching Austin unravel his big frame before releasing the ball. The slim 6'9 righthander takes about five seconds during his motion to unwind his arms and legs. The Holy Cross hitters must also have been watching his motion because it didn't appear as though they were watching the ball.

Holy Cross did not collect its first hit until the sixth inning when Paul Bendik beat out a ground ball deep in the hole at short. The only other hit off Austin was a single by Tony Konieczny in the same frame.

The Daily Collegian
SPORTS

With Austin's no-hit bid by the board, Coach Bergquist, going according to original plan, brought in Lou Colabello to mop up the last three innings. The senior left-thander gave up the only Holy Cross run in the eighth inning on a walk and two singles. Colabello was throwing hard, however, and displayed a fine curve ball. He struck out five men in his three innings of pitching while Austin recorded six K's in his six inning stint.

The eighth Redman run came in the seventh when catcher Billy Ryan rifled a pitch by Dave Lusigan on a line over the 375 mark in left center. It was his second homer of the year.

Then in the eighth inning, UMass prolonged the agony for the visitors by pouring across six runs on seven hits as they batted around the order. Hosea Kelly collected two of his three hits in the eighth Mound Matter: The game added up to not much more than an exhibition against the weak Holy Cross club. The bright spots obviously were the hitting (15 hits in all) and the pitching by Austin and Colabello who have not been used much during the season but showed they can get the opposition out...Charley Manley continued his torrid hitting with three hits, including two triples, and three RBI's...McMahon also had three runs batted in for the contest while Newell led the team in that department by knocking in four runs....

UMASS AT NEW HAMPSHIRE — Now riding an eleven game win skein the Redman baseball team goes up against its toughest opposition on its road to the UConn showdown when it travels to Durham tomorrow for a doubleheader with the Wildcats beginning at 12:30 p.m.

New Hampshire has been on a tear as of late and pulled off a major upset last Saturday when it knocked UConn from the unbeaten ranks and the top of the Yankee Conference with a 3-2 win behind the strong pitching of sophomore Paul Cormier who the Redmen can expect to see tomorrow.

In the first meeting between these two teams at Lorden Field the Redmen jumped on the Wildcats for a big early lead but had to stave off a rally by the Wildcats before coming away with the 10-6 win.

UNH has a good bunch of hitters to throw at Tom White and Tom King who will pick for the Redmen. Three of the top five hitters in the conference are from UNH. Tim Marcoux is second behind Mark Palau with a .407 average. Pete Dresser is third at .405 and Jeff Trundy is fifth at .371. Marcoux also had a double and a triple against UConn.

This shapes up as a good twin bill with the Redmen needing both ends to stay on top of the league and UConn wanting revenge from their first loss and another feather to put in its cap in its roll as "Giant Killer."

Trackmen Stunned By Indians; Host Boston College Tomorrow

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Tomorrow afternoon marks the return of another rivalry to the UMass campus when the Redman tracksters take on the New England Team Champion in Boston College at the Olympic track. The action will start at 1:00 with the throwing events while the running events are scheduled to go off at 2:00.

BC comes into the meet with a superior group of individuals who are capable of winning another New England title. BC gets some of its greatest satisfaction from defeating a UMass team, and tomorrow should be no different. The Eagles are always up for this meet, and should be more than ready for tomorrow as they are coming off a third place finish in the Greater Boston Championships in which they recorded some impressive individual results.

The Redmen come into the meet with a solid 6-2 record, but are coming off a stunning defeat to Dartmouth last Wednesday up in Hanover. Dartmouth ran up a total of 91-1/2 points while UMass totaled 73-1/2 points. Syracuse was never in contention in the tri-meet, and rounded out the scoring with 24 points.

The defeat was especially hard to take as UMass swept Dartmouth 74-31 in an earlier indoor meet. The loss also snapped the Redman winning streak at five.

Coach O'Brien felt that the team was not in the right frame of mind for the Dartmouth meet. He further reiterated by saying that the team had a lazy attitude toward the meet.

The Redmen will be out to regain the momentum that they lost against Dartmouth. It is essential for the team's success that they regain their momentum at this time because of the Rhode Island meet next Tuesday, and the all important Yankee Conference Championships which will be held at UMass next Saturday.

The Redmen have been involved in some exciting battles this season, but Coach O'Brien said, "This is the closest meet we will have this year. The margin of victory will not be more than four or five points."

HARRIS AT THE WIRE—Redman speedster Ron Harris outclasses 220 yard field in last week's Redman romp over UConn. Tomorrow he has the stiffest challenge of his campaign against Tom Schneider of B.C. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

This point is further substantiated by the fact that within the last two weeks UMass and BC have faced an identical opponent in Holy Cross, and almost recorded identical scores in the final result. UMass defeated Holy Cross by 21 points while BC downed Holy Cross by a 22 point margin.

BC's Tom Schneider will be one of the outstanding performers in the meet. He recently won the 100 and 220 in the Greater Boston Championships as he outdueled BU's Ford Dennis. Dennis holds the UMass record in the 100 with a 9.6 clocking. Tony Pendleton and Ron Harris will provide Schneider stiff competition in the 100 and 220.

The 440 relay, the first running event of the meet, will provide a good indicator of things to come in the meet. Both teams have been timed in 42.7 with the five points proving valuable in the final result.

Ed Shaughnessy, who has been competing with two hamstring pulls and a sprained ankle, will again provide the bulk of the scoring in the jumping events. John Kamb and John Hiller who have shown great promise in the pole vault in the last couple of weeks could make a difference in the jumping events.

BC's Charlie Diehl is the New England mile champ, and will be backed up by Vin Catano. The UMass duo of Doug O'Connell and Tom Jasmin will handle the distance events for the Redmen.

If the Redmen are to come out on top tomorrow, they will have to dominate the throwing events which are possible BC's only weakness. Eddie Arcaro appeared to have regained his hammer throw form in the Dartmouth meet, and should be the favorite in the hammer and the shotput.

Gorillas At Home Vs. UNH

By HOWIE BLOOM
MDC Staff

Tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock the UMass lacrosse team begins the final stage of its preparation for the big one against Brown as they host the University of New Hampshire in their last home game of the season. After their thriller against Amherst on Wednesday, the Redmen will be taking no chances against a Wildcat club that boasts a number of fine players.

At the attack position are a high scoring trio who, themselves, have scored 24 goals already this season. Jimmy Heard, Kent Stephenson, and Rob McCarthy are the Wildcats' top three attackemn and should be doing most of New Hampshire's shooting at Gorilla goalie Bruce Crawford.

The team's leading scorer this year, with 12 goals and 11 assists is center midfielder, Kim Sprague. Sprague likes to run and dodge a lot, so he could be trouble for the UMass defense.

The Wildcats currently cannot boast a record of 3-4, and Garber's Gorillas have played a lot of teams this season who are a great deal better than UNH. New Hampshire has wins over Holy Cross (21-6), Norwich (18-2), and Simmons College (14-13). Their four losses came at the hands of Boston University (22-0), University of Connecticut (18-0), Curry College (19-1), and Yeshiva University (2-1).

As far as the Redmen are concerned, they must win this game to have the match against Brown next week mean anything. As far as the University of New Hampshire is concerned, they couldn't.

Crewmen Row At Philly

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

The tournament Eastern crews have been working for all season takes place today and tomorrow on Philadelphia's Schuykill River. UMass crews' finale, the Dad Vail Regatta, determines the national champions of small colleges and college clubs east of the Mississippi. The Redmen, seeking to maintain or improve their last year's fourth place Vail finish, will have their work cut out for them, as the field of competitors is much stronger this time around.

"The quality of Vail crews has greatly increased this year, and pressures will be upon us even more that we are not in a favorite role like last year," said coach Mike Faherty. "Where the varsity has not rowed a really good race all year, they will be feeling pressured the most."

With 35 varsity and 26 jv crews entered, preliminary heats for these two divisions will take place today. Tomorrow morning there are semi-final rounds for all events, and in the afternoon the final competition. So, in effect, a team can race three times in a space of 24 hours.

"This is quite an ordeal," Faherty commented. "In every race we have to row to win -- there is no play for position -- so we have to be very sharp. Often it also takes a break to win, for instance, what lane you draw, or who your competition is and how hard they push you to row. If you row rather easily Saturday morning, you have a better chance later on in the day."

In the second scheduled heat today at 1:45, the UMass varsity eight face Virginia, Manhattan, Worcester Polytech, and LaSalle. The first three finishers are sent to the semi-finals.

"The freshmen have to go in as tough a heat as any in the regatta, and have to go in with an exceptional effort. I am optimistic about all our chances. The four and jv's have been rowing extremely well, and I expect a lot from the varsity," closed Coach Faherty.

Tomorrow WMUA, 91:1 fm will be covering the second game of the big doubleheader between UMass and New Hampshire. Air time is approximately 3 p.m. with Roy Gustafson calling the action

Gay Confronts Phil Ochs

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Towards the end of the free concert yesterday afternoon Jonathan Edwards did a number of foot-stomping, revival meeting songs that, given another atmosphere, might have brought religion back into style. The reaction from the audience in the Campus Center Auditorium, where the concert was forced to happen thanks to our miserable weather, was rather subdued. It was as if the confrontation between Phil Ochs and the Gay Liberation had given the remaining part of the afternoon a certain aura, a feeling almost of depression and people either went somewhere else or remained behind not truly knowing just how to feel.

People had come to listen to the music, and they did hear some excellent and varied sets from three folksingers of some distinction. Newcomer, Ron Gamache started the afternoon. Phil Ochs later remarked that nearly everyone these days sounds like James Taylor and Gamache easily fits in this genre. His voice is mellow yet strong and his stage number is low-keyed and unassuming. Many in the crowded auditorium probably never had heard of this new singer and came away most pleased with his performance.

Most people had come to hear Phil Ochs. Ochs has been since the early Sixties, the intellectual political folk singer. Long before lyrics on album covers were in vogue, Ochs' were studied and his meanings and comic ironies were taken quite seriously. While Dylan was something of the poet of our generation, Ochs was the cynic who held the mirror up and showed us what we looked like though songs of slashing social satire.

Ochs intended on doing something of a overview of his work beginning with the early Sixties. His early songs included the beautiful "There But For Fortune", a song erroneously thought written by Joan Baez, and his stirring "I Ain't A Marchin' Anymore." All this material was greeted with a genuinely warm response.

Between numbers Ochs joked around a bit. At one point making little ironic witicisms about Bob Hope and Anita Bryant to the genuine enjoyment of most in attendance. It was part of his stage manner and he was obviously successful

Amherst Group Raises $10,000

Students Walk For Development

Braving the cold rains which poured all day on the march route, over 350 people from Amherst, mostly Junior and Senior High School students, sloshed 14.9 miles along the Amherst streets as part of the nation-wide "March for Development," yesterday, earning an estimated $10,000.

The marchers started at UMass's Alumni Stadium at 8:00 A.M. in a constant downpour which kept the number of marchers well below the predicted 750.

There was a particular lack of UMass students. One tired but satisfied UMass marcher estimated that only 40 UMies made the march, which was forced to end early because of the inclement weather.

A sandy-haired UMass co-ed whose sagging eyelids showed the weariness of 15 wet miles commented that "even though, it seemed like an endless walk while we were on the road, it was a lot of fun."

As many as four million persons around the world-from statesmen to hippies and children-trekked miles for dollars. The money went to feed the world's hungry.

Marchers in 600 cities of 50 countries covered at least 10 million miles. In some cities, such as Accra in Ghana, the walking began Friday.

Hundreds of thousands-most of them young-marched yesterday in cities across the United States. Spokesmen said more than 487,000 Americans walked in 92 communities yesterday compared with another 150,000 who turned out in 113 towns and cities Saturday.

Marchers raised approximately $5.1 million in the two days of hiking around the U.S. the spokesmen said. Their goal was $5.5. million.

In Rome, groups set off 800 at a time. That's symbolic of the 800 deaths the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization says occur in the world from hunger every hour.

The world-wide walk was organized by the Freedom-From-Hunger campaign of the U.N. agency, which has its headquarters in Rome.

The walkers raised money with their sore feet and aching backs from "sponsors", who promised to pay anything from 10 cents to many dollars for each mile walked.

A pet boa constrictor, several high school track teams and an estimated 200,000 teen-agers hiked yesterday in Chicago and its suburbs. Friends and neighbors of the teen-age owner of the boa constrictor had pledged $21 for each mile of a 30lmile route the snake slithered.

The sheriff of Lake City, Ill., challenged the mayor to complete a 30-mile walk. And in Minneapolis, Minnesota's two Democratic senators, Hubert Humphrey and Walter Mondale, spoke to 20,000 persons before they began a march through Minneapolis and St. Paul.

In Rome, tons of thousands of singing, chanting walkers were rewarded for their 16-mile hike through winding streets with a special greeting from Pope Paul VI in St. Peter's Square.

The Pope praised the initiative as "an eloquent sign of a new conscience maturing in the world."

The hikers had started off with words of praise messaged by U.S. Secretary-General U. Thant. He lauded "this constructive people's movement to mobilize world public opinion in favor of actions on all levels to eliminate hunger and poverty wherever they exist on earth."

About 1,800 students and young people marched 13 miles in New Rochelle, N.Y.

It looked as if the faceless thieves had struck again, skulking off with more of our precious Campus Center cushions. But they only took them as far as the Jonathan Edwards concert yesterday afternoon, and after all, the floor of the Student Union Ballroom is pretty hard. They even returned them afterwards. Cance Students Suggest Dorm Pet Guidelines

The students right to keep a pet without infringing on other students rights is the basis of the proposal initiated in Cance House.

After conferring with Dean of Students William Field, Environmental Health and the Infirmary the Cance students completed a proposal which they have presented to their area coordinator, John Robinson, for final acceptance.

The proposal requires that both roommates register the pet at registration and that the pet wear a name tag. Each dorm will have a quota of pets and these pets must be strictly supervised at all times.

The proposal also contains provisions for those that are allergic to pets. If a resident is allergic to a pet, the pet owner is the resident that is required to move.

The proposal is purposely strict, yet the students of Cance hope that some of the provisions will eventually be dropped.

The students of Cance noted that this proposal is designed only for Cance, and it is hoped that other dorms will follow Cance and write their own pet proposals.

Focus Examines Overpopulation

Tonight at 10 P.M. WMUA's "Focus" program will feature a discussion of the present crisis developing from overpopulation.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests for tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be members of the local chapter of Zero Population Growth, a political action organization whose purpose is to bring about population stability in the United States and the rest of the world.

According to one pamphlet distributed by Zero Population Growth: "In the United States, population threatens the quality of our lives, but in much of the world, population threatens life itself. At present the world's population is doubling every 37 years. This means that by the year 2000 there will be two people competing for the air, space and food that one person now claims as his own."

Tonight's discussion will examine some urgent problems related to overpopulation--pollution, traffic congestion, a critical shortage of natural resources, and others--and offer some possible solutions to these problems.

Sailing, Anymore?

A meeting will be held tomorrow night at 7 in Room 174 of the Campus Center for anyone interested in organizing a Sailing Club at UMass.

The meeting, which will be open to expert, beginner, and non-sailors alike will be primarily organizational, with the possibility of developing a summer program in sailing.

Cap And Gown, Commencement Details

Members of the Class of 1971 and all Graduate students intending to participate in the University's 1971 Commencement Exercises on Sunday, May 30, may secure their caps and gowns starting May 12, at the Student Union Check Room.

The hours in which caps and gowns will be distributed are:

May 12-14	8:30 AM-4:30 PM
May 17-21	8:30 AM-4:30 PM
May 24-28	8:30 AM-9:00 PM

The Commencement Exercises will be held at the Alumni Stadium, there will be no limit set on the number of guests. In case of rain, the Graduate school and the College of Arts and Sciences will hold their exercises in Curry Hicks Cage. All other schools will be in Boyden Gym. Admission will be on a first come first served basis.

Seniors who wish to reserve on-campus accomodations for their parents or guests for the night of May 29, should contact the Accommodations Office at the Campus Center-549-6000.

Student, Labor Coalition Weekend Meeting Topic

"Labor and Students: the Possibilities of Coalition", was the topic of a conference sponsored by the Young People's Socialist League and the Western Massachusetts A. Philip Randolph Institute in the Hampshire Room of the Student Union, last Saturday.

Last weekend's conference provided an opportunity for students and other Socialists in the Massachusetts area to come together to express and listen to each other's views.

In the morning, a panel discussion on the possibilities of a coalition between labor and student movements was presented. The conference then reverted to a workshop format to deal with issues concerning ecology and the labor movement.

The keynote speaker of the conference was Exarim Kohak, presently a Professor of philosophy at BU. Kohak, a native of Czechoslovakia, was active in the Czeck Socialist Party until that organization was disbanded by the Communists. He was later forced to flee his homeland, and eventually came to reside in the US.

In his speech, Kohak outlined a three point plan on which to base American foreign policy. He stated that, "the United States is a revolutionary influence in the world, simply by its presence." Underdeveloped nations look up to America because of its relative abundance of freedom and affluence. A major goal of many poor nations is to achieve a standard of living similar to that of the US or Europe, Kohak stated.

The speaker felt that the US, in evolving its foreign policy philosophy, should assess this country's impact on 1) the people, (individual human beings), of the world, 2) governments of other countries, and 3) relations to the two other super powers of the world, Russia and China.

Developing these ideas, Kohak added, "the US should distinguish between the law that protects the freedom of the people and the law that protects the freedom of vested interests." US policy should be more responsive to the desires of the people of a country rather than the corporations that run that country. Vietnam was cited as an example.

Concerning his second thesis, Kohak emphasized that an economic boycott or the discontinuing of trade relations "has proved ineffective in bringing about the downfall of a totalitarian regime." Instead Kohak felt the more contact the US has with a country ruled by totalitarianism, the greater the possibility of weakening that regime. The US could bring about dissatisfaction of the ruling regime, primarily by exposing the people to a government that would give them more voice in their affairs than the present existing one did.

Kohak concluded with his third point, dealing with international relations between the super powers. He feels that the US has a great amount of levering power in the world today. Kohak sees the strongest prospects for peace in the development and strengthening of both Russia, China and all independent states of the world. The independant states would serve as buffer zones, to stabilize relations between all three super powers.

A short discussion period followed in which Kohak's plan was analyzed by the members of the audience.

Members attending the conference included representatives from the A. Philip Randolph Institute, the United Farm Worker's Union, the United Steel Worker's Union, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the Union of Campus Employees and several student representatives from other colleges in the Massachusetts area.

UMass Coed Describes Mayday Action

By R. RAINSFORD
MDC Staff

Myra Paull, an Interior Design major in the School of Home Economics, gave an eyewitness account of the Washington anti-war demonstrations last week and branded them a double success: first, in that the business of Washington was effectively slowed despite media coverage to the contrary and secondly in that it painted a clear picture to many politically uncommitted witnesses of the degree of "creeping Fascism" now openly visible in the present U.S. Government.

"The methods of arrest were just like Nazi Germany," Miss Paull said. "You take it for granted that if you disrupt traffic by lying in the street you'll get busted. But that's not what happened to most of these kids. We'd be walking along the sidewalk quietly in a group of two or three literally doing nothing and a police bus would pull up to the curb. Suddenly, out come twenty cops and arrest the whole group for littering, loitering, vagrancy or some other stupid charge. One fellow was arrested for carrying a gas mask. I saw these wholesale arrests over and again. Afterwards, no one was informed of his rights and bails of $200 were common. My boy friend got busted and put in a compound with thousands of others. Once the cops lobbed a gas grenade into the compound."

Miss Paull pointed out a deep division of loyalty among the police. "There were Pigs, of course," she said, "A lot of cops like brutality and sadism. A uniform legitimatizes it. But one nice cop told me he wished he could be marching beside us. I asked him why he wasn't and he told me that hundreds of Washington law officers are Viet Nam veterans who are relieved of active battle duty nine months early if they agree to become policemen.

Miss Paull pointed out the extreme courteousness of the Washington citizens. "Many homes were open to us," she said, "Food was provided by the People's Coalition and private donations.

Room To Move, Free U. Present People's Weekend

Beginning Thursday, May 13 with Fourth World Reality...Mental--Movies...Towards Cosmic Conciousness.

This is a group of experimental films along the same lines as those in the CINEMAGIC film show which was sponsored by R.T.M. last month. These films are tripped out, flipped out, and free and are being shown on Thursday at 1:00, 3:00, 7:00, and 9:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

At 11:00 a.m. on Saturday the R.T.M. softball squad will rear its mighty head against, (guess who?), the Campus Police. This dazzling display of athletic derring-do will take place on the intramural fields behind Boyden. It might be a pretty strange game.

At 1:00 p.m. on Saturday at the campus pond there will be lots of free music, a sale of hand crafted goods by area artists and craftsman, and ample supplies of brown rice, bread, and apple cider (there will be a nominal charge for the food). The music will go until about 9:00.

At 11:00 on Sunday everyone is invited to come down to the pond and fly a kite until the festivities organically flow into more music, crafts, and food for the remainder of Sunday afternoon and early evening.

Dr. Ashley Montagu

Ashley Montagu Speaks Tonight In Ballroom

"The Natural Superiority of Women" will be the topic of Dr. Ashley Montagu tonight at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, in a DVP-Sponsored speech.

Dr. Montagu is a prolific writer, having produced more than twenty books on various aspects of anthropology and race. By far his most famous work, "The Natural Superiority of Women," is based upon a solid foundation of scientific fact. It provoked much good-natured controversy and climbed to the best-seller list. An earlier book, "On Being Human," was called "the education Bible of the year" by the National Education Association. Among Dr. Montagu's other works are "Man's Most Dangerous Myth: The Fallacy of Race" and "The Humanization of Man."

English-born and American by choice by 1940, Dr. Montagu was educated at the University of London and earned his doctorate in anthropology at Columbia University in 1937. He has been Chairman of the Department of Anthropology at Rutgers University and Visiting Lecturer on Sociology at Harvard.

Among his other positions, Dr. Montagu has been a consultant on anthropological problems to UNESCO, and has worked extensively in the field of race problems. In 1948, he led an expedition to Kent, England in search of Palaeolithic Man and there uncovered many Stone Age artifacts. He was producer and director of the film, "One World or None," which The NYU Bureau of Public Opinion called "the best documentary ever made."

Senate Pay Vetoed

Student Senate officers will not be paid as a result of the referendum voted Thursday in dorms all over the campus.

A total of 3,683 votes was necessary to meet the 25% requirement. The total number of votes reported at the time the MDC went to press was 3869. Only four dorms had not phoned in their results. These were Coolidge lower, Coolidge upper, JF Kennedy Middle and George Washington lower.

On question one, shall the senate officers be paid, the vote was 1429 in favor and 2445 opposed.

Question two, shall next years senate officers be paid at this rate, polled 1113 in favor and 2642 opposed.

In The Nation And The World

"Mass Psychotherapy" Suggested For Nations

CHICAGO (AP)-A California psychiatrist suggests that one way of dealing with world problems might be "mass psychotherapy" for nations.

Dr Bryant Wedge, director of the Institute for the Study of National Behavior at San Diego, says recent work he has done indicates mass psychotherapy also might assist in bringing other conflicting groups such as motorcycle gangs and police, closer together.

But very few psychiatrists have had the courage to move from the comfort of the consulting room and enter into dialogue with strange groups," says Wedge, a participant over the weekend in an international conference on social psychiatry at Northwestern University in Chicago and Forest Hospital in suburban Des Plaines.

The conference of the American Society for Social Psychiatry was cosponsored by the host institutions and the Illinois Department of Mental Health.

Wedge said that by intereeding in conflicts between groups, the psychiatrist or another similarly trained person can reduce the duration and severity of conflict.

He said sessions in the Dominican Republic enabled the government and revolutionaries to work out differences over treatment of political minorities.

As for national mass psychotherapy, Wedge said psychiatrists could meet first with leaders or representatives of one group or nation, and then with representatives of the other involved in the conflict.

Once the feelings of both sides had been communicated to the intervening third party, the two sides could be brought together and led into a discussion of how to solve the existing differences.

He said the technique might be successful in solving the border dispute between Egypt and Israel in the Middle East.

McGovern Defends Airline Pilot

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., has accused J. Edgar Hoover of violating the law in an attempt to discredit an airline pilot who criticized the FBI.

McGovern demanded a Senate investigation into the case which involved the Trans-World Airlines pilot whose plane was hijacked from Los Angeles to Rome.

The senator and presidential aspirant said Charles C. Tillinghast, Jr., chairman of the board of TWA, confirmed that Hoover wrote the airline about the Air Force record of the pilot, Donald J. Cook, Jr.

Cook had criticized FBI action during the Raphael Minichiello hijacking on Nov. 1, 1969.

Cook criticized an FBI attempt to block the hijacking while the plane was refueling in New York, saying it was "a prescription for getting the entire crew killed and the plane destroyed." When he first complained about the case three weeks ago, McGovern said Hoover responded with an attempt "to destroy the career of Capt. Cook."

McGovern said Tillinghast wrote [illegible] Hoover's intervention. "Following the incident in question, we received a communication from Mr. Hoover touching, among other things, on Capt. Cook's difficulties in the Air Force prior to his employment with TWA," Tillinghast said.

A McGovern aide said the difficulty involved Cook's Air Force flight training record.

"Our response to Mr. Hoover noted that TWA did not concur with the remarks attributed to Capt. Cook but took no position with respect to his record with the airline," Tillighast wrote McGovern. "In fact, however, Captain Cook's record as a TWA pilot has been entirely satisfactory."

Tillinghast declined to give McGovern a copy of the Hoover letter, but said he would do so in response "to an appropriate subpoena."

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., meanwhile defended Hoover and the FBI. He said attacks in the news media and "by politically ambitious individuals" is designed "to force Hoover out of his job as FBI director."

Hughes Ready For Pres Campaign

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP)-Sen. Harold E. Hughes, D-Iowa, conceded Sunday night that "there's a long way to go yet" for him to be elected president. He is considered a Democratic nominee for president.

Asked if his staff has the expertise to go on to a presidential campaign Hughes replied: "No doubt about it." His staff consists almost entirely of Iowans.

Hughes has been suggested as a possible running mate for Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine. He said, "I am not interested in the vice-presidency."

Commenting on the process of candidate slection, Hughes expressed the view that the Democratic party is opening up. "We'll see a different complexion, including women, at the next convention," he predicted.

Hughes hinted at a possible issue in the 1972 campaign, narcotics addiction. "Importation of heroin," he said, "reaches into the dark recesses of organized crime."

He outlined a three-prong attack on the problem, including more personnel for drug control and a medical approach. "Addicts," he said, "perform criminal acts to feed their sickness."

Hughes appeared on the WTEV Channel 6 Washington Profile program.

HANDSHAKE IN JERUSALEM—Secretary of State William P. Rogers shakes hands with white-haired David Ben-Gurion, first premier of Israel, in Jerusalem Thursday. Rogers arrived in Israel from Cairo on the last leg of his Mideast mission. (AP Wirephoto)

Rogers Returns From Mideast

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers returned from his two-week, Mideast peace-seeking mission saying there has been some narrowing of differences between Arabs and Israelis.

Rogers told newsmen upon his arrival at Andrews Air Force Base: "I think the differences between the parties has narrowed some and I think both sides generally would like to move toward peace."

A different sounding report came from Cairo where a Rogers' aide had conferred for four hours earlier in the day.

An Egyptian spokesman said after the meeting between Assistant Secretary of State Joseph Sisco and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, "There is no change in the situation...the differences continue to be great between the Egyptian and Israeli views."

Nevertheless, Rogers told newsmen at the air base, Sisco's quick trip had been useful and the Cairo government is giving very careful study to the views presented by Sisco.

Sisco flew to the Egyptian capital Saturday to pass on details of Israeli terms for reopening the Suez Canal picked up by Rogers in two days of talks with Jerusalem leaders.

All in all, Rogers said, "I am somewhat more encouraged" about the Mideast situation than when he left on the 18,000-mile trip.

Rogers' mission in the last two weeks focused particularly on the possibilities of an Egyptian-Israeli deal to re-open the Suez Canal as a first step toward a general Mideast settlement.

His last stop between returning to the United States and a report Monday to President Nixon was Italy.

Currency Revalued By Four European Nations

Four strong-currency nations in Western Europe, beset by inflation they blame on a glut of U.S. dollars, made their money worth more yesterday in comparison with American currency. Switzerland's finance minister said America's "easy money policy" has created inflation throughout the world.

Switzerland revalued its franc upward by 7 per cent. It was the strongest move against the dollar, which has been weakened by years of U.S. balance of payments deficits. The dollar now will buy 4.08 Swiss francs instead of 4.37.

Austria boosted its schilling by 5.05 per cent, making the dollar worth only 24.75 schillings against 26 previously.

West Germany's Cabinet decided to float the mark on world markets which is expected to increase its value in relation to the dollar. The parity rate now is 3.66, but trading closed last week at 3.55.

The Netherlands followed the German lead, deciding to let the guilder float. Finance Minister Hendrick Witteveen said it was a self-defense measure to keep the flow of dollars from being diverted into Holland. The guilder moved from 3.59 to 3.50 in trading last week.

Witteveen said he hoped Belgium would follow suit to maintain a coordinated policy within the Benelux alliance. The Belgian Cabinet set a meeting for Monday to decide its course. Luxembourg automatically would go along with any Belgian decision because the two currencies are tied.

France and Italy said they were not interested in floating their currencies because they have no dollar problems. French and Italian currencies closed unchanged last week against the dollar-the franc at 5.2125 and the lira at 6.25.

West Germany, France, Italy and the three Benelux nations make up the European Common Market. A marathon meeting of Common Market finance ministers Saturday night and yesterday in Brussels gave member nations permission to let their currencies float to their true values.

Press Regulation Under FCC Urged

BOSTON (AP)-President Kevin Harrington of the state Senate called Sunday for the regulation of newspapers and news magazines similar to the regulation of radio and television stations by the Federal Communications Commission.

The Salem Democrat said he felt that putting the executive and legislative branches of government in the public spotlight might ensure better government.

"I don't think," he added, "that the spotlight could ever glare too brightly on the workings of government. I don't think that the media are perfect, but to suggest that they are too much on top of government is a very dangerous proposition.

"Yet I think there is imbalance; the FCC does have regulations as far as radio and TV are concerned. But the writing press of the United States, both in newspapers and news magazines, is the only business I know of that is constitutionally protected. I don't know of another profit-making business that is protected by the Constitution of the United States."

Harrington said the interpretation by the newspapers is, in effect, "You can't tell us what to do because the Constitution guarantees us the right of freedom of speech."

Saying that is a "magnificent concept that I'm sure we all want to keep," he added he was not sure that the newspaper should be the only organ of dissemination of news in the U.S. that should have that guarantee.

"I would like to see a type of FCC over the newspapers as it exists over radio and TV, and I hope that isn't interpreted as a type of control," he said.

He spoke on the WEEI Bary State Forum program.

Lon Nol Officially Resigns

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-Marshal Lon Nol, president of the council of ministers, told his countrymen that he has turned over the reins of government to his deputy, Lt. Gen. Sisowath Sirik Matak, and asked them to give the new leader "unreserved support."

In a taped message broadcast by Phnom Penh radio, the marshal said his health was poor and he had accepted the presidency only because the political crisis had dragged on too long. He suffered a stroke in February.

"The whole nation must give its confidence to this high personality just as they have given it to me," Lon Nol added.

Only if the nation stands united, Lon Nol continued, can Cambodia win victory over its enemies, "strengthen the young republic and build a brilliant future for our children."

Vietnamese Charge Americans Burned, Bombed Village

AP — Five Vietnamese women say the Americans came in the morning and burned the houses, came back in the afternoon and killed 60 people in two groups, then bombed the village.

They said this happened one day in April 1968 in the farm hamlet of Truong Khanh 2, about 30 miles south of Quang Ngai in the north.

It agrees in some respects and disagrees in others with the account given by a former U.S. Army sergeant, Danny Spencer Notley. He testified before an informal congressional committee April 28 that men of his unit killed 30 civilians in Truong Khanh in revenge for the booby trap death of a soldier.

Notley, 21, of St. Paul, Minn., said the incident occurred April 18, 1968. He recounted that after a popular soldier was killed by the booby trap, a lieutenant declared:

"There's a village over there, and there's people in it, and they're responsible for it. I want some kills."

Following this, Notley told an unofficial panel headed by Rep. Ronald V. Dellums, D-Calif., that his squad and several volunteers about 10 in all entered the village and systematically killed 30 unresisting women and children.

U.S. military records show that Notley's unit, part of the 11th Infantry Brigade of the Americal Division, suffered one killed and one wounded by a booby trap near the hamlet on April 17.

They also show that a bombing strike was flown in the Truong Khanh 2 area on April 18 and that the following day, a U.S. reconnaissance patrol found 18 bodies of Vietnamese men of military age, plus a wounded boy and girl, in the hamlet. Both children were evacuated by helicopter.

The women, their faces weathered and expressionless, told their version of the incident Sunday at a resettlement site near this village, a short distance from the now deserted Truong Khanh.

Only one of the five claimed to have been in the hamlet when the Americans came. The rest were working in rice fields nearby and said they saw or heard noise and shooting.

"I saw the Americans come into the village. They burned our houses, then killed the people," said Mrs. Nguyen Thi Mam, 68, who cares for a five-year-old girl whose mother was shot.

Mrs. Mam asserted the little girl's mother "protected her by covering her with her body." That night, she continued, surviving villagers found the girl and also a boy who was wounded, and took them both to another hamlet nearby.

Mrs. Ho Thi Cho, 59, said her husband and two children were among the victims.

"The Americans came to our village about three times a month, but there was never any trouble," she added. "They just walked through and looked in our houses."

She said most adults, including herself, were in the fields on the day in question and the only ones left in the hamlet were old people and children.

Stennis Plans Peace Proposal

(AP)—Sen. John C. Stennis, a strong supporter of the Pentagon and of the Nixon administration's conduct of the Vietnam conflict, said yesterday he plans to sponsor a resolution designed to limit a president's powers to make war.

The Mississippi Democrat and Armed Forces Committee chairman made it clear his proposal would not apply to the current Indochina conflict. But he said the congressional limits he seeks are "the best practical way to get our feet back on the ground. For the decades ahead I think we must make a new start."

Stennis's resolution would allow a president to commit U.S. forces in emergencies, including surprise attack and whenever Americans who are lawfully in another country are endangered. In such cases, he said, he envisions a 30-day limit by which time Congress must pass a declaration of war or the troops would have to be withdrawn.

But most important, he stressed, it would prohibit commitment of troops in the first place to countries where no emergency exists. In that light, he said "I oppose our going" into Vietnam in 1954 after the French were defeated there. However, he reaffirmed his support of President Nixon's present efforts in Vietnam.

Stennis conceded his resolution is quite similar to one introduced earlier this legislative session by Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R—N.Y., Stennis said his resolution "puts the responsibility for war where it belongs, on the people's representatives."

Stennis said if the August 1964 Gulf of Tonkin resolution has been labeled a declaration of war it would have had much rougher sailing in the Senate. The measure, cited in the past as authority for continuing the U.S. efforts in Vietnam, received just one vote in opposition.

Stennis stressed he does "not want to smoke up the resolution with debate the present war."

Zero Population Growth

"Planned Parenthood No Answer"

This is the final article of a series dealing with the population explosion presented by members of Zero Population Growth.

As the population has grown, it has become increasingly apparent that human freedom and population size are inversely correlated: as one increases the other decreases. With increase in numbers of people there has been less land, less clean water, less clean air, and less opportunity per capita. As these elements become less available so does human freedom.

Paul Ehrlich has made a list of "mankinds inalienable rights". These are as follows:

1. The right to eat well
2. The right to drink pure water
3. The right to breathe clean air
4. The right to decent, uncrowded shelter
5. The right to enjoy natural beauty
6. The right to avoid regimentation
7. The right to avoid pesticide poisoning.
8. The right to freedom from thermonuclear war
9. The right to limit our families
10. The right to hunt and fish
11. The right to educate our families
12. The right to have grandchildren

In addition, two other fundamental rights have been suggested:

1. The right of the fetus not to be conceived or, if conceived, not to be born into a world where its presence assures misery and privation.
2. The right of society as a whole to determine the density of population that best assures...access to necessary resources of food, clean air and water, recreation and essential raw materials.

"If We Are Going To Multiply Like Rabbits, We Should Do It On Purpose..."

"Planned parenthood," as construed by the organization of that name, will probably not halt population growth. A quote from Ehrlich's book, The Population Bomb, explained why this is so.

"The things that make family planning acceptable are the very things that make it ineffective for population control. By stressing the right of parents to have the number of children they want, it evades the basic question of population policy, which give societies the number of children they need. By offering only the means for couples to control fertility, it neglects the means for society to do so."

The premises of the above quote are substantiated by pamphlets available from the local Planned Parenthood office. The following two quotes are from these pamphlets:

1. "...the number of children they want during marriage and when to have them...are personal and individual decisions which the couple can make."

2. "Planned parenthood also means that couples who have been unable to have a baby should have access to the best professional help available. Fortunately scientists have also developed medication which helps women become pregnant."

Justin Blackwelder and Paul Ehrlich have made the following statements respectively:

"Family planning means, among other things, that if we are going to multiply like rabbits, we should do it on purpose. One couple may plan to have three children; another couple may plan seven. In both cases they are a cause of the population problem--not a solution to it."

"Above all, remember that planned, well spaced children will starve, or vaporize in a thermonuclear war, or die of plague just as well as unplanned children."

As indicated earlier, President Nixon delivered a message on population and family planning to congress on July 18, 1969. Like the papal encyclical, his message was at first deceptively encouraging. Yet, sadly, the fundamentals of his position later appeared identical to those of Planned Parenthood. For example, consider the following paragraph in Nixon's statement:

"...Remember That Planned, Well-Spaced Children Will Starve... Or Die of Plague Just As Well As Unplanned Children..."

"Clearly, in no circumstances will the activities associated with our pursuit of this goal be allowed to infringe upon the religious convictions or personal wishes and freedom of any individual, nor will they be allowed to impair the absolute right of all individuals to have such matters of conscience respected by public authorities."

At the present time most Americans, including our president, do not question that individuals have the right to plan their families. Yet as long as more than 2 children per American are produced, the American population will grow. And as society grows it heads for catastrophe. This poses a question: considering the inevitable result to unchecked population growth, which should be considered the more fundamental right...the right of the individuals to determine family size or the right of society to do so and to survive? We submit that if humanity fails to embrace the latter alternative, it is doomed. How much time remains to make that choice is uncertain. Some feel it may already be too late.

According to Isaac Asimov, famous scientist and science fiction writer, "The world is dangerously overpopulated, and the pressure of numbers is rising daily. In 30 years...the concentration of population in metropolitan areas, the rape of resources, the level of pollution all will have increased to far more than double. Even if we escape an actual nuclear war, our technological civilization, precariously enough balanced now, will topple and the world we know will come to a bloody, catastrophic end."

Laird Warns Of Russian Threat

(AP)—Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird said yesterday the United States should focus its attention now on what happens after Vietnam and what is needed to counter Russia's growing momentum.

It is time, he said, to shift the dialogue from "why Vietnamization" to "beyond Vietnam" and to focus on "what's in store for us, from the national security standpoint beyond Vietnam."

Laird also indicated his lack of enthusiasm for lifting trade restrictions with Red China.

His comments were made in an interview with U.S. News & World Report. The Secretary said that while the United States has been tied down in Southeast Asia since 1965 Russia has been able to use its defense resources to attain a position of "more or less parity in the strategic nuclear weapons area" and at the same time has gone forward with naval modernization and ground force modernization. Russia, he said has a "tremendous weapons momentum."

Laird was asked if it would be appropriate for U.S. businessmen to trade with Red China in view of the fact that Peking supplies 25 per cent of Communist war supplies in Southeast Asia.

He replied: "You could make a case for it on the basis that we already trade with the Soviet Union, and most of the outside support for the war comes from them. But I don't make that case. I also don't oppose all forms of trade.

"You could make the case that we should approve the same list of trading commodities for Red China that we have for the Soviet Union, I don't make that case either."

Asked if there should be a more stringent list of Red China, he said the matter is under study but that "different considerations" could apply.

"One, for example, has to do with the question of technology," he said. "There is a lower level of technology in China than in the Soviet Union. You have to look at the technology when you consider what exports will help a country that is a potential enemy."

Nixon Given Bird

(AP)-The White House family observed Mother's Day Sunday with a pastor from across the park, a choir from the town where the whole idea of Mother's Day began, and a gift of a golden canary to First Lady, Pat Nixon.

Some 300 persons attended worship services in the East Room on a gorgeous, sunny spring day. And the older daughter of the President and Mrs. Nixon, Tricia, said the Mother's Day canary for Mrs. Nixon was christened "Sunny."

Professor Wins Education Grant

Dr. Herbert S. Paston, Associate Professor of Environmental Arts at UMass has been selected by the National Society of Interior Designers to receive its 1971 Education Grant to attend the summer session at Attingham Park, Shropshire College in England. This summer program is an intensive study of the Historic Houses of England.

Dr. Paston, who is an elected member of the American Institute of Interior Designers (AID) as well as the National Society of Interior Designers (NSID) is currently contributing to the revision of the Sherrill Whiton classic text, Interior Design and Decoration for J.B. Lippincott and Co.

Along with his educational pursuits, Professor Paston is an artist who exhibits his studio work regularly in New England and throughout the country. His recent work has been seen in exhibitions at the Copley Society Gallery in Boston, at the Borgia Gallery at Elms College in Chicopee, the Art Center in Leverett, Massachusetts, and is currently represented in the 22nd National Exhibition of Representational Works of Art at the Museum of Fine Arts, Springfield, Massachusetts.

Dr. Paston's educational background includes a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from the Philadelphia College of Art, and master's and doctorate degrees in the College Teaching of Art from Columbia University. He came to UMass after teaching assignments at the Philadelphia College of Art, Pratt Institute, Columbia University and Northern Illinois University.

At the request of the Academic Matters Committee of the Student Senate, the Undergraduate Registrar's Office will be closed on Wednesday of each week from May 12 through June 30, rather than Friday as previously announced.

Incoherency

One of those crusty scholars who expend much cerebral sweat characterizing the "spirit of the times" has finally decided that the decade of the '70's will be "best characterized" as the "Age of Incoherency."

Dr. John Spiegel, the Director of Brandeis University's Lemberg Center for the Study of Violence, has reasoned on the Boston Globe Op-Ed page that "the groundswell of protest mounted in the previous decade have generated immense but ill-coordinated energies pushing for change."

Dr. Spiegel has defined one form of "incoherent behavior" in "militants who have had such a history of frustration that they don't know how to behave in a situation where change is possible or are unable to perceive that the situation exists."

That we are "agonizing over conflicting values" which "emerge in the state of incoherence" is brought home in a small way by the un-welcome break which several members of Gay Liberation provided in the progress of the Phil Ochs concert yesterday in the C Auditorium.

Phil Ochs rightly called the interruption "a lack of sensitivity". The Gay Lib people were unjustly trying to seize command the attention of a group probably very sympathetic, on the whole, to the plight of the homosexual in America, by screaming about the plight of the homosexual in America.

We all realize the forms of cruel oppression born by homosexuals throughout the history of western man. The "straights" are going to have to learn to live with the idea of a "homosexual" being human, just as people of distinguishable races are going to have to learn to live with each other. What we all have to learn is that acts of "incoherency" cannot really benefit any social or political movement.

We are all incoherent because many times we try to force our own values on other people. Our own "pride" becomes translatable into the justification for our acts. Nixon's "pride" keeps the bombs falling on Vietnamese. The anti-war militant's "pride" puts the rights of others in jeopardy. The "pride" welling up in the hearts and minds of the Gay Liberationists justified the minor interruption of yesterday's concert.

People who become caught up in the pursuit of a changed system of values for their fellow man, forget at times that their particular human condition, whether manifested in the color of their skin or the object of a sexual drive is neither a reason to be oppressed nor a justification to oppress. Most anybody can enhance their own cause and freedom at the expense of the common freedom every man deserves. Nobody has an inherent right to impose his will on another man in the name of "revolution" or "freedom".

Hopefully the place where the "incoherency" of man can find some respite is on the campus of a large University. Perhaps if everyone could show more "sensitivity" to the problems and rights of his fellow man, then the world will survive America's "Age of Incoherence."

The Masochist of Cairo

IT IS SAID that when La Madeire, soon after the Armistice, discovered her son, Todor, rotting from syphillis in a dive off of Cairo's Shari Maghrabi, she ran out into the street, screaming as if the dirvishes had entered her and not her son.

"Le masochiste du Caire! Lui, le masochiste du Caire!"

The masochist of Cairo.

As it turned out, Todor, the masochist of Cairo, wound up taking some penicillin and is now the president of the French holding company, Vite.

The University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate is the masochist of Cairo, for the Faculty Senate proffers the University the exemplary behavior of a foolish, young stud, so wrapped up in his immediate gratifications of sex, that he neglects to see the long-range dangers of his actions, and he doesn't really care.

It's sad to think that such a body should stagnate into such waste, with no sense of the future, no commitment to an unselfish goal, no desire to make something of one's life.

It's even sadder to think that the Faculty Senate has the power that it has over other people's lives.

In a time when universities have been forced to discard traditional definitions of the ivory tower and acknowledge that they are no longer sheltered adolescents, but adult repositories for half of a generation, the UMass Faculty Senate has not even discussed what it is going to do when it grows up.

-A ridiculous marking plan, once supported but now disceredited by students, has inched its way through the Faculty Senate. If not vetoed by the Trustees, it will institute an A, AR, B, BC... plan. WHERE IS THE EDUCATIONAL RATIONALE FOR THIS OR ANY OTHER MARKING PLAN?

-The School of Education's Pass-Fail marking system was soundly criticized by the Faculty Senate. WHERE WAS THE EVALUATION OF THE PRESENT AND PROPOSED SYSTEM OF GRADING?

-The Long Range Planning Committee urged educational alternatives for the University. WHERE IS THE FACULTY SENATE SUPPORT FOR OR CHARD HILL AND OTHER EXPERIMENTAL GROUPS?

-Last year, the Faculty Senate approved a reduction in core requirements. WITH A POTENTIAL STUDENT—ADVISOR RATIO OF 15-1, WHY DIDN'T THE FACULTY SENATE ABOLISH REQUIREMENTS? WHERE IS THE EDUCATIONAL RATIONALE FOR THEM, NOT DISGUISED IN THE VAGUE RHETORIC OF "LIBERAL EDUCATION"?

-The Faculty Senate approved a new calendar which allows the first semester to end before Christmas. WHAT WAS THE EDUCATIONAL RATIONALE FOR THIS CALENDAR? IN THE LIGHT OF TESTIMONY BEFORE THE FACULTY SENATE'S OWN COMMITTEE, WHY DID IT NOT RECOMMEND A YEAR—ROUND CALENDAR WITH MULTIPLE ENTRY AND EXIT POINTS?

-The Faculty Senate has not made an effort to improve its teachers' educational skills. It has not required mandatory course evaluation or in-service training seminars. WHERE IS THE PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND DIGNITY ON THE FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS?

More disturbing than the Faculty Senate's actions are the attitudes of its constituency:

A professor fills out his own course evaluation sheets.

A home economics teacher admits that she is so wrapped up in her research that she didn't know that a student-run course evaluation existed.

A Faculty Senator from Psychology liberally complains to his class about the grading system, yet doesn't show up to vote on the new grading proposal.

A government professor teaches the same lower-level course every year so that he has more time for his writings.

A history professor consistently shows up 15 minutes late for his classes.

An agriculture professor has never read a Collegian.

An education professor forgets about a library book, returns it after two months, and is not required to pay a fine.

A French professor says, "If I am right, I am right; if I am wrong, I am right."

A science professor never shows up to his 1 office hour a week.

If the Faculty Senate doesn't start changing, if it doesn't begin to take its penicillin, it will die a slow, terrible death from self-inflicted wounds. It will find that the Trustees and the Administration and the students will have declared the Faculty Senate malignant, and what happens in the University will not happen from the Faculty Senate.

No matter what name-calling the Faculty Senate engages in with its opponents, there is one thing it cannot deny.

The Faculty Senate is the masochist of Cairo.

I'm For Mudder

WASHINGTON——President Nixon said today in a press conference that he was for Mother's Day, providing it was a just and honorable Mother's Day in which every mother in this country could decide her own destiny.

The President told reporters that when the Democrats were in power there were 37.8 million mothers in the United States. Since his Administration took office, there are now 38.7 million mothers, or an increase of almost 1 million mothers. "This shows," said the President, "that my game plan for producing more mothers is working."

"Mr. President," a reporter asked, "why have you come out for mothers at this time?"

"Mr Lisagor, I would like to make this perfectly clear--the easy way, the political way, the popular way, would be to attack motherhood in this country. But the hard way, and in my opinion the best way, not for the short term, but the long run, is to take a strong stand for mothers.

"Now, I know you're going to say not all mothers are good, and I know you're going to say mothers don't know how to raise their children, and I know you're going to say mothers are responsible for many of the problems this country faces. But I would just like to make one thing perfectly clear. The majority of mothers are not flag burners or bums. They are fine upstanding Americans, and it is for this reason that I have decided to come out for motherhood, even if it means I may be a one-term President."

"Mr. President, now that you've declared yourself for mothers, will you also come out for mon's apple pie?"

"Mr. Kaplow, I'd like to make myself perfectly clear. As you know, my Administration has been working to improve the quality of apple pie in this country. I have on my desk now the Sara Lee Commission Report on mom's apple pie. Now, there are some who say the President should set a standard for apple pie. There are others who say the government should decide what goes into a mother's apple pie. There are still others who would like to do away with apple pie altogether. But as President of the United States, I believe that apple pie is a very personal thing and should be left to the states where it is made.

"This is not to say the government shouldn't step in when a mother makes a bad apple pie. But this should be a last resort. Besides, I don't think mom's apple pie will be an election issue. Miss Thomas?"

"Mr. President, I would like to get back to Mother's Day. Vice President Agnew has made some comments about the mothers of several of the members of the news media. Does this mean that you and he are in disagreement on an overall Mother's-Day policy?"

"Miss Thomas, I would be the last one to have a Vice President agree with everything I have said. But I know from talking to Mr. Agnew, and working with him, that he and I are in overall agreement that the United States should have a low profile Mother's Day policy. There may be certain mothers that he doesn't agree with, just as there are certain mothers that I don't approve of. But when it comes down to whether Mr. Agnew supports my Mother's Day proclamation, the answer to your question is 'Why don't you ask him?'"

"Mr. President, does the fact that you're coming out for motherhood mean that you will come out for God and country before the next election?"

"Mr. Rather, I'm sending my message on the 'State of God' next week, and I don't think it would be beneficial to discuss that at this time."

Letters To The Editor

THIS Was a Great Victory?

To the Editor:

May Day activities in Washington have been so maligned by your "free and responsible press" that your readers may be very unaware of what May Day really helped create--stronger pressure than ever to end the war and at least a small growth of moral conscience within many Americans.

Friday's falsely-labeled editorialized put-down of May Day in the MDC, "A Look At May-Day By The People Involved," underscores my point that May Day has been severely misrepresented by people not involved in it here. I was involved in May Day from April 23-May 5, and will try to set the record straight. In Friday's article, the opinions of spokemen for USA, the MOBE and the Collegian consistently condemned "the May-Day Tribe's unrealistic approach to planning the whole affair."

Did we fail, as our critics have charged?

Well, we failed to shut down the death machine in Washington by putting our bodies on the line. And we failed to get the majority of this country to endorse our tactics of blocking traffic to raise the war to a purely moral issue, superseding legal, political or economic considerations. The general reaction seemed to be "let's not get too extreme about ending a war."

BUT THESE WERE NOT OUR PRAGMATIC GOALS. Behind our theatrics in the streets and government buildings was a calculated plan to continuously project anti-war sentiment into the TV sets, newspapers and consciousness of all Americans and people throughout the world. We successed in doing this not for just one day and then go home to business-as-usual--which is what the old line April 24 March-rally was all about (although that one day was definitely worthwhile)--but direct pressure to end the war continued EVERY DAY up to and beyond our May 3 street action. The Peoples' Lobby in Congress and on the streets with the Peoples' Peace Treaty, the Poor Peoples' Mule Train to the capitol, our beautiful Algonquet Peace City in the middle of Babylon, continued action by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, guerilla theatre, peace demands by the Welfare Rights Organization and the Third World Soul Rally, hundreds of Quakers arrested in front of the capitol, federal buildings being shut down each day through acts of non-violent civil disobedience. And they all led up to our demand that people STOP May 3 and think about where the hell this country is going.

Did this cause a backlash against the anti-war movement?

Bullshit. A Harris Poll released on Tuesday (after a week of non-violent civil disobedience in Washington) showed that FOR THE FIRST TIME, the majority of Americans favor setting a date for IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL OF ALL U.S. FORCES IN SOUTHEAST ASIA. People often disagreed with the May Day tactic of direct non-violent civil disobedience, but grass roots pressure to end the war has been steadily increasing. This feeling has been reinforced by my own conversations with countless workers and the people on the streets in Washington and communications with people from all ends of the political spectrum around the country. So May Day was a positive boost to the anti-war movement.

A second mam May Day objective was to morally question the inequities of power and privilege in this country. This is a much more complex and difficult area to touch people on than just ending a war, but again it is clear that we made some headway. The pigs played right into our hands in helping to get this message across. For the past week Washington has been all but run by the Gestapo: random street sweeping arrests of innocent citizens; indiscriminating gassings and macings of Peoples' Army medics, newsmen and protestors who weren't resisting arrest; denial of all of our constitional rights in overcrowded jails; no medical treatment, food or sanitation facilities in the concentration camps specially employed for these mass political protests...

It surely hasn't been unanimous, but at least large sections of the legal establishment, clergy, news media and citizenry have been outraged at this treatment of people wanting peace. In fact, it is starting to occur to people that the crimes we committed on the streets (disorderly conduct, littering, unlawful assembly) are miniscule compared to the crimes performed and perpetuated every day by a system buttressed by coercion and exploitation.

Right on!

Slowly, but surely, people are getting it into their heads that we must do everything in our power to stand up to The Monster--even if that means going to jail or otherwise inconveniencing our daily lives. This is a long, long term struggle we are involved in. We certainly aren't uniting most people overnight against the brutal realities of exploitive power in Amerika. But we definitely made progress last week; progress that wouldn't have happened were it not for May Day. A lot of people have been radicalized by the proceedings of the past couple of weeks--participants and observers. And as we showed by putting out bodies on the line in unprecedented numbers, we ain't gonna let nobody turn us 'round.

Militarily, May Day was a defeat for out people. As far as the anti-war movement goes, it was a victory: Out Now pressure is increasing. And we grew stronger in spirit than ever before.

We SHALL overcome!

(Editor's Note: The Article "A Look At May-Day By The People Involved" in the Friday, May 7, 1971 MDC was never inteded to be a strict news story, but rather a news analysis. The headline kicker, "News Analysis" was regretably omitted. We apologize for this oversight.)

Editorial Sandbox

To the Editor:

After a three monthmoratorium on criticism I feel it is necessary to speak up on the relative merits of the Daily Collegian.

Journalistically, the Collegian has deteriorated seriously in the last few months. A supposedly responsible press is no place for "in-jokes" between friends and personal battles between readers and individual editors. Editorial pages are not the place for settling personal vendettas, nor bombarding readers with tedious, "schmultzy" writing. An editorial page is a place to attempt to present a balanced view of campus feelings on pertinent issues; except for rare exceptions, the Collegian is failing to do this. A newspaper is rightly judged by its editorial pages: its policy, its content, and its style. Although I identify with most Collegian stances, I admit it is not a balanced presentation. I feel many issues are neglected or treated lightly, in lieu of which, light issues are treated with importance.

A newspaper should never become immune to criticism, nor unresponsive to it. This letter is intended as a spur to greater things.

Saving Grass

To the Editor:

As a member of the University of Massachusetts student body, you probably can't help but realize the growing amount of plant life that is succumbing to the continuous construction. And as a resident of the University, maybe you've noticed now an increasing amount of what little grass remains, is now a barren hard-packed trail.

It seems that the rush to class is so great that we trample the lawns, already criss-crossed by hundreds of hard-topped walkways. If we all just spend a few extra seconds taking those corners, we might save some of the remaining grass.

Fangs Are Showing

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate a deserving and brilliant member of the MDC staff, world renowned for his deeply-probing criticisms of the arts, that prolific author of prodigious journalistic distinction, Bob Nesti.

Yes Bob, it looks like you've done it once again with your review of the latest UT production DOES THE TIGER WEAR A NECKTIE? Who knows, if you had turned on just a little more of your tremendous literary skill and charm, there might not have been any audiences at any of the performances at all. But there's no use questioning what might have been, the fact remains that there were embarrassingly poor turnouts the two nights following the appearance of your critique, not a minor accomplishment for a critic of even your stature and experience. It's interesting to note, Bob, that the only other UT production you turned thumbs down on was THE CLOUDS, which along with ten other plays was later selected from two hundred lorty entrants to perform in Washington in the American College Arts Festival. Proving not to be easily discouraged by a minor defeat, you rebounded quite successfully in dealing a near death-blow to the production of TIGER, possibly one of the finest examples of modern realistic theatre yet presented at this university.

Again let me congratulate you Bob on a job well done.

Steven Lapointe

Misquote

To the Editor:

In voicing my opposition to the tactics of the May Day Tribe, I did not mean to imply that those people involved in the Washington May Day demonstrations deliberately sought to exclude people from the anti-war actions. I do feel, however that the nature of the demonstrations did, in effect, exclude those without money to pay fines or those who could not risk their job or family responsibilities in order to participate.

I also stated my feeling that the most radical and effective opposition to the War is the tactic of mass action independent of the political parties. My dispute with the May Day actions is a tactical one. I do not malign the motives nor the commitment of the May Day activists; I do question the efficiency of those tactics in the antiwar movement.

The accidental distortion of my views in last Friday's COLLEGIAN no doubt offended many people on campus. I hope this clarification will emphasize my concern with the absolute necessity for unity in the antiwar movement...

WUNIV-TV

by PETER LASH '72

Think of it this way. This university is merely a television station; the university system in this country, merely a television network. The professors, administrators, and organizers (i.e. business, industry, and other vocationally oriented institutions) are the producers and directors of The Great American Situation Comedy. Both television and American Education are directed toward the masses. Both have a product to sell. Both revolve around mediocrity. Both are boring. Both try to portray norms of existance, (the apathetic, average student vs. Family Affaire), and extremes of existance ("freaks" in all senses of the word vs. Startreck, Combat etc.). Both fail miserably. Both function by means of an audience passively sitting, watching, listening. Both try to convey ideas, yet these ideas are quickly forgotten, effecting the actions of the audience in a purely subconscious manner. Both exist in such a manner that the audience need not interact, thus perpetuating a feeling of isolation between members of the audience. Both, in the process of selling their product, deliberately tell many lies, or perhaps more accurately, they tell untruths. Both, in their own way, a fantasy land.

Guts

But analogies can be carried only so far. They come to an end where their differences begin. Yet the differences in this analogy are even more frightening. Television is aimed at an audience with the average intelligence of a 6 to 10 year-old. The university is aimed at an audience of a 10 to 16 year-old. This is necessary because of the sad state of our public education system. Before you dismiss this as so much rhetoric, bear with me.

How many "gut" courses are there? Even more important, how many courses have you done poorly in, but eventually realized that they weren't really that difficult? You rationalize. You "didn't have time for them", or "just didn't bother with them." The real reason returns us to the television analogy. The producers and directors have established an institution that is academically passive, boring, mediocre, unrealistic, irrelevent, and unmotivating. It is directed in an impersonal, assembly-line fashion to a mass audience of superior intelligence, or at least, superior values. If you were given an exam on a television program you watched the other day, would you pass it?

Entertainment

It's ironic that some educators try to make a boring lecture entertaining in order to hold our attention. The paradox lies in the fact that those profs that don't attempt this method, bore us, while those that do, often end up merely entertaining us.

There is competition in the television industry; competition between business, industry, etc. (who also run American Education) for time to sell their product. But the difference in the competition in American Education is horrifying. The packaged product is already sold to us before we set foot on campus, when we paid our bill. We were buying blind. The producers and directors need not compete. They have elevated themselves on an ivory tower of pseudo-intellectual authority and admitted superiority. We have allowed them to perpetuate a system in which, academically, we must compete among ourselves. Some of us claim to be brothers and sisters to our fellow students, yet, in the classroom, the person sitting next to you is your competition, your own worst enemy.

Yet, there is more to the University Television Network than academics. We rationalize our existance here through the "ideal" life-styles we lead. The Mod Squad, Pierpont Place, Fraternity Affaire and Woodstock Nation have higher ratings than the quiz programs and herein lies the agony and the strength of my analogy.

Whereas, in the academic sense we were merely the audience, in the life-style sense we are the producers, directors, actors, and audience. Some of us claim to be ourselves while its obvious that we're playing a role for the masses, which we assume to be of low intelligence. Can you dig it? There are writers, costume designers, composers, make-up experts, and set designers, all involved in yet another mediocre, boring, unrealistic, Great American Situation Comedy. We have a product to sell, ourselves, and we use the familiar hard sell technique of telling lies, or at least untruths. The competition we've established is stiff, and the person living next to you is your own worst enemy in your drive to sell your self to the mass audience of your choice.

Some of us will claim that we don't try that hard; that we just spend some time on our booking and are content with our relations with others. But the boob-tube analogy returns as our apathetic existance is considered in terms of the passive, isolated individual of a mass audience.

The analogy: television vs. the University. Both try to deal with life. Both fail miserably. Both are analogues unto themselves and as with all analogies, both are carried much too far in real life.

An Afternoon Of Perplexing Rhetoric

The group from Gay Liberation who took over the stage yesterday during the Phil Ochs concert. The man at the mike is reading a poem about what it is like to be a homosexual. The take-over was ten-minutes long, after which Ochs continued performing.

Confrontation

At one point though, he commented that he had in the past been called many different things because of his participation in certain leftist political activities. One thing apparently was a "fag", a term often used by those of the so-called Easy Rider mentality to describe those who participate in radical actions. Jerry Rubin spoke of himself and his fellow members in the Chicago Conspiracy Trial as being "freaking fag revolutionaries" in an attempt to mock these derisive stereotypes used by some.

And so in the same manner Ochs said that there was "no fag here." The remark was greeted with loud hoots and calls from a group who were attending the Gay Liberation Festival held this past weekend on campus.

As Ochs began to sing his next number he was interrupted by a man who demanded an apology for his use of the term "fag". Amidst some reaction from the crowd, Ochs and the man argued some. They came to no real agreement as Ochs saw no reason to apologize for what he said and he further chastized the group for their manners in interrupting his concert.

Finally Ochs sang again; he did his very long "Cruxifiction" which was listened to in a tense silence, then proceeded to break the crowd up a bit with his "Love Me I'm a Liberal".

Feelings in the hall cooled some. Then, apparently after having been refused five minutes on the stage by someone in authority, the Gay coalition took over the stage. Ochs stook to the side as the men explained the consciousness of being Gay in our society.

One young man read a poem about the freedom felt being in another man's arms. His performance was impassioned and moving; he obviously cut through the rhetoric as he was able to bridge the gap that had formed because of the disruptive tactics. People had begun to listen and probably begin to think about the nature of repression in our society as a man personally accused Ochs and the audience as being responsible for his feeling oppressed.

After some time the group left the stage (and the auditorium) and Ochs continued. Ochs finished his set with a song he had written some years back after returning from Mississippi. Now he felt the frightening and crude consciousness of that state found itself in the country and specifically in our president and Ochs substituted the word Mississippi with Richard Nixon and the crowd found the metaphor apt.

The disruption now began to make some sense; it showed in microcosm the way in which Ochs as a radical singer of songs acts towards society. As Ochs focused his target in on Nixon, so did the Gay people focus in on Ochs. The one who was being oppressed by society, at least as evidence by his song lyrics, became the oppressors. The roles were changed in a most dramatic fashion. Unfortunately this bizarre sort of reverse role-playing which only left most of the audience bewildered was all that was accomplished by the disruption. The audience, who had come to listen to some music on a Sunday afternoon, now was forced to think.

Ochs later gave a final response to the disruptive action saying he was from the old school where manners were expected to be an important part of social behavior. It was interesting though, as he reflected upon his own feelings, a number of people shouted out for him to stop talking and start singing.

Ochs did three encores after which Jonathan Edwards took to the stage. Many people unfortunately left at this point for they missed a most impressive performance by one of the best new singers in some time. Edwards appeal is a rough, down-country feel, he's something of a backwoods John Sebastian. He did a long set ending it with some fiddlin', foot-stompin', country spirituals that brought response, after some time, from the rather emotionally spent crowd.

The afternoon was something unexpected. The disruption colored this final concert of the year with a feeling of pessimism, but then again, it was probably the logical result of much of the feeling that's in the air.

Bosom Buddies

By JEFF KATON
MDC Staff

I used to know a guy named Huey and his buddy Will. They hung around a lot and if they were anywhere nearby you'd know they were there. Huey was always saying, "Hey, Willie-boy, how're you doin Willie-boy, what d'ya say we go out and and get laid tonight, Willie-boy?" And Will would say "Good idea, Huey-boy, let's go down to the bar and pick up some babes." So they would go down to the bar and Huey would drink and Will would drink, and about two or so they'd both go home a little drunk. After a while it got a little hard to take these guys seriously- they must of been doing it pretty fast, or they just of found something on their way home, or they must of been pulling out leg.

I always used to think that it wasn't us that Huey and Will were trying to convince, but themselves.

Phil Ochs

So when I went to the Ochs concert, I had the feeling that it was Willie and Huey all over again. The Gay Lib people had to freak us out, they had to push Ochs to the side of the stage and grab center-stage for themselves, they had to read us this poem about the "violent explosion when two boys meet," and then tell us that they thought we all had it in us to be Gay.

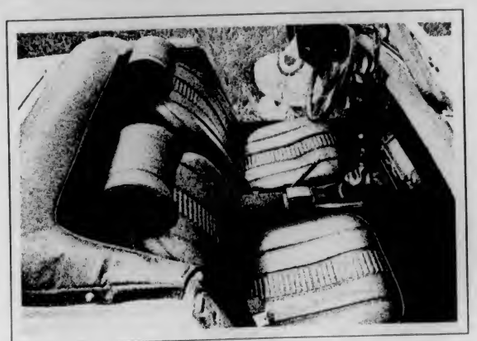
James Baldwin wrote about being gay. "I didn't know what I was," he said, more or less. "I didn't know if I was black or white, American or African, man or woman." He exiled himself from this country for over ten years to find some answers.

The Gay people might have told us that Gay is where it's at and that to be Gay is to be nice and gentle. Of course, we wouldn't know it from the way they conducted themselves at the concert. Do as I say not as I do?

I got to dislike Huey and Will because I think that the private relations between people are just that, private and beautiful. When people wave it around in public, be they straight or Gay, I find it about as appealing as if they were waving around their jockey shorts. After having worn them for a week.

Maybe it's a way of learning. Maybe in their little poem there was something for the ten thousand or so to learn. Maybe, too, the wild rhetoric and the purple buttons which read nothing you'd want your little sister to be looking at, are the Gay people's exile, their way of learning who and what they are.

Maybe a little something there for Huey and Will to be learning too: They're probably down at the bar tonight. "Hey, Willie-boy," Huey saying, "hear about the bunch of fags down at the University?"



"Yeah, sure. What a zoo. Eh, Huey-boy, what d'ya say we go out and find some honeys and get laid tonight?"

Phil Ochs, one of the finest singers of social protest in America today, had his concert interrupted yesterday by some members of the Gay Liberation Festival held here on campus over the weekend. The confrontation resulted because of a remark Ochs had made. (MDC photos of the concert by Steve Schmidt, Lee Sandwen, and Bob Nesti.)

You can afford it while you're still young enough to enjoy it.

Having the want is one thing. Having the wherewithal is another. The trouble with being young is that all too often you have the one without the other.

But the 1971 MG Midget is something else again. Here is a true sports car for under $2500* — the lowest price you can pay for the real thing.

In this case the real thing includes a race-winning 1275 c.c. engine. Racing-type rack-and-pinion steering (2.33 turns lock to lock) for cool, crisp driving. Heavy-duty suspension for superb road-hugging. Disc brakes up front for straight-line, non-fade stops. Twin reclining bucket seats. And full sports car instrumentation with an electric tach.

Which only goes to show that, even though MG has been engineering sports cars for over 40 years, there's no generation gap. Our Lan'

"A Startingly Personal Theatre Experiencs Experience"

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

No matter who won the Civil War, it made no difference for Black America. Such is the message of Our Lan', the most recent presentation of the Black Repertory Theatre, shown in Bowker Auditorium this weekend.

The play traced the life of a group of blacks over the year following the end of the Civil War, and their communal existence on an island that had supposedly been given to them on the order of General Sherman, but was later repossessed by the Reconstruction government of Andrew Johnson.

Written by Theodore Ward, Our Lan' originally opened on Broadway in 1947, and it is easy to see why it closed early. Ward's view of history makes it apparent that not everybody in the Union had any interest in helping the newly free Blacks. Lincoln was a mythic "Father Abraham," the Reconstruction was a farce run by selfish crooks, and freedom was something that those people knew was better than slavery, but it wasn't helping them live.

Dramatically, the play tended towards tediousness, especially in the first of the two acts. There was little action, much of what was going on concerning itself with the day to day events of survival, and if it wasn't for the spirit of production and the understanding of the black struggle inherent in the play, it could have been a dismal two hours. Still, the cast and staff were both so good that the audience could keep involved in deep sympathy for the overwhelming crises the group had to face.

The use of colored lights was the most ambitious of the year. The first ten minutes of the play were completely red and green, and later on, a volley of shots between the blacks and government officials who had come to forcibly reclaim the land was represented by red lights rather than by gunshots. This was a more than worthwhile experiment for its novel approach, especially considering that the sound effects crainstorms, etc.) had all sounded contrived.

Though Ronald Murphy as Joshuah, the group leader, was outstanding in his own right, the credit has to go to the whole ensemble. They had complete command of the sense of community in the face of hardship, and their beautifully melancholy harmonizing on the spirituals that closed almost every scene was an effect that made the play much more real and meaningful; anybody could identify with this music.

Our Lan' was a startlingly personal theatre experience. From events of a hundred years ago, racism and the Black culture could be understood a lot more clearly; I could see what was happening at that critical point in our history, and the way the American government degenerated into a bunch of post-war slave traders so quickly after the death of Lincoln. Out of all the plays faults as a work of art, the Black Repertory Company created something that for at least one person who saw it, will be memorable for a long time.

Dynamite Show At Radio City

NEW YORK (AP)-Cleaning women found two incendiary devices fastened beneath seats in the Radio City Music Hall early Sunday and hastily summoned police who located a third in the world's largest theatre.

Bomb squad detectives deactivated the devices and there were no injuries or damage. A few hours later all 6,200 seats were filled with a Mother's Day crowd that was generally unaware of what had occurred earlier.

The devices were about the size of cigarette packages and each contained two flash bulbs, two thin batteries, a pocket watch and black powder.

A similar device was found in the theatre last month.

Adelphia to Give Service Award

Adelphia, the senior men's honor society at UMass, will present its first annual Distinguished Massachusetts Citizen Award at a noon luncheon tomorrow in Room 1009 of the Campus Center.

According to Glenn Essler, President of Adelphia and senior from Danvers who will present the award, this is the first time that a student group on campus has made an award for service to the Massachusetts community.

The luncheon will also be attended by University President Robert Wood, Chancellor Oswald Tippo, trustees, faculty, Adelphians and other students.

Those interested in attending may contact James Allen, Alumni Office, in Memorial Hall.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right – 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important!) while reducing. You keep "full" – no starvation – because the diet is designed that way! It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today. Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $1.00 ($1.25 for Rush Service) – cash is O.K. – to: Ski Team Diet, P.O. Box 15493, Dept. ST, San Diego, Calif. 92115. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do!

Governor Sargent Proclaims Home Economics Week

Governor Francis W. Sargent has proclaimed the week of May 9-15 Home Economics Week in recognition of the large part Massachusetts has played in the development of Home Economics as a profession, according to Miss Winifred Eastwood, assistant director of Extention for Home Economics.

The founding president of the American Home Economics Association, Mrs. Ellen Richards, was a Massachusetts resident. Miss Eastwood said, and Mrs. Richards was also the first woman admitted to M.I.T., where she taught for 38 years, applying the principles of science to domestic and family matters.

Since the founding of the AHEA in 1909, Home Economics has branched into a variety of activities the founders would never have expected. The diet and clothing of astronauts are designed by Home Economists; the Consumer Relations departments of many major corporations are headed by Home Economists; the originators of mobile, modular and airborne housing units received their environmental training in Home Economics Interior Design sequences and the current interest in Geriatrics is as much a part of Home Economics Human Development Departments as it is a medical problem.

Joan Pyteraf, president of the AHEA college chapter, cited the change in Home Economics subject matter succinctly in saying, "Home Ec isn't making out laundry lists anymore. Today we research towards ecologically acceptable biodegradables and help to put man on the moon."

A brief tour of Skinner Hall on campus, center of the School of Home Economics, verifies the wide-ranging scope of activities. Using every available inch of the facilities, the entrance foyer is paved in an experimental floor tile being walked upon and graded in a durability test. In a tiny room under the eaves, Pat McKenzie and Jane Dupuis operate a formidable machine testing the abrasive resistance of textiles. Linda Rotti, engaged in an environmental ambience research project, polls students regarding their reaction to Stone Age bird-symbols.

On the ground floor, what appears at first to be a Nursery School keeps small children busy in a variety of activities. Upon investigation, one discovers this to be the laboratory school of the Department of Human Development, where the most advanced methods of early education and recreation are developed. In the Interior Design studio, a group of young men on an environmental art research team compute ocean depth pressure maximums for an underwater city-of-the-future.

Noting the Governor's proclamation, Miss Pyteraf said, "Home Ec may have a comfortable, old-fashioned name, but a lot of the problems of the future are being solved here before they happen."

Taiwan University Honors UMass Prof.

Prof. Yu Why Chen of the mathematics department of UMass has been honored by National Taiwan University.

A volume of 36 mathematical research papers compiled expecially for Prof. Chen was published by the Mathematical Research Center of Taiwan University and given to him in honor of his 60th birthday. The rare award is one of the highest expressions of esteem in the field, according to Prof. Wayman L. Strother, math department head. Giving such an award, he said, is equal to calling the recipient "one of our great leaders."

Included in the volume are works by internationally known mathematicians such as Professors Fritz John, Casper Goffman, S.S. Chern, and Ky Fan, all of whom Dr. Chen has had contact with in some way. Their special articles for this award volume are thinks for his motivation of their works. Copies of the special edition are available from the Institute of Mathematics, Academia Sinica, Taipei, Taiwan, Republic of China.

Prof. Chen was born in Nantung, China, near Shanghai. He received his Ph. D. in 1934 from the University of Goerringen in Germany and has been on the faculties of the National University of Peking, University of Oklahoma, and Wayne State University. The author of about 20 research papers in partial differential equations, he came to UMass in 1965.

Golfers Falter At New Englands

By ALAN K. WRIGHT
MDC Staff

Last Thursday and Friday, the UMass varsity golf team participated in the New England Championships held at the new Ellington Ridge Country Club in Vernon Connecticut. There were 45 teams and 240 men involved in this 36-hole tournament which is played in a different New England State each year on a neutral course.

The Redman linksters have been experiencing difficulties in medal play matches all season long and the same held true in this tournament as they placed twelfth with a disappointing aggregate team score of 652. Each team's best four scores were recorded, and all five of the golfers sent down by Coach Page had trouble getting the ball in the hole. Each of the UMass contingent averaged over 80 for both of the two days of play. Rick Towle and Mike Minkos both had low team scores of 162 for their two days of play on Ellington Ridge's long 7100 yard layout that had mostly fast greens. Since the course was in really good condition, no preferred lies were allowed.

The other scores were as follows: Art Cicconi 163, Dick King 165, and Ed Puzas 169. All of the UMass golfers weredisappointed with their performances, especially since they were in sixth place after the first day of play. Senior Captain Puzas was especially upset with his two rounds of play as he lost his putting concentration and hit the ball into a lot of trouble.

Central Connecticut State College ended up winning the New England Championship with an aggregate team score of 662, followed by Babson with a 628 and Wesleyan 631. UConn and Rhode Island were close behind, with scores of 634 and 637. This is what made UMass' 12th place finish seem so disappointing since both these Yancon teams were beaten by the Redmen during regular season play.

Of course, the fact that UMass had won the Yankee Conference Championship just one week earlier must have made the team have high hopes going into the pressure-cooker type of play that exists in the prestigious New Englands each year.

'This week, the Redmen golfers finish out their season with a home match against Amherst College at Hickory Ridge Country Club tomorrow as well as a tri-meet at Springfield with Worcestor Polytechnic Institute on Thursday. The latter match is a postponement from earlier in the season. Then, finally, the alumni match will be held on Friday. This is when the top UMass golfers of recent years take on this year's varsity members.

Habs Top Hawks, 4-2

MONTREAL (AP)—Flamboyant Frank Mahovlich fired two goals to tie a Stanley Cup record, and led a Montreal comeback yesterday that gained the Canadiens a 4-2 victory in the third game of their National Hockey League Championship series against the Chicago Black Hawks.

The victory in the nationally televised game left the Canadiens trailing the best-of-7 series 2-1 with game four set for Montreal tomorrow night and game five in Chicago Thursday night.

The two goals gave Mohovlich 13 for the playoffs this year, tying the record set by Boston's Phil Esposito last season.

The Canadiens outplayed Chicago by a wide margin but had to battle from behind after surrendering a pair of first period goals. Only some standout goaltending by Chicago's Tony Esposito held Montreal at bay but eventually the Canadiens broke through.

After the Mahovlich brothers, first Pete and then Frank, scored to tie the game in the middle period, Montreal took total control in the final period.

Defenseman Terry Harper, booed all game long, set up the tie-breaker with a rink-length dash.

He fought off two checks and threw a perfect pass to Yvan Cournoyer camped on Esposito's doorstep. Cournoyer had time enough to aim his shot. He did just that and didn't miss.

When Harper's assist was announced, the fickle Montreal fans gave him a standing ovation.

Nicklaus Charges To Nelson Victory

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—Jack Nicklaus burst out of a closely bunched field with birdies on three of the last four holes yesterday and repeated as the champion in the $125,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Nicklaus had a final-round 66, four under par on the raindrenched Preston trail Golf Club course, and posted a 72-hole total of 274 in scoring his second victory in as many starts.

Nicklaus, the only three-time winner on the pro tour this year, won the Tournament of Champions two weeks ago to go with an earlier victory in the PGA National Championship.

It was the 33rd tour victory in Nicklaus' fantastic professional career and pushed his leading money winnings for the season to $131,776.

The field was closely bunched before the Golden Bear made his move with three consecutive birdies starting on the 14th hole-a drive that gave him a two-stroke victory in this tournament that he won a year ago when he bested Arnold Palmer in a sudden-death playoff.

B.C. Nips Tracksters; Mile Relay Decides Meet

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Competing in a continuous downpour, Boston College downed UMass 80-73 on Saturday. The meet went down to the final event as BC finally secured the meet with a victory in the mile relay. The heavy rain and cold winds managed to keep the fans away, but the excitment was still there as no team was able to mount a safe lead throughout the meet.

The meet appeared to be wrapped up when BC swept the two mile to give them a 74-65 lead. Just as the relay teams were lining up, it was announced that UMass had captured one-two in the discus to put the Redmen back into contention. Going into the relay, BC held a 75-73 lead.

In the final leg of the relay Dave Evans handed off to Johnny Cecca who found himself slightly behind BC's great quartèr miler Dick O'Brien. Cecca made a bid in the first curve, and passed O'Brien at the start of the first straight-away. O'Brien responded with a burst of speed, and went on to win the relay and the meet.

The 880 again proved to be the most exciting race of the day. Dave Evans passed BC's Frank Walsh in the last 150 yards of the race. Evans and Walsh ran stride for stride for the last 100 yards with Evans nipping Walsh at the tape.

The javelin throwers came through once again as Rocco Petitto led a one-two-three finish in the event. Ron Harris and BC's Tom Schneider had their much heralded duel in the 220. Schneider nipped Harris at the tape to complete his double victory. He earlier won the 100 yard dash.

Eddie Arcaro added eight points for the Redmen with a victory in the shot and a second place in the hammer. Jim Graves won the 120 hurdles, but was injured in the 440 intermediates. Graves fell on the slippery track after completing the first hurdle.

The Redmen now have a 6-3 record, and have lost two out of their last three meets. The team travels to Rhode Island tomorrow for their last dual meet of the year. Coach O'Brien feels that the team needs a big win tomorrow with the Yankee Conference Championships coming up this Saturday.

Brewers Snap Sox Streak, 6-1

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Rookie right-hander Bill Parsons spun a three-hitter yesterday and Milwaukee erupted for six runs in the first inning as the Brewers broke a Boston six-game winning streak, 6-1.

Parsons gave up a two-out single to Reggie Smith in the third inning and coasted to his third victory of the season in six decisions. He then retired 18 straight batters before walking Carl Yastrzemski with two out in the ninth. Rico Petrocelli then singled, Billy Conigliaro beat out a bunt to load the bases and Mike Fiore walked, forcing Yastrzemski across the plate. Don Pavetich then flied out to end the game.

The Brewers' eruption in the first inning chased Boston starter Mike Nagy and handed the Red Sox only their third defeat in the last 16 games. Danny Walton's two-run single and a two-run triple by Andy Kosco were the key hits in the surge. Ron Theobald had two hits in the inning and drove in the final run. Rick Auerbach also drove in a run with a perfect squeeze bunt single.

The Brewers, whose six runs were their largest splurge of the season, benched five regulars yesterday. Tommy Harper, Dave May, Ted Kubiak, Mike Hogan and Ellie Rodriguez because of light hitting.

Ken Brett was magnificient in relief for Boston after ending the uprising in the first. The lefthander struck out 20 and allowed only four hits in 6 2-3 innings he worked before leaving for a pinch batter in the eighth.

The Brewers threatened mildly in the fifth when John Briggs led off with an infield single. He Milwaukee outfielder stole second, but was stranded there as Brett struck out Danny Walton, Bill Voss and Andy Kosco.

Phil Rood singled to lead off the sixth but again Brett fanned the next three batters.

Parsons walked five, but handcuffed the Red Sox until the ninth, when Boston kept intact its record of not being blanked this season.

The Red Sox have a break in the schedule before winding up a midwestern swing with a pair of night games against the Minnesota Twins.

UMass Over UNH; Crew JV's 2nd

Today's Game Cancelled

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

DURHAM, N.H.—The May 19th showdown between UMass and UConn took another step towards completion as the Redman nine swept a big twinbill from the University of New Hampshire, 13-0, 8-3, here on Saturday to run its win streak to 13 games and continue atop the Yankee Conference in its tight race with UConn.

The Huskies were idle in conference action over the weekend and remain at 7-1 in league play. The Redmen stand at 10-1 and the way it shapes up in the conference, UConn has single games remaining with UNH and Rhode Island and a three game series at Orono, Maine before the May 19th doubleheader at Storrs and UMass has a doubleheader with URI this Saturday before the showdown Tumbull.

The Redmen have the easier road to Storrs and it should be interesting to see how UConn comes out in its battles with Maine.

In other weekend action of importance, Harvard which had been breezing its way to the Eastern League championship and a berth in the District One Playoffs against the Yanks champs ran into a roadblock and possibly lost its title hopes as Princeton swept a doubleheader from the Crimson.

Omega this date of events Cornell has a good shot at the Eastern League title, which would exclude the Crimson from the District one playoffs and theoretically qualify the Yanks as champs for the College World Series in Omaha and this is a fairly safe assumption.

Storrs

[illegible] was [illegible] by the [illegible] with another [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] for the first time while the second game was a close affair in the opening innings before the Redmen opened up in the sixth, seventh and eighth innings to put away their 13th straight.

White was untouchable in mowing down the Wildcats on four hits, three of the infield variety, while striking out 14 with a popping fast ball and sharp curve that stifled the heavy bats of the one-two-three UNH hitters who came into the contest with batting averages over .400.

The tall lefthander allowed only two Wildcats to reach third base in his fourth straight complete effort. The biggest UNH threat came in the eighth when Dennis Lade opened with a triple to right only to be stranded as White got the next two men on strikes and the third out on a grounder to short.

The Redmen sent twelve men to the plate in the first inning and combined six hits and three walks for seven runs which was more than enough for White.

There was one casualty in the opening frame as tri-captain Jack Conroy reaggravated a leg injury in running out a single and will be lost to the team for a week or more.

In his place coach Dick Bergquist inserted Hose Kelly who filled in flawlessly in the field and had a good day at the bat including three hits in the second game.

The Redmen added single runs in the third and fifth and double scores in the fourth and ninth to complete their thirteen run onslaught. They continued to crack the ball sharply in producing a seven run second highlighted by Charley Manley's three hits and two long shots to right by Dan Esposito for a triple and homerun.

Game one was a game for the opening four frames as Redman starter Tom King was ineffective giving the Wildcats eight hits and all three runs before Jack Bernardo came in to rescue King in the fifth to pick up his fourth win of the season in a stellar five inning scoreless relief stint.

The senior righthander gave only three hits and struck out five, hitting the corners with his fastball and keeping the Wildcat hitters off balance with sharp curve.

Steve Newell, another in the long line of freshman standouts for coach Bergquist, staked the Redmen to a 2-0 lead in the second inning with a two run single. UNH came back in the bottom of the third to knot the count but Newell came through in the fourth with another two run single to increase the UMass lead to 4-2.

The Wildcats fought back to within one on three singles in their half of the forth and chased King from the game in the fifth before Bernardo came in and ended the Wildcat production for the game.

Tom McDermott came up with the unexpected in the Redman sixth, suicide squeezing Kelly home who has doubled to open the inning.

Manley opened the seventh with a triple and scored on an error and was followed to the plate by Mark Fidan who had double and was sent home by a Kelly single.

The Redmen closed out the scoring in the ninth as McDermott scored on a sacrifice fly by Ed McMahon after singling to open the frame and moving to third on two walks.

The Redmen totaled 14 hits for the game with Kelly leading the way with three. Newell, Esposito and Manley had a pair. For Manley his hits raised his season's average to a lusty .400 and extended his hitting streak to 10 games.

These were two big wins for UMass. UConn now has to keep winning to keep pace with the Redmen. What remains for coach Bergquist's men are four non-league games and four conference games, with the later four to decide the extent of the Redman season. With the Harvard miscue over the weekend it now appears that a playoff free trip awaits the Yankee Conference champion and the way the Redmen have been playing down the stretch it's a good bet now for the athletic department to start thinking Omaha.

Today's game against Amherst College has been cancelled so that Amherst will be able to fit Springfield College into its schedule. The game will not be replayed and will thus go down in UMass sports annals as a blank.

Foreman Heads Boxing Card

George Foreman, the leading challenger for Joe Frazier's world title and a pair of World Boxing Association champions will fight tonight in a tripleheader that will be seen on closed circuit television from three locations.

The highlight of the program, presented by K.O. Inc., will be a scheduled 15-rounder between unbeaten Foreman, of Hayward, Calif., and Gregorio Peralta of Argentina at Oakland.

The first fight on the card will be a 10-rounder between Ernie Terrell, of Chicago, a former WBA champion, and Louis Pires of Brazil, which is set for 9:15 EDT in Chicago.

Season Ends

PHILADELPHIA—Completing a great season, the UMass junior varsity crew finished in second place in their competition of the Dad Vail Regatta, making them the number two crew of colleges and college clubs in the East. They were surrounded by equally stirling performances by the UMass varsity and freshman crews Friday and Saturday, although only the jv's qualified for the finals.

Ridden by injuries, the varsity Redmen rowed exceptionally in the semi-finals on Saturday, after easily qualifying on Friday. Their time of 6:08.3 in the semi's was good enough to win in any other morning heat, but with unfortunate seating two other teams, Georgetown, who later won the final and Trinity had faster times in the Redman heat, and only two teams from each heat could qualify.

The Purple Heart should have been given to each varsity oarsman. With three members sick for parts of last week, the boat hadn't practiced much together. Before the semi final race began, they still weren't in good health, but decided to row just the same. No warm up was taken as usually done. In the first 100 yards, U Mass had broken in front. Each man was giving much more than thought possible.

Georgetown gained open water on the field, and UMass was in a torrid race for second with Trinity and Florida Tech, closing on Georgetown. At the line it was Georgetown in 6:03.4, Trinity in 6:06.5, and UMass in 6:08.3. The illnesses had caught up on the Redmen in the stretch.

Even if the Redmen had qualified for the final, they would not have raced, as the superhuman effort took its toll, sending one oarsman to the hospital and another to bed. Their viruses prevented them from breathing.

The varsity did not race in the consolation for place.

"Under the cirumstances with sicknesses and injuries, the varsity rowed better than I or any other coach had the right to expect," said coach Mike Faherty. "Their effort is testament to the performance they expect of themselves. It was their best race of the year, and showed just what they are worth.

"I am very proud to be associated with this type of crew. It's the best boat we've ever had."

The crew he was talking about was:

Bow Dave Richard
2 Al Flanders
3 Bill Moran
4 Doug Thompson
5 Bob Weimar
6 Kevin O'Brien
7 Ted Fitzpatrick
Str Tom Mone
Cox Chris Jedrey

Seniors Tom Mone, Dave Richard, and Chris Jedrey were in their last race, and although disheartened that they were not in the final, the tremendous showing their boat made under pain was a satisfying remembrance.

On the most pleasant part of the weekend, the junior varsity eight claimed itself the second honor in the finals.

After winning the preliminary by ten seconds, foremost against Georgetown, coming in second by nine tenths of a second in the semi-final behind Marietta, the Redmen repeated the second spot in the final, again behind Marietta.

The big race was very close between UMass and Marietta. Into view, it was still close, with UMass shortening the gap. Then Marietta surged, looking as strong as anything to go ahead, and St. Joe's was challenging. After Marietta had finished in 6:04.8, right at the end, the Redmen overpowered St. Joseph's, to impressively run the course in 6:06.3, to St. Joe's 6:09.3.

There were illnesses in the jv boat as well as visable nervousness, as this was, for most of them, their first really big affair.

They had won five straight going into Saturday, and continued their great season by taking the highest place ever by UMass in a single Dad Vail event, seated:

Bow Paul Winchell
2 Mel Stream
3 Joe Fiola
4 John Allen
5 Chris Hodson
6 Steve Conner
7 Ken Rivkin
Str Rick Jones
Cox Tom Hayes

Coach Faherty had nothing but praises for the jv's.

"I really like crew with a really great year.

"I think Rick Jones should get a lot of credit for bringing the crew together. You could really hear the sparkplug in a fast engine."

The freshmen showed leaps of improvement in their events.

On a steady upward line of performances, the frosh beat crews in the Vail that they had lost to earlier in the year.

The four of Russ Schott, Jim Kennedy, Rich Clair, John Lund coxed by Kenny Raymond, were impressive in the preliminaries, just by the nature that all the competition were varsity fours. The Little Redmen came in third behind two boats that were second and third in the finals.

There are indications that this four will possibly do additional rowing together this year.

Ending fourth in the first round, the frosh eight then improved their time to 6:31.4 for a second spot in the race for place, making them eighth out of 17. In their boat sat Jim Ulwick, Bob Sanderson, John Gombar, Rich Jamara, Chris Kudla, Kevin Kaylor, Phil Kenney, and John Curtis, with coxswain Mike Thompson.

Most jeopardized by the late start onto the water, the freshmen kept working together to come on strong, making Coach Faherty pleased overall.

VAIL VIALS: St. Joe's repeated as overall champ, finishing 5:59.7 in back of Georgetown, 5:55.2 in the varsity event, and fourth in the frosh and jv races...Marietta had the best frosh eight, 6:05.6, the best lightweight eight, 6:07, and best jv... they came in second overall...according to my figures, UMass tied for seventh out of 35....Saturday it rained like yesterday...

NOW WE'VE SEEN EVERYTHING—End of semester blues has gotten everyone all choked up. Nothin's going on, nobody wants to go anyway, and it probably wasn't worth it to begin with. Witness yesterday for example. We had Ashley Montagu, and a silly sign and a bulldozer all lined up waiting for us to watch. Interesting, hmmm? (MDC photos by Steve Schmidt)

Montagu Extols Women's Superiority

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

"It is a fact of nature that women are more superior than men," stated Dr. Ashley Montagu to a capacity crowd at last evening's DVP lecture. The group, which was predominantly female, heard the English-born author declare that even though men are physically stronger, strength is no longer of value in determining superiority.

He said that the male has the brawn to throw his weight around when he wants to impose an idea rather than using his brain. "This, he said, "is one of the male's inferior traits. "The female is more resistant to disease than the male of the species, and this strength is determined by the chromosomes in the female's body," he said in continuing.

"Chromosomes are the basis for the females' superiority." He said that the x chromosone of the female is seven times larger than that of the male and that the male chromosome is a "sorry" specimin when compared to that of the female. "The male is nothing more than a crippled x chromosome," he said.

"The female must be maintained if the species is to be maintained," Dr. Montagu continued. He told the group that the female is stronger because it is she who bears the young. "Biologically, she is the stronger part of the species."

Emotions was the next topic of discussion of the hour long lecture. He attempted to prove untrue the old belief that women are inferior to men because they are more emotional. Dr. Montagu said that women use their emotions with the purpose that they were set up for. "The male doesn't know how to use his emotions correctly," he went on. When he mentioned that the male uses a car as an instrument of personality which makes up for a sexual impetus, Dr. Montagu drew a large applause from the audience.

In continuing he mentioned a report made by the British during World War II that stated that males outnumber females in hospitals for psychiatric help. The ratio which he stated was 70-1. He stated that these same results were found in cases all over the world.

"Females never had an equal opportunity with males," he went on. He said that the famous inventors and artists were males because of the fact that women were never oriented to these fields. "When you investigate intelligence and IQ tests, you will find that in most cases women have surpassed men. Dr. Montagu continued.

"In studies conducted buy UNESCO it has been shown that the women works 8 hours a day more than the male." The female works 25 hours a day because she gets up an hour earlier.

In ending his talk, Dr. Montagu said that he suspects that women will never achieve as much as men have because they won't want to. "Being engaged in a process of making human beings out of children and husbands is more important than the creative arts," he told the group. "This is what women have been selected for: to endow in humanity."

Wood Warns Businessmen

By MARK SILVERMAN
Special to the MDC

MONTREAL, Canada — President Wood warned several hundred businessmen here yesterday that they may find college recruiting difficult in the future if they ignore the concerns of society today.

Wood spoke before the 51st convention of the National Association of Savings Banks to a crowd which police estimated to be in excess of 250 persons.

The University's president told the businessmen that "Business is taking a heavy rap for inflation, for pollution, for discriminatory hiring, for insensitivity to consumers, for a lack of concern for safety, and for a failure to promote concern for women."

"You know and I know that some of this is unfair," he told the group, but added, "Not all of it is."

Speaking at length about what he termed the responsibility of the business community, the UMass Chief made clear his belief that a great deal of the criticism leveled at business leaders by youth is valid.

He urged his listeners to follow the lead of this sort of criticism. He said that businessmen and college students could work together well if they both put their minds to it.

However, he assured the business community before him that unjust criticism by consumers would never force them to act out of fear.

Wood, who was Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for a time during the Johnson Administration, is no stranger to the Spring speaker circuit. He was a much sought-after speaker during his tenure as Chairman of the MBTA and as Director of the Joint Harvard-MIT Center for Urban Affairs.

The speech here yesterday was, however, the first time Wood has received major press attention for a non-University address since he came to UMass this Fall.

R. COLDWELL WOOD

Claim V.C. Uses Foreigners

SAIGON (AP)—Soviet, Chinese, Cuban, North Korean and French "military strategists" are advising Communist-led forces fighting in South Vietnam, a high-ranking defector from Hanoi claimed Tuesday.

He said the Frenchmen were former prisoners of war from the French Indochina conflict who were not repatriated under the 1954 Geneva accords.

The defector is Dr. Dang Tan, a former official in North Vietnam's Defense Ministry sent to South Vietnam as "minister of public health" in a proposed revolutionary government.

He said he personally saw foreign Communist advisers at rest stations on the Ho Chi Minh Trail when he traveled south through Laos in 1967.

Tan, 42, spoke to the Associated Press through an interpreter in his first interview since his defection Sept. 26, 1969. He later appeared at a news conference, but it was not explained why he had been kept under wraps by Saigon's Chieu Hoi-open arms-ministry for more than 1 1/2 years.

Tan's revelations could help to explain recurring reports of Caucasians seen fighting with Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units. These never have been proved conclusively because U.S. and South Vietnamese forces have never found any Caucasian bodies among enemy dead.

Asked if some of the foreign advisers might have been American prisoners of war, Tan replied: "No. Hanoi propaganda says American GIs are fighting with the VC-NVA but I have never seen this with my own eyes.

"The men I saw were Russians, Chinese, Cubans, North Koreans and French. They came south to study the situation and see how they could help. I have seen them deep in South Vietnamese territory. I have heard them speaking their foreign languages."

Tan attributed his defection to gradual disillusionment-"No one reason but a lot of little reasons over a long period of time. I just began to feel communism was outdated, not a suitable system of government for a country."

Bartlett Is Home To Clinic

A young child walks timidly down the long corridors of Bartlett Hall, clinging to his mother's hand, shyly anticipating what he will discover inside the room number 110.

The little boy, Bobby, has an articulation problem and perhaps a hearing loss. So he has been referred to the Communication Disorders Clinic.

Upon entering, Bobby finds himself caught up in an exciting atmosphere, one of activity and people. On his way to the waiting room, which is equipped with magazines and colorful trucks and other toys, he sees children and adults working with their therapists in small rooms.

Bobby's mother has heard that any resident of Massachusetts and bordering states who has a communication problem is eligible to seek an appointment at the clinic. Referrals come from school nurses, teachers, speech and hearing clinicians, local doctors, Head Start, or institutions such as Belchertown State School, the Department of Public Health, the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission, and Westover Air Force Base. No one is too young or too old to seek help.

Bobby's parents received an immediate response to their inquiry for an appointment. They were asked to fill out short identification forms about birth, reception of the problem by the family, onset of the problem, and several other items. Once these were returned, an appointment was made for Bobby at the clinic for an interview.

"Initial evaluation day" is a busy time for the professional clinic staff, according to clinic director, Prof. Jay Melrose. One full morning each week is set aside for interviews with new clients, although additional meetings are also held during the week.

First on the agenda is the interview with Bobby's mother, since Bobby is too young to be an informant. A case history is taken to try and determine the type of Bobby's problem, stressing his medical situation, school history, personality, relationship with brothers and sisters, and his mother's health during pregnancy. Bobby is then evaluated on his overall speech ability. His oral mechanism--teeth, tongue and palate--is examined and tested for its ability to function normally.

Special tests, such as those of articulation, voice quality and fluency, are given, depending on the nature of his problem. Each client is also given a hearing screening test which indicates whether a hearing loss is involved. Bobby puts on the headphones, perhaps pretending he is a pilot or an astronaut circling the moon, and is tested with one of the clinic's audiometers.

The clinic screens a number of persons with special hearing problems by administering complete audiological tests in the sound-treated room. Different frequencies and intensities of sound and the ability to perceive speech are tested by the audiometer.

According to Prof. Melrose, if the problem indicates that ongoing therapy is needed for either correction of the speech problem or for lip reading and auditory training, Bobby may get help at the UMass clinic or be referred to an agency or clinic closer to his home. Prof. Melrose emphasizes that although the UMass clinic does see many clients each month, its main purpose, as at any university, is to meet the training needs of the majors in the field. Community service is a secondary factor.

He explains to Bobby's mother that the service to the community is free of charge, the clinic funded by the state as part of the University's program.

In addition to the director, five other University professors and two supervisors staff the clinic. Seniors and masters degrees candidates, as part of their clinical practicum in speech pathology and audiology, work with clients in therapy that is supervised by the professional staff.

Advanced students are often sent to public schools, hospitals with speech clinics, veterans' hospitals, Belchertown State School, Clarke School for the Deaf, and various other facilities. They also attend monthly meetings of the Massachusetts Public Health "Plastics Clinic" in Springfield, for cleft palate and related problems--as well as screen children in the Springfield Head Start Program.

Therapists deal with problems running the gamut from articulation problems of a young child to aphasia in an elderly gentleman, who, perhaps due to a stroke, cannot effectively perceive speech, or talk.

UMass students also benefit from the work of the clinic. For example, students with stuttering problems meet each week in a group with their therapists and Prof. Melrose to discuss their problems and progress.

The Communication Disorders staff sees people of all ages with all types of problems, beginning early each weekday, in its small, yet effectively run clinic. "Therapy is changing behavior," Prof. Melrose says. "It brings a substandard form of speech into the realm of acceptable communication."

In today's society where so much emphasis is placed on speech, UMass is playing its small part in closing a special kind of "communication gap" between children like Bobby and the world.

Eyewitness Report

May Day

The "straight" news media has not reported accurately and completely what actually took place in Washington during the May Day activities. Perhaps it was not merely an unwillingness on the part of the press to report what took place as much as it was a case of the police and government not allowing the press their full freedom. I arrived in Washington Tuesday so I will report only on what happened from that day on, and will report only on what I personally saw.

During Tuesday afternoon there was a march on the Justice Department. Some protestors sat on the steps, a few were on the streets, a few on the island in the middle of the street, but the majority of people were on the sidewalk on either side of the Justice Department. The police came by, filled up 5 or 6 busses with protestors who were gathered around the Department, and took them to confinement. Meanwhile, I was on the island in the middle of the road and police came by, many of whom had removed their badges and identification, and were pushing people off the island into the street toward the sidewalk. At the same time police on motorscooters traveling about 15-20 mph or faster were riding on the sidewalks aimed directly at masses of people. So people ended up sandwiched in between the police on the sidewalks and police on the islands and the streets. This was obviously a scare tactic since it accomplished nothing else. Some press men were arrested when they took pictures and their bails were set high.

On Wednesday about 1200 persons were arrested for sitting on the steps of the Capitol even though many claim that they were invited there by certain congressmen. They were bussed to the colliseum. This time the police had on their badges but they did not advise anyone of their rights. The press were kept out for several hours until the crowd started shouting to let them in. Finally the police gave in. The thing to remember, though, is that they tried to keep the press out.

Conditions at the colliseum on Wednesday were fairly good. Food was available from churches and poor people's groups but not from the government. The colliseum was coed, people were friendly, and blankets were available. But at the cell block the next day (a cell-block is roughly 3 times the size of an average dorm room and has 2 benches, 1 toilet, and 1 sink) there were no blankets, and people either slept on cold cement floors, steel benches, or had to stand. My cell block contained 110 people.

All this time most of us could not get a chance to make phone calls or see a lawyer. The lawyers and the press were not allowed in the prisons for a long time. Finally, a court order was obtained which allowed lawyers inside but even then police tried to keep them out. At the colliseum most of the police would not let a person make a phone call unless he was processed first, that is, unless he gave fingerprints, was photographed, and filled out forms. Most of the protestors refused until they were advised of their legal rights.

On Friday we were bussed to a third prison because an investigating committee ordered us to be sent out of the cell block and into a place with more room and better facilities. Our trials were on Friday to determine amount of bail and the dates of our trial.

A final word is in order about the actions of police and protestors. Some of the protestors egged on police with namecalling but the majority of the protestors were peaceful and had no weapons of any kind.

End of Draft

'Calamity For Our Nation's Security'

Sen. John C. Stennis, D—Miss., says he'll sponsor a resolution designed to limit the President's war-making power. The chairman of the Armed Services Committee appeared on ABC's "Issues and Answers" in Washington. Stennis, a strong supporter of the Pentagon and the administration's Vietnam policies, said his proposal would not apply to the current Indochina conflict. (AP Wirephoto)

WASHINGTON (AP)—The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said Monday it would be "a calamity for our nation's security" if Congress undoes the draft in an effort to end the war in Southeast Asia.

Sen. John C. Stennis, (D—Miss)., said the war is the underlying issue in what looms as a marathon debate over a two-year extension of the Selective Service System.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, (D—Mont)., said the debate will be finished before June 30 when the current draft law expires.

The draft bill is expected to attract a series of amendments certain to produce lengthy debate. Chief among them is the legislation proposed by Sens. Mark O. Hatfield, (R—Ore.), and George McGovern, (D—S.D.), to compel U.S. withdrawal from South Vietnam by the end of the year.

"I think its chances have increased considerably since last year," Mansfield said.

The Democratic leader also said he believes the Senate will approve an amendment to limit the draft extension to a single year, a move Stennis said would cripple the military manpower system.

"I fear the results, the chaos, that will be created if we go into a one-year period, or if we cut it off completely," said Sen. Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, senior Republican member of the Armed Services Committee.

The House has approved a two-year draft extension.

The bill also includes pay raises designed to help recruit volunteers.

"I personally don't believe that with the present antimilitary feeling in this country we can have a volunteer army," said Sen. William Saxbe, (R—Ohio).

"Nor do I think that in a democracy we should have a mercenary army," he said.

McGovern Stands Firm, Will Address Legislature

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. George S. McGovern (D-S.D.) said Monday he will not change his plans to address the Massachusetts legislature Wednesday, despite a request from the Republican leadership that he stay away.

In a telegram to state Rep. Francis W. Hatch, (R-Beverly) McGovern said his appearance before a joint session of the House and Senate "is an opportunity for enlightened discussion between legislators in the federal and state level, the kind of contact that is all to infrequent in our country."

Hatch, the House minority leader, said in a letter to McGovern last week that he takes "a dim view of a parade of Democratic presidential candidates using the legislature as a sounding board to further their own ambitions."

The scheduled appearance by McGovern, the only Democrat to have formally announced his candidacy for the 1972 nomination, follows the recent speech by Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) to the state legislature. Bayh is considered a potential candidate for the nomination.

McGovern said, "I cannot accede to that request" to reconsider the planned appearance, "because to do so would be to reject an honor and an opportunity."

"You are concerned that other national leaders will seek to address the Massachusetts Legislature. In my view, you should seek such a situation as the highest compliment to the legislature. I would hope that the leaders of both major political parties would be given a chance to speak if they request it."

Hatch led the opposition to the legislative order calling for a joint session to hear McGovern.

Massive Exploitation Of Servicemen Revealed

REDSTONE ARSENAL, Ala. (AP)—The Army charged Monday that a master sergeant who operated service clubs in Vietnam diverted to a coded Swiss bank account $7,200 given him by an American cigarette company to distribute free smokes to servicemen.

The prosecutor, prior to the opening of testimony at the court-martial of M Sgt. William Higdon, said the payments were made by a promotional agent for the Liggett and Meyer Tobacco Co., makers of Chesterfield and L&M cigarettes.

Higdon, said the prosecutor, Capt. George Little, caused the promotional checks to be made out to the name of Georg Schell and diverted them to a coded account in the Foreign Commerce Bank of Zurich, Switzerland.

Higdon is charged with bribery, larceny and graft and faces up to 19 years in prison if convicted.

Glenn Faulks, general manager of Envoy-International-Asia, testified that the tobacco firm paid the money because pilferage had siphoned off large numbers of cigarettes sent directly to the troops.

Faulks, the first witness, told the court Liggett and Meyer wanted the money to go to the treasuries of the service clubs Higdon operated at Long Binh and then paid out for the company's products being used for promotional purposes.

Higdon, 41, of East Point, Ga., who has been in the Army 24 years, is also accused to taking more than $25,000 in illegal payments from Universal Consultants, Inc., to influence the award of refrigeration and airconditioning maintenance contracts between that firm and the clubs.

Asked how each check was made out, Faulks said: "Sgt. Higdon told me to make it out to Georg Schell."

Asked if Higdon gave any reason for having the checks made out in that name, Faulks replied: "None that I recall."

Canonero II Rates A Fourth At Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP)—Kentucky Derby winner Canonero II was rated no better than fourth Monday in the probably odds for the $150,000-added Preakness as the field for Saturday's classic grew to 12 likely starters.

Earl Hart, the official forecaster of probable odds at Pimlico, rated Jim French, the Kentucky Derby runner-up, as the likely Preakness favorite at 5-2.

Executioner, second in last Friday's Preakness prep, was listed at 7-2, followed by Eastern Fleet, who was fourth in the Derby, at 5-1.

Canonero II, the surprise winner of the Derby by 3 3/4 lengths, was rated by Hart at 6-1, with Bold Reason, the third-place Derby finisher, at 8-1.

Hoover's Anniversary; 47 Years As FBI Chief

WASHINGTON (AP)-J. Edgar Hoover, embattled director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, marked his 47th anniversary as FBI chief Monday by putting in a full day's work while words of praise for him were heard on Capitol Hill.

"Mr. Hoover arrived well before 9 a.m. and has been on the job all day," an FBI spokesman said. "Today has been just like any other day."

Hoover's routine apparently was unaltered by any observance of the anniversary. He was named to the job by then Atty. Gen. Harlan F. Stone on May 10, 1924.

In the past year, Hoover's usual immunity to criticism has been cracked a number of times, and several influential Democrats have called for his resignation.

But President Nixon and Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, his immediate boss, have voiced their support for the 76-year-old director.

Charles Fitzpatrick, who said he joined the Communist party in 1959 at the FBI's request, and House Internal Security Committee Chairman Richard H. Ichord praised Hoover Monday.

Fitzpatrick, a teacher who testified he kept the FBI informed on acitvities of the Communist party in the New York City area during the late 1950s and 1960s, described himself as greatly upset by recent anti-Hoover statements he had seen.

Ichord, a Democrat from Missouri, applauded Hoover and the FBI.

The director, Ichord said, has battled against creation of a national police force and has fought behind the scenes against expansion of the FBI.

Berrigan Evidence:

'Prejudicial To The Defense'

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-Photostats of letters in connection with the charge that the Rev. Philip Berrigan and seven others conspired to kidnap a presidential adviser were attacked in court Monday as prejudicial to the defense.

The government claims the letters were between Father Berrigan and Sister Elizabeth McAlister, a codefendant on leave from Marymount College in Tarrytown, N.Y., and purport to outline that alleged plot.

In an oral argument seeking to have the case dismissed, defense attorney Leonard Boudin, a Harvard Law School professor, charged the government "engaged in prejudicial pretrial publicity" in violation of the grand jury's secrecy rule by attaching photostats of the letters to the indictment.

In asking that the prosecution be cited for contempt, Boudin claimed the photostats "prejudiced the defendant's chance of having a fair trial."

Target of the alleged kidnap plot was said to have been presidential adviser Henry Kissinger. Its aim was reported to be to force an end to the Vietnam war.

A defense motion for a temporary ban on the government making public any letters or other evidence in the case was denied.

Attorneys for the eight defendants charged also the prosecution of the case was a conspiracy to bolster the image of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover.

They asked Federal Judge R. Dixon Herman to dismiss the charges against Berrigan, imprisoned antiwar priest, and the others because the government's prosecution of the case "threatens to prostitute our judicial system."

Paul O'Dwyer of New York a prominent civil rights and labor lawyer, told Judge Herman of U.S. District Court that "the behavior of the prosecution has been little more than a conspiracy to bolster the public image and to pander to the injured ego of the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

The first indications of the case came to light when Hoover reported the alleged plot to kidnap Kissinger in testimony before a Senate subcommittee last November.

A federal grand jury here indicted six persons on Jan. 12 of conspiring to kidnap and to blow up heating tunnels of government buildings in the nation's capital. A superseding indictment adding two more defendants and adding charges of conspiring to destroy draft board records across the nation was returned April 30.

Sweden Presses For U.S., Vietnamese Agreement

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP)-Sweden will take no action on receiving American prisoners of war held in North Vietnam until the United States and North Vietnam agree on their future, a Swedish Foreign Office official said Monday.

He said Sweden had informed the U.S. Embassy here of its position following a statement made by America's chief negotiator at the Paris Peace talks, David K.E. Bruce. Bruce said April 29 he welcomed reports that Sweden was prepared to arrange for transfer of POWs from North Vietnam to Sweden.

A North Vietnamese delegate to the peace talks said later on Swedish radio he was disappointed that Sweden had stepped into the "trap laid by the Nixon administration for the transfer of the prisoners and their internment in Sweden."

The Foreign Office spokeman here said Monday that Sweden had not received any official request from the United States concerning American prisoners, nor had Sweden conferred on the matter with the North Vietnamese.

But the Swedish-America Shipping Line's managing director, Leif Janson, acknowledged that the line has had several contacts with the U.S. government about the transportation of POWs, although he stressed that agreement by the United States and the North Vietnamese was essential before any action was taken.

Nixon Calls Rogers' Trip "Useful"

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State William P. Rogers reported to President Nixon Monday on his Middle East mission. The White House said Nixon feels the trip was "useful in making progress toward eventual solution to the problems in the area and in carrying on the momentum of the discussions."

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler gave that assessment as Nixon and Rogers talked in the President's Ovas Office with Nixon's national security adviser, Henry Kissinger, sitting in.

Rogers did not talk with reporters at the White House.

Joseph J. Sisco, the assistant secretary of state in charge of Middle East affairs, cautioned meanwhile against too much optimism that settlement of the Suez Canal issue is near.

"I want to caution you we are not on the brink of any settlement on the Suez Canal," Sisco told reporters on his arrival at Andrews Air Force Base.

"This is an ongoing process which will take time," he added.

Sisco, who accompanied Rogers on his Middle East tour, was dispatched by Rogers to return to Cairo to brief the Egyptian government on Israel's position on reopening the Suez.

"It is important to keep in mind," Sisco said, "that peace-making and achievement of positive results involves a process of building confidence in place of the legacy of suspicion of the past."

An interim Suez Canal agreement "would be a meaningful step" in this direction, he said, but he added that "serious difficulties and differences remain between the parties which will take time to resolve."

Yet, Sisco went on, "I believe there is today more hope that progress can be made than there was before." His meeting with President Anwar Sadat of Egypt Sunday "has reinforced this belief," he declared.

He declined to go into details, saying "In this role of constructive diplomacy it is well at this juncture to avoid indicating the content of this discussion." He said the Egyptian leaders assured him they will give careful study to what Sisco called "my reports to them."

Ziegler said Nixon expressed appreciation to Rogers for undertaking the 12-day trip. And the press secretary reiterated Rogers himself reported there is "some basis to believe the differences between the parties have narrowed somewhat."

Dollar Plummets, Then Recovers

The dollar plummeted on some European currency exchanges Monday but recovered slightly in the first trading day since a weekend flurry of decisions to ease Europe's monetary crisis.

The dollar was steady in London and Paris and was up slightly in Milan. Britain, France and Italy did not follow other European nations in taking steps to halt the influx of dollars. They said they had no monetary problems.

This was the first trading day since most European foreign exchanges closed Wednesday to halt the heavy flow of dollars caused by speculators, who traded dollars for other currencies.

No large volume of money movements was reported as traders reacted with caution and confusion to the changes, triggered by West Germany's decision Sunday to let the mark find its own level to deal with a massive inrush of dollars. Bonn said the dollar influx was adding to its inflation problems.

The dollar nose-dived to a record low of 3.51 marks shortly after trading opened on the Frankfurt foreign currency market.

It wavered upward to 3.5375 marks around noon and closed at 3.525. The market felt the effects of the government's decision to let supply and demand dictate prices.

The official parity was still 3.66 marks to the dollar.

The government measure was strengthened during the day when the West German Central Bank ordered a check on interest payments on foreign currency deposits. This would discourage dollar deposits. The Central Bank must approve any interest payments.

The German government also barred nonresidents from purchasing such investments as domestic bonds. This also will check the influx of dollars.

In Switzerland, where the franc was revalued upward by 7 per cent, the decision had a depressing effect on the stock market. Shares declined sharply because revaluation will make exports more expensive.

The dollar parity was changed from 4.37 to 4.08 francs and was being traded in Zurich at 4.09 to 4.11 to sell at the close, a slight rise from the lows.

In Vienna, where Austria revalued the schilling upward by 5.05 per cent, the exchange value of the dollar dropped about four cents. The official rate was changed from 26 to 24.75 to the dollar.

The Austrian action was twofold, to halt the inflow of speculative dollars and to prevent substantial price increases in German goods. About 42 per cent of all Austrian imports come from West Germany.

BONN, May 9—MARKING HIS WORDS—West German Foreign Minister Walter Scheel is surrounded by newsmen prior to entering a cabinet meeting in Bonn Sunday. At the meeting, Chancellor Willy Brandt's cabinet decided to let the mark fluctuate on international money markets to stem the flow of unwanted U.S. dollars.

Army Man Sentenced For Firearms Snafu

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP)—Retired Maj. Gen. Carl C. Turner was sentenced Monday to three years in prison for soliciting 136 firearms from the Chicago Police Department and keeping them for his own use while he was the Army's No. 1 policeman.

District Judge Oren L. Lewis, before imposing sentence, was critical of people who he said wrote him "lots of letters", including U.S. senators and high military personnel asking for a minimal sentence.

Lewis noted that Turner, former Army provost marshal general and chief U.S. marshal, had pleaded guilty to the charge last month.

The judge said everyone got equal treatment in his court, but acknowledged that his awareness of Turner's former high position inclined him to be less lenient.

"A man who is entrusted with such high responsibility has a greater burden to be honest," Lewis said. The judge also indicated he believes Turner could have been tried on the eight other charges which were dismissed.

Turner agreed to turn himself in to U.S. marshals next Monday. Now 58, he will be eligible for parole after serving one year.

The maximum sentence Turner could have received was five years and a $5,000 fine.

He is also scheduled to stand trial June 7 on four counts of income tax evasion, according to U.S. Atty. Brian P. Gettings.

Turner, of Springfield, Va., was provost marshal general of the Army from 1964 to 1968. He pleaded guilty to soliciting the firearms from the Chicago police in 1968, misrepresenting that they were for the federal government, then embezzling or converting them to his own use.

He was the central figure in a Senate Permanent Investigation subcommittee probe of noncommissioned officers clubs in 1969 and under pressure from the Justice Department resigned as chief U.S. marshal, a job he had held for five months.

Turner acknowledged during the Senate hearing that he had recieved nearly 700 weapons, some of them confiscated by police in Chicago and Kansas City during disorders after the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

He said he had turned about half of them over to the Army and many were repaired for museum display use. He acknowledged that he had sold at least 23 others to a North Carolina dealer and said he destroyed and traded others.

Gov't Asks Dismissal Of Shea Case

BOSTON (AP) - The government Monday asked the U.S. District Court in Boston to dismiss the state's challenge to the war in Vietnam, brought under the Massachusetts Shea law.

The law, passed in 1970, provides that no Massachusetts resident be required to serve in any overseas hostilities except in an emergency or when hostilities are ratified by congressional action. It was sponsored by former state Rep. H. James Shea, (D- Newton).

It also requires that the state attorney general bring suit in the federal courts to enforce the law.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn originally went to the Supreme Court of the United States, which refused to hear the case. Later he filed a new suit in Boston in behalf of 12 men serving in the armed forces.

The new suit contends that there has been no formal declaration of war in Vietnam, nor any congressional action to make the war official.

Asst. U.S. Atty. William A. Brown filed briefs with the District Court, contending that the Quinn suit should be dismissed.

"This case is not one which merely touches foreign relations," the government brief said. "It involves a direct challenge to the manner in which those relations have been conducted. A judicial inquiry which those relations have been conducted. A judicial inquiry which accepted that challenge would both undermine the credibility of the nation's promises to friendly nations and threaten severe embarrassment to those who conduct its foreign affairs."

The brief contended that the suit is "in actuality one brought against the President of the United States and so is beyond the jurisdiction of the district court."

Taking note of the fact the suit was filed for 12 members of the armed forces, the government's brief said that "to inquire into the legality or illegality of status orders and to dictate when and on what terms the military can allocate its personnel is encroaching in an area totally without a court's expertise and jurisdiction."

Dead Monk Excommunicated, Students Charge Cover-Up

SAIGON (AP)—The Buddhist hierarchy excommunicated Monday a monk who burned himself to death in a protest against the Vietnam war. Hue University students charged that monks of the Bao Quang pagoda were striving to keep his gravesite a secret.

The students said Thick-venerable-Chon The, 27, was to be secretly burned in an effort to deny him martyrdom in the antiwar cause.

The dispute between the Hue students-traditionally South Vietnam's most militant-and their natural allies in the usually anti-Saigon government An Quang Buddhist sect resulted in disruption of Chon The's funeral procession, after his self-immolation was disavowed by other monks.

Thick Chon Kim, a spokesman for the Bao Quang pagoda, which is allied with the An Quang, declared: "Self-immolation is not the policy of the Buddhist community."

He said Chon The's suicide by fire in Hue Sunday-2, 515th anniversary of Buddha's birth-was "the decision of one monk."

"This man disobeyed the church. We tried to stop him, but he escaped and his supporters helped him. Because he disobeyed, he is no longer part of the Buddhist community.

"His funeral will be a family funeral only, not the funeral of a monk. In the name of Buddhism, we refuse to accept this act, but for the sake of humanity we must have a funeral. This year we must all concentrate on praying for peace."

Associated Press photographer Koichiro Morita reported from Hue that many students from Hue University attended the funeral at Bao Quang pagoda.

Although monks asked that only clergy and family accompany the coffin to the gravesite, many students joined the procession on motorbikes and unfurled in front of the hearse a banner reading: "Students of the Hue University Student Union sympathize with the act of Chon The."

This resulted in a confrontation and the funeral procession, including the coffin, returned to the pagoda.

HUD Singled Out For Ineffectiveness

WASHINGTON (AP)-For the second time in seven months, the Civil Rights Commission accused the federal bureaucracy Monday of substituting empty promises for effective enforcement of antidiscrimination laws-at a point when "time is running out."

The commission reserved its harshest criticism for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, but said the blame for what it called ineffective and unaggressive civil rights action must be shared "by everybody from the President on down."

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University and chairman of the bipartisan six-member commission called for a moral reawakening of the American people to prevent racial polarization of society with its attendant threat of violence.

He said the cliche that "you get the government you deserve" holds firmly for civil rights.

"Unless you have bombings and burnings and violence, people have a tendency to forget and fall back to sleep again," Hesburgh said at a news conference.

If the commission's warnings continue to go unheeded, he said, "I see happening the hypocrisy of saying one thing and doing another; I see happening an enormous frustration on the part of our minority citizens."

The commission's report follows by seven months the issuance of a 1,1115 page document in which the commission asserted that hostility towards civil rights, plus bureaucratic inertia, threatened to nullify civil rights laws of the past two decades.

The basis of Monday's report was a response from 27 to 40 agencies covered in the earlier study to questions on how they were carrying out the commission's recommendations of last October.

The report found little progress, and in the housing area, regression. It praised the efforts of White House counsel Leonard Garment and George M. Shultz, head of the Office of Management and Budget, to promote civil rights considerations in federal decision-making.

But leadership from the top, the commission said, "must be made an institutional function of the White House staff and not the ad hoc expression of interest on the part of individual White House aides."

The report said the Department of Housing and Urban Development has retreated from a policy of economically open communities that it had espoused last summer.

Throughout the news conference, Hesburgh and other commission members refused to single out Nixon for criticism. Said Hesburgh: "I haven't been satisfied with the performance of the past four presidents."

Rolls-Royce, Lockheed Set On TriStar Project

LONDON (AP)-Defense Minister Lord Carrington said Monday the state-owned Rolls-Royce company and American Lockheed are on the point of agreement to go ahead with the TriStar airliner project.

The two firms are negotiating a new contract, Carrington told the House of Lords, which must rest on both United States and British government support.

He said:

—Effective financing of TriStar can only come with the help of the U.S. government.

Effective development of the RB211 engine, which had been designed specifically for TriStar, can only be given by the British government.

Carrington disclosed that Lockheed has agreed in prolonged negotiations to pay more for the 550 engines they have ordered. This was to meet soaring development and production costs. And the firm has agreed to waive claims on the British for late-delivery penalties.

Rolls-Royce collapsed Feb. 4 mainly because it could not carry the RB211 engine program through. The government took over the firm and set out to negotiate more realistic terms with Lockheed which, itself, was in financial difficulties.

A major aim of Prime Minister Edward Heath's government is to preserve Britain's role as a major international aviation power. Another aim is to safeguard the jobs of more than 40,000 workers.

Talks still are going on in London among Lookheed, Rolls-Royce and four major airlines which had contracted to buy TriStar at prices quoted on the basis of the old contract with Rolls-Royce.

"Because RB211 has been designed for TriStar and there is at present no other significant market for it, it was necessary as part of the contract negotiations to be sure about the future of the TriStar project itself," Carrington said.

To safeguard that project and simultaneously the Lockheed Corp. it sell-President Nixon's administration is asking Congress to back up $250 million worth of bank loans to the firm.

Hartford Paper Cops A.P. Award

NEWTON, Mass. (AP)-The Hartford Courant won the annual Sevellon Brown Memorial Award Monday for "disinterested and meritorious public service" by an Associated Press newspaper in New England.

The award was presented during the spring meeting of the New England Associated Press News Executives Association.

Executive Editor George Kentera of The Newark, N.J. News, who judged the competition, selected a group of stories by T. Dennie Williams for the award. Kentera cited Williams "for the excellent and exhaustively researched articles on the exploitation of immigrants."

Kentera cited four other newspapers for excellence in the area of public service. They were: The Providence Journal, for all five of its entries. The Boston Globe for the overall quality of its five entries. The Evening Gazette of Worcester and reporter Everett M. Skehan, for persistence, initiative and hardwork in developing a story on pollution.

The Lawrence Eagle-Tribune and city editor Andrew Coburn and reporter Jack Wark for their commendable and thorough coverage of the Methuen police controversy.

The Hartford Counrant's entry was selected from among 36 submitted by 14 newspapers in the New England states.

Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight told the editors that the biggest battle newspapers face "is not against those who would be censors, but those who would make newspapers a regulated industry."

Dwight, a former reporter and newspaper executive, said the "failure to distinguish between newspapers and the licensed media is leading to the general acceptance that newspapers are, or should be, a public utility."

Robert C. Achorn, editor of the Worcester Telegram and Gazette and president of NEAP-NEA, appointed general manager Robert W. McCreanor of the Pawtucket Valley Times, West Warwick, R.I., as chairman of the Sevellon Brown Committee for 1971-72.

Named to the committee were John Stevens, managing editor of the Nashua Telegraph, and Harold LeVanway, editor of the Greenfield Recorder.

"I Don't Know If I Want To See What's There"

A Last Resort

By NEIL COLEMAN

It has become quite fashionable in many circles round and about campus whenever one wishes to call attention to oneself or some idea that one supports to compare it to project 10 and point out how much better it is than the project. It is like a nobleman comparing himself to a worker. The former assumes an air of respectability while the latter has worked, created and achieved more than the nobleman ever dreamed of trying.

The project has had its problems, but even that is a point in its favor. For the problems of the project have arisen over the question of the proper use of freedom and not the absence of it. Having attended a university this fall where the administration tried to act in loco parentis, (in the place of the parents), I can say from experience that the abuses of freedom are to be preferred over the rule of oppression.

The typical stereotype picture of a project student is a person who doesn't go to classes and who smokes dope all day. This is not accurate, but even if it were, what justification do other people have for condemning him? Is it because he is an individual and doesn't fit into other people's idea of what a student should do or be? When a person reaches the ages of 18-20 he should have the freedom to do what he wants with his life instead of conforming to other peoples standard of behavior, because only he and he alone will profit or suffer from his actions. Who is to judge the value of a person and how he should learn, if not the person himself? If a person is going to screw up his life it is much better that he screw it up himself rather than having some paternalistic bureaucrat do it for him. An individual will only learn how to use freedom by having it and if he is not permitted to have it, he will never become an individual.

The project is a last resort for many people. I have often heard people say that they would not be at the University if they weren't in the project. The project is a point of identification both in relation to the individual himself and to others; it is the only place in this large impersonal automated university that gives an individual freedom of expression. It is the only place many people can call home. The project has many faults, but its assets are greater. People who so easily critize it are people who are so used to following a routine that they don't realize the problems involved when real freedom is being coped with.

Expendable Expertise

WASHINGTON——No one talks about it, but one of the greatest fears concerning the attempt of the anti-Vietnam demonstrators to close down Washington last week was that the American taxpayer might have discovered that only half the people here were really needed to run the government.

I found this out when I rode downtown with my friend Phil Jaylan on that Monday Morning when the protesters made their first attempt to keep government employees from getting to work.

Jaylan, who works in the Department of Bureaucratic Infinity, picked me up in his Volkswagen at 7 o'clock. I never saw him so nervous.

"Don't worry, Jaylan," I said, "there's not going to be any violence."

"I'm not worried about the violence," Jaylan said, perspiring. "I'm worried about my job."

"They won't fire you just because you're late one morning," I said.

"It isn't because I'm late. They may discover they don't need me."

"I don't understand," I said.

"Look," said Jaylan, "for 30 years the government's been expanding at a ferocious rate. New departments have come into being overnight, old departments have been beefed up for no reason. The government is so big that no one has any idea how many people it really needs to make it work any more."

"Everyone knows that, Jaylan," I said.

"But let's just suppose these crazy kids manage to shut down the bridges and roads from Maryland and Virginia. This would prevent 70% of all government employees from getting to work."

"That would be a catastrophe," I said.

"But suppose it wasn't a catastrophe. Suppose the government discovered it only needed 30% of its present work force."

"This demonstration is being covered by all the media," Jaylan said. "In the event that the protesters succeed in their shutdown and the government still operates smoothly, the whole country will know by tonight how few people it really needs to take care of the nation's business."

"We can't let it happen," I said to Jaylan as we skirted around a trash can on two wheels."

"I have to beat Bradley to the office," he said.

"Why Bradley?"

"He sits next to me. If he gets to work and I don't, they'll discover he can do my job as well as his. If I get there and Bradley doesn't, I can prove they don't need Bradley."

"Gosh, Jaylan," I said, "that sounds like dog eat dog."

"It isn't just me. You see all those cars bumper to bumper out there? In everyone of them is a Jaylan trying to beat a Bradley to work. These people are willing to take nails in their tires, dents in their fenders, tear gas in their eyes, anything, as long as no one finds out they are expendable."

A truck was stalled in the middle of the street and Jaylan and I lifted his Volkswagen over it and then we took off again. "Bradley will never be able to do that," Jaylan cackled, "not with his station wagon."

By driving mostly on the sidewalk through Georgetown, Jaylan made it to his office on time. That evening on the way home he revealed to me that not one person in the bureau was absent.

"As a matter of fact, there were several people on vacation and sick leave who came in to make sure their jobs weren't eliminated.

"It sure was close," Jaylan sighed. "If it hadn't been for the brilliant work of the police and the military, the government might have had to cut its payroll in half."

UMass: Easy Rider Country?

This past weekend, gay people from the N.E. area congregated at UMass to enjoy themselves at a Gay Liberation Festival sponsored by GLF here. This was an opportunity for people to come out and be openly gay and loving, we of GLF Amherst THOUGHT, with a minimum of hassles by the supposed LIBERAL & ENLIGHTENED Community. Though many of us were conspicuous by our attire and expressions of affection for one another, we kept to ourselves and purposely bothered no one, and in fact, generally livened up the Hatch area all weekend, especially Saturday night with one of the most fantastic dances UMass has ever had.

There was however hostility evident among some of our straight brothers. This was nothing new and unexpected. But Saturday night two of our gay brothers were staying as invited guests at John Adams tower. A group of residents discovered them embracing. They cursed and intimidated them and proceeded to beat and kick them down a flight of stairs. Fortunately the gay brothers were able to escape without serious injury.

Another group of brothers stayed at Dwight House that night, again as invited guests. They were harrassed and ripped off by some more straight resident pigs, again for no reason other than that they were gay.

Sunday was the Phil Ochs concert. You read what the Collegian said yesterday, and now you might like to know what really happened. Many gay people went in to the concert, giving away free apples, oranges and balloons to our straight sisters and brothers in the audience, to help them enjoy the concert with us. Then Phil Ochs got up, sang a few songs, and made the statement of himself, "No fag here". Now for us the word "fag" said by a straight is every bit as oppressive as "nigger" or "kike" or "spic" or "cunt". It was fortunate that there were many gay sisters and brothers around to give support to confront Phil Ochs with his sexism. Whether he used the term in a "theatrical" sense or not is irrelevant. That word, used by a straight man, directed toward a predominantly straight audience, is completely unacceptable, whether said facetiously or not. You do not make jokes about people's oppression. Because he would make no apology for what he said, we asked for five minutes time on the microphone, and were immediately turned down. So we took the microphone, and said what had to be said.

Many people complained that we disrupted the concert. Well, the psychological genocide by your heterosexual chauvinistic society has disrupted our lives for centuries, and WE WILL NOT PUT UP WITH THAT SHIT ANYMORE! Phil Ochs waited until most of us had left and then said something to the effect that people who disrupt other people's concerts should not be allowed to live.

The Collegian deems itself "a free and responsible press". Every article relating to the weekend's incidents in yesterday's paper were overtly or covertly anti-gay. There was no news article written. The front page story was a review of the concert, giving only opinions and no factual representation of what happened. The editorial accused us of "incoherency" and "LACK OF SENSITIVITY" Meanwhile there was not a word mentioned about the beatings in Southwest, even though the editors were well aware of the incident. There was no mention of what a generally beautiful and together weekend it was for the gay people. The gay liberation movement has been always pretty much ignored by this and other news media. This kind of coverage, typical of the liberal, counter-revolutionary press, is irresponsible and oppressive.

The incidents in John Adams, Dwight House, and at the Phil Ochs concert, and the Collegian coverage should make clear the extent to which gays are oppressed even in this "enlighted" University community.

Peace Now, Peace Now

The feel of tension was everywhere,
In many small groups we all come
Our stated object, to join into one.
Peace was now the common cry
Young and old, none were left by Waiting for the march to begin
All hoping for our cause to win.
A long while passes until we are told:
"While your sitting here the march is two hours old!"
Smiling to know all our brothers are here
We look behind and hope that the End is near.
People, people for miles behind
Nixon must see us or he is blind.
Marching, walking, yelling and loud,
"Peace now, Peace now. Oh God, Peace now!
In a while our destination is seen,
Are those all people in front of that beam?
An old man and women carring a sign:
"Our son has died, and we ask WHY?"
Believing all America is here,
We look ahead and hope the End is near.
To the president's gate we finally reach,
But no room, the Marhalls preach,
All packed up to the steps,
Keep it cool we're all reps.
No turning back now, there must be a way
To get in there, they'll remember this day.
With people going over a torn down fence
Inside we see it was no pretence,
Next to each other we all stand
No room to move, there's no more land.
A loud voice begins to cry
A nation feels no more should die.
The voice is coming from miles away
All America shouts from Boston to L.A.
The talk must stop
No more bombs should drop
The feelings of the world ascend
Peace now, Peace now, this war must end!

Letters To The Editor

Ideological Bunny Hop

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to discuss Sid Finehurshs's rather bizarre analysis of the May Day action in Washington, D.C. Sidney, who appears to view all anti-war actions that do not follow a parade route with profound suspicion, seems particularly incensed with the activities of the May Day Tribe. The catalogue of sins, misdeeds and outrages perpetrated by this group includes, enthrallingly enough, liberalism. While Finehurshs's attacking the May Day people for "liberalism" might be likened to Bebe Rebozo or Pat Nixon's accusing Igor Stravinsky of mediocrity, let us focus on the substance, rather than the origin, of this charge.

"Liberals," Sidney reasons, ship "dedicated activists" to Washington to confront the government with "passionate arguments and the threat of biennial election." The Tribespeople dispatch, presumably at any rate, the same "dedicated activists" to confront the government with "passionate actions and the threat of violence." (Inasmuch as violence was explicity not threatened or implemented, except by the D.C. police, it is difficult to extract very much from this accusation, other than the fact that Mr. Finehurshs himself felt threatened by violence.)

In any case, these quite distinct forms of protest make "liberals" and "Tribespeople" basically the same because "Neither want to involve the majority of the American people who are opposed to this war in independent political action." And in case you hadn't guessed, "independent political action" means more and more and more Mobe-directed protest marches.

If one is allowed to extend the Finehurshs scenario to his own method of operation what we find is the same (and by now) thoroughly exhausted "dedicated activists" being dispatched to Washington by Mobe Inc. (the peace people!) to confront the government with "passionate" marching cadences and the "threat" of still another parade, march, rhumba rally, congo congregation, etc. if the Federal elite fails to capitulate to Mobe demands. Perhaps we can bunny hop Nixon into withdrawing from Vietnqm but it seems to me that ideologues like Sidney Finehurshs might at least consider that alternate forms of protest have a valid place in the peace movement.

Sidney clearly regards civil disobedience and electoral politics as "diversions" but can he really convince us that massing Arthur Murray, the June Taylor Dancers, and all the extras from The Ten Commandments on the steps of the Capitol in a peaceful, legal fashion to be sure, is the only way to end the war? Serious questions regarding the efficacy of electoral politics and civil disobedience have been raised and will continue to be debated but it seems to me the most fruitful field for criticism lies in analyzing the Lieutenant Schiesskopf mentality of people like Finehurshs.

"The anti-war movement," Sidney rumbles, "will not stop until a majority of Americans are out on the street demanding immediate withdrawal." (Presumably, this goal will be achieved even if the war is terminated before Sidney can muster the required 101,000,000 Americans.) "There will be a next time," Sidney continues, (he is referring here, suprisingly enough, to another demonstration) "unless the movment gets diverted into the search for a 'true peace candidate' or gets demoralized by further defeats like May Day. Therein lies the essential difference between May Day and April 24." Sidney somberly intones.

Sidney's message is ominously clear. If peace advocates are stupid or foolish enough to expend energy working for peace candidates or getting arrested there will be no more parades! No doubt such a state of affairs presents a hideous spectre for an individual who has spent the best years of his youth organizing such functions. I would appeal to Sidney, however, to consider the fact that the goal of our activities is, after all, an end to the war and not the perpetuation of endless rallies. In this spirit I humbly beseech Mr. Finehurshs to at least entertain the possibility that alternative tactics may make a contribution to ending the odious war we all oppose.

Counter Productive

To the Editor:

Instances of incorrect analysis, as well as misquotes concerning my portion of the interview in Ann Gurnett's May Day opinion article on Friday necessitate clarification and correction. I did not say that those going to Washington for the May Day activities "could afford to pay jail fines." I said that those going were prepared either to pay them, or to spend time in jail. This, I contended, limited participation in the demonstrations. I said neither that those participating "didn't have classes to attend", nor that they "didn't mind getting their heads knocked together". I stipulated that those students participating obviously felt that their classes were of secondary importance, and were prepared to encounter the inevitable violence. Both these prerequisites limited considerably the demonstration's size -- a significant political consideration.

I thought I had made it clear that it was not chiefly the "lack of timing and organization" of the May Day Tribe that discouraged broad active support, but rather, the tactics proposed.

In closing, let me point out that I do not doubt the commitment of those who chose to participate in the May Day activities, but that the tactics of confrontation politics, including nonviolent civil disobedience, have proven once again to be counterproductive to building a successful antiwar movement.

For Better Bail

To the Editor:

The twelve thousand arrests during last week's anti-war demonstrations in Washington set a record - less than eight hundred were arrested in the 1967 "siege of the Pentagon." A record in quantity, also in illegality.

"Justice department officials privately conceded that up to eighty per cent of last week's arrests were unconstitutional," states Professor Alan M. Dershowitz of the Harvard Law School. Great crowds of demonstrators - plus many innocent bystanders - were rounded up en masse by the police without warning and often with clubbing and maceing of unresisting victims. They were herded into improvised detention centers and, in thousands of cases, were not charged with an offense until a day or so later.

Most were released of a nominal $10 bail, but a number were required to post higher bail, of $25 to $50 or more, by design or by bureaucratic chance. Among those held in higher bail were some twenty students from this campus, who spent a week or more in jail until their friends or families could raise the money.

We, the undersigned, disapproving as we do of violent tactics, believe that UMass students willing to stick their necks out in non-violent demonstrations to end the atrocious Indochinese war should not have to spend a week in jail for lack of bail money. We are therefore setting up the UMass Bail Fund and we invite contributions from sympathetic faculty and students. This is to be a continuing fund with which future anti-war demonstrators can be bailed out. We feel this is little enough for older people to do in support of our courageous students, and we hope some of our colleagues share our feeling.

Please make checks payable to the UMass Bail Fund and send them to Milton Cantor, Machmer Hall, U. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. The fund will be administered by the four signatories below.

Dwight Macdonald, Dept. of English

Both Ours And Yours

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity as a coordinator of the Gay Liberation Festival to thank the many people of the straight university community who helped make the festival possible. I never imagined the scheduling of such an event would be so complex and involve so many people associated with the university. Most of the people I worked with were cooperative and helpful.

I'd particularly like to thank the Student Activities Office staff for their assistance in scheduling and coordinating the events. Also thanks to the Hatch provided a place for our guests to crash.

The Gay people attending the Festival from as far away as Michigan and Texas were guests of the university and for the most part were treated as such.

It is indeed sad, however, that a number of people in John Adams tower disgraced that dorm and our university by their violent treatment of two Gay brothers, who were guests in that dormitory Sunday morning. This type of thing is inexcusable.

Phil Ochs' remarks Sunday afternoon are also inexcusable. Whether Mr. Ochs used the word "fag" in a theatrical sense or not is irrelevant. What is relevant is its derogatory connotation. It seems ironic that Ochs didn't recognize this fact, and could not bring himself to appologize.

A major purpose of the Festival was to demonstrate to the community our Gay life style. Hopefully, it will help lead to both our and your Gay Liberation.

To Win The Peace

To the Editor:

I think that Ed Bryant purposely avoided the issue which I raised in my letter of May 5th ("Another Kind of Action"). In the course of his appeal for money to bail out demonstrators arrested during the recent disruptive protests in the nation's capital ("Financial Aid," May 7th), Mr. Bryant implied that the intent of the protestors to stop the Indochina war by "stopping the Government" through disruption was somehow meritorious because the protestors were engaging in some kind of action which they felt would end the war.

The very purpose of my letter, in fact, was to urge responsible, dedicated anti-war activists to follow one specific, unified course of action--i.e., supporting true peace candidates and legislation to end the war-rather than dabble in sporadic, negatively sensationalist forms of protest. Disruptive tactics, such as those recently employed by the May Day Tribe in Washington, D.C., will not be effective in bringing about a swift end to the Indochina war. Quite to the contrary, the images of rock-throwing, obscenity-chanting long-haired youths on Middle America's television screens--regardless of their intent, however sincere--will weaken the average American's identification with the abstract "peace movement." Indeed, the millions of dollars annually spent to transport anti-war demonstrators to exotic protest sites--and then to bail them heroically out of jail--would be much better invested in buying prime radio and television time to reach inside the average American's home with messages urging the electorate to flood their Congressmen's offices with letters, telegrams, and telephone calls in support of anti-war legislation, such as the McGovern-Hatfield "Vietnam Disengagement Act of 1971" (S .376), which would cut off all U.S. funds for the war after December 31, 1971.

I am rather disappointed that so many of the peace movement's youthful spokesmen have failed to acknowledge that ultimately this illegal, immoral war will have to be ended by Congressional action. (As Commander-in-Chief, President Nixon could withdraw all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia through an Executive Order, but it is doubtful that he will ever do this without a Congressional mandate.) The 11.5 million 18-, 19-, and 20-year olds recently enfranchised could play a leading role in ending the war if they would take the simple step of registering to vote and, on the same day, writing letters to their Congressmen containing a clear ultimatum: "If you do not vote to end the war now (by enacting such-and-such legislation), I promise you that I will vote to end your career on Election Day, 1972." Certainly such action may not be as "groovy" as bombings, bombings, rock-throwing, peace festivals, fasts, traffic disruptions, and exhortations to Dada, Baba, Krishna, or cosmis consciousness to conjure up eternal peace and love--but I feel that the war-supporting legislators will unmistakably get the message. Few elected officials, regardless of their zeal for military adventures, are stupid enough to war-monger themselves out of office. It is the power of the ballot box which the peace movement must weild resolutely in order to win the peace.

Kenneth R. Mosakowski

Open Letter

Dr. Eisenberg:

In reading your letter published in the Collegian Monday, May 3, 1971, I feel that I must reply to both you and the campus as a whole. For this reason, I am submitting this letter to the Collegian for publication.

The Student Senate Teacher-Course Evaluation program began to develop a University-wide program during the summer of 1970. Our first evaluation instrument, developed that summer and during the fall semester, was offered to all faculty at the end of the fall semester. We were pleased that over 700 course sections found value in the concept of evaluation and used our form.

In our continuing effort to provide the best possible service to the university, we found the University of Illinois Course Evaluation Questionnaire was available to other institutes for a small royalty fee. As stated in a previous letter to the faculty, the Illinois Course Evaluation Questionnaire was developed by Dr. Richard Spencer and his staff between 1962 and 1964. This instrument has been used on all campuses of the University of Illinois since 1965. With a development cost approximately at $50,000 and with a yearly budget of $250,000, the Illinois program provides the evaluation and other services to improve teaching. The Illinois program sets a goal for the future of evaluation on our campus. Tests of both reliability and validity have been performed in proving the value of the instrument. I believe this form will provide both the information and flexibility needed in an evaluation program at the University.

I hope that this letter will help to straighten out some of the misconceptions and doubts you have concerning our program. Enclosed is a copy of Dr. Spencer's development report which may help to answer any other questions you may have.

Another point which you did not mention is the publication of the results of your evaluation for students. I am positive that you recognize the importance of this function of any evaluation program and would like to offer the Mathematics Dept. space in the Student Senate publication for its results. Hope to hear from you soon in this regard.

Juilliard To End Series

The internationally acclaimed Juilliard String Quartet will offer the final concert of the Chamber Music Series at Bowker Auditorium on the U Mass Campus, Wednesday, May 19, at 8 p.m.

The noted Quartet will perform "Quartet in A Minor, Opus 71, No. 1 (1826) by Louis Spohr; "Langsamer Satz" (1905) and "Five Movements for String Quartet, Opus 5" (1909) by Anton Webern; and the monumental "Quartet in D Minor, D.810," subtitled "Death and the Maiden," (1826) by Franz Schubert.

Reserved tickets may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, or by contacting the Council at 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before concert.

Music

Year End Concerts Sets

The "Spring" Symphony in B Flat by Robert Schumann will be the featured work on the program to be presented by the UMass Symphony Orchestra, May 12, in Bowker Auditorium on the University campus. The Symphony, sketched in the short space of four days, was acknowledged in a letter by the composer as having been written "...in the spring urge which comes afresh over everyone, even the oldest." In the same letter to the composer Sophr, Schumann stated that "...the period in which it was composed influenced its character and partly made it what it is." The period referred to was his first year of married life.

The University Symphony, listing among its personnel students from UMass, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke colleges as well as musicians from the Amherst area, has been referred to by Wayne Smith of the Greenfield Recorder as "...as versatile inspired, and generally expert as one could desire. It would be hard to find another of its type and composition to surpass it." Elinore Clarke, writing in the Daily Hampshire Gazette referred to the orchestra's reading of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony earlier this season as "...one of the best concerts ever to be given in this area of fine concerts."

The program, which begins at 8:15, is open to the public without charge.

Also the University Chorale, directed by Richard duBois, and the University Chorus, directed by Alan Harler, will present the annual Spring Choral Concert Sunday, May 16, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The Chorale, recently returned from its tour of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, will perform works by Henry Purcell, John Redford, Tomas Luis de Victoria, Gabriel Faure, Kirke Mechem, and William Dawson.

Charles Pachelbel's "Magnificat" and Brahms' "Ich Aber Bin Elend," two double chorus songs, will be presented by the Chorale and Chamber Singers. The Chamber Singers, a select group from the Chorale, will also perform works by Guillaume Costeley, Orlando di Lasso, Earl George, Lewis Horton, Guiseppe Verdi, Heinrich Schutz, and Richard duBois.

The University Chorus will present three Baroque settings of the chorale, "Wachet Auf Ruft Uns Die Stimme." The first setting is by Franz Tunder. The second setting, by Dietrich Buxtehude, will be performed by the Chorus, Madrigal Singers, and Chamber Orchestra. The third setting is Bach's "Canata No. 140" and will be performed by the Chorus, Chamber Orchestra, and soloists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass-baritone. Leonard Moss of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Concertmaster of the Chamber Orchestra.

This concert is open to the public, free of charge, as one of the UMass music department's continuing series of concerts.

Poets Mass

All undergraduate poets and poetesses are invited to an orgy of cosmic surreallistic reality on Thursday May 13, 1971 at 7:30 at the Council Chambers of the Student Union.

You too may be one of the esoteric legislators of Camp U Mass. Bring your own bag or baggage and do your thing with other potential professional artisans and creepy crawlers of the evening and/or night.

Eating Out

Williams On Florence

By DAVID WILLIAMS
MDC Staff

It's an unassuming place. It's known mostly by its reputation. If you grew up in Florence, it would be one of those places you always knew was there but never were quite aware of. Maybe when you were a little kid your parents took you out to eat there once or twice a month when your grandparents came to visit. But that was years ago and you haven't been there for a while and you walk in now and you find nothing has changed.

Even if you never have lived in Florence you still get that feeling when you walk into the Miss Florence Diner. In the first place you feel very out-of-place for the place is filled with families and old ladies. But after someone takes your order and shouts it down the counter, you begin to realize that the people who run this place probably aren't just in it for their customers. They seem to get more of a kick out of making good food then they do out of making you feel at home. Of course they don't actually snub you but they don't actually unfold your napkin in your lap.

Once you get settled into your seat you are almost immediately served with the best food you could possibly imagine. Lots of it too. The menu ranges from steamed clams to prime rib of beef, all at extremely reasonable prices. The food is well prepared (cooked to order) and damned delicious. So there. It was good.

A meal for two runs about six bucks. But get this: roast prime rib of beef, salad, appetizer, vegetable, rolls, dessert, and beverages for three dollars a head. Top of The Campus top that.

Florence's has a real personality though. I went there Saturday for the second time in a week and they remembered me. The place was full of families and old ladies and a lot of freaks, but I didn't mind. As long as you're quiet and at least don't barf on the floor the people at Florence's will keep on giving you all this great food to eat. Of course you have to pay for it but it's worth it.

It's not like getting shuffled around at the Top of the Campus, which is, in case you're interested, about the worst lunch place around. It's a nice friendly place. People smile and they know what kind of an act they're putting on but they do it with style. Hell, go to the Jolly Bull, get eased into a chair by a fratty looking guy who stands to lose his head if you stop fast, get lost looking for the salad bar, suffer through a charcoal baked nightmare and then get stuck for eight bucks and you can see why the ride to Florence is worth it.

All this in the way of saying that Florence's Diner rates a big six star seal of good taste from MDC gourmets.

Brooke, Sargent Top List Of Degree Recipients

U.S. Senator Edward W. Brooke and Gov. Francis W. Sargent will receive honorary degrees Sunday, May 30, along with five other distinguished citizens at the UMass commencement. Sen. Brooke will also give the commencement address.

The other five degree recipients will be: Sterling A. Brown, author and retired faculty member of Howard University; Walter Muir Whitehill, historian and author; and Eugene S. Wilson, dean of admission at Amherst College.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR

Commencement exercises, the 101st in the University's history, will begin at 10 a.m. in Alumni Stadium.

Sen. Brooke has represented Massachusetts in the United States Senate since 1967 and has been a member of Senate committees on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs; Appropriations; and Equal Educational Opportunity. From 1963 to 1966 he was Attorney General of the Commonwealth.

He has bachelor and master of laws degrees from Boston University, and a bachelor of science degree from Howard University. His honors include the Charles Evans Hughes Award from the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1967, the Distinguished Service Award from the American Veterans of World War II, and the Spingarn Medal from the NAACP.

Governor Sargent, governor of the Commonwealth since 1969, has also been lieutenant governor, commissioner of the state department of public works, chairman of the Merrimac Valley Flood Control Commission, commissioner of the Massachusetts department of natural resources, and chairman of the Massachusetts Water Resources Commission.

He is a 1939 graduate of M.I.T., with a special degree in architecture.

From 1929 to 1969 when he retired, Sterling A. Brown was a faculty member of Howard University. He has also been a visiting professor at Atlanta University, New York University, Vassar College, and several other institutions.

His writings are concerned with the Negro--his poetry, drama, and liction; his role in a minority group, and his relationship to society. Sterling Brown is the author of poetry and essays, including poems in "The Book of American Negro Poetry" and "Beyond the Blues," and articles and reviews in "Crisis," "Esquire," and other publications.

Now professor emeritus of UMass, Frederick C. Ellert came to the University in 1939 as an instructor of German language and literature. From 1942 to 1945 he also taught physical education. From 1951 to 1957 he headed the German department, and when it became the department of German-Russian, he served as chairman from 1957 to 1965. He received his bachelor of arts from Amherst College, and his doctorate from Stanford University--all with honors.

He is a founder of the "Massachusetts Review," quarterly literary publication of the Five Colleges, and initiator and co-organizer of the UMass Atlantic Studies Center in Freiburg, Germany.

Mrs. Emily Dickinson Townsend Vermeule, professor, classicist, and archaeologist, has her bachelor and doctorate degrees from Bryn Mawr College and her master's from Radcliffe College. She has been a Fulbright Scholar and a Guggenheim Fellow. She serves as Samuel Zemurray Jr. and Doris Stone Radcliffe Professor at Harvard University.

WALTER M. WHITEHILL

In addition to teaching Greek and Classics, she has been involved with several excavations including ones with the University of Pennsylvania in Turkey, and the Archaeological Society of Athens. She is on the editorial board of the "American Journal of Archaeology."

Author and historian Walter Muir Whitehill has written much about the Boston area, as well as about such topics as Spanish Romanesque architecture, naval history and historical societies. Since 1946 he has been director and librarian of the Boston Athenaeum.

A member of the faculty of Harvard University's Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology, he has many other positions, inculding trustee of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and the Peabody Museum of Salem. He is a member of the Boston Landmarks Commission, and an honorary member of the American Institute of Architects.

A graduate of Amherst College, Eugene S. Wilson returned to his Alma Mater in 1939, serving as Alumni Secretary and Director of Placement until 1946, when he became Associate Dean and Director of Admission. In 1957 he became Dean of Admission.

Co-author of "College Ahead!" and "College Student's Handbook," he is a former president of the Association of College Admission Counselors. He founded the College Scholarship Service and the College Placement Clearing House and is responsible for other innovations in college admissions and placement. He is a former director of the College Entrance Examination Board and former chairman of the Board of Advisors of Holyoke Community College.

GIRLS
Interested In Co-ed Living

There are still a few spaces left in Hamlin House. If you have thus far been unable to get into the co-ed dorm of your choice, consider these facts: Hamlin House is presently an all-men's dorm, preparing to go co-ed in the Fall. Many girls are understandably reluctant to move into such a dorm, where co-ed living has not yet been established. But we think such fears will prove to be unfounded in Hamlin. We are a small, close, and active dorm, and we enjoy an unusually relaxed, "light" atmosphere.

We invite you to come and talk about it with us
TONIGHT AT 7:00 in our lounge

Sex Subject At Smith

NORTHAMPTON — Radcliffe College President Mary I. Bunting will give the annual Albert F. Blakeslee lecture at Smith College today.

Her topic will be "Science and Sex." Sponsored by the Smith chapter of the Society of Sigma Xi, the lecture will be at 8 p.m. in McConnell Hall 103. The event is open to the public.

A graduate of Vassar College in 1931, Mrs. Bunting received a master's degree from University of Wisconsin in 1932, and a Ph.D. from that institution in 1934.

She has been president of Radcliffe College since 1960. Previous to that, Mrs. Bunting was a commissioner for the Atomic Energy Commission, and dean of the college at Douglass College.

A member of the trustees' Advisory Committee on research and the individual of the Massachusetts General Hospital since 1965, Mrs. Bunting is also a member of the board of Kaiser Foundation Hospitals and of its health plan, and co-chairman of the values, ethics and culture task forces for the White House Conference on Youth.

The endowed Blakeslee science lectureship was established in 1954 in honor of the noted botanist and geneticist Dr. Blakeslee was director of the Smith College Genetics Experiment Station from 1943 until his death in 1954.

Black Corridor & Co.

The Black Corridor of Grayson checks it out this week on the Hill. Tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. Minister John BX will be the guest speaker in the bowl. At 8 three one-act plays will be presented followed by a slide series entitled Black Woman, Black Poetry and Black dancing to Black Music.

Tau Beta Pi Elects Officers

At a recent meeting the following were elected officers of the Mass. Zeta chapter for the 71-72 year: John Windyka, President; Steven Kellogg, V.P.; Prof. John Dittfach, Treasurer; Robert Weimar, Recording Sec.; Ronald Struziak, Corresponding Sec.; Joseph Lemanski, Cataloger.

Tau Beta Pi was founded in 1885 to fill the need for a national engineering honor society since Phi Beta Kappa restricts its membership to liberal arts and sciences. All engineering students in the top eighth of their junior class or top fifth of their senior class are eligible for membership. While the original purpose of Tau Beta Pi is to recognize outstanding students and engineers and foster a liberal education, Mass. Zeta has expanded activities to include: a slide rule instruction course, advising sophomore class, assisting and planning with the School of Engineering a Junior Science and Humanities Symposium, guiding visiting engineering groups, and sponsoring an All-Engineering Picnic (held in the rain Sat., May 8).

Snafu Signals WMUA Change

This week WMUA will have a programming schedule change due to already pre-scheduled events. This week the Black Mass Communcations Project will be on the air Monday, Tuesday, and Friday nights from 7 to 10 PM, not on Wednesday night as normally scheduled. In place of "Drum" on Wednesday night at 8:00 PM will be a live broadcast of the final University Symphony Concert of the year. Following the DRUM on Tuesday evening will be an abbreviated edition of the Ed Light Folk Festival, this week there will be no music, but a rap between Ed Light, and some of those who were in Washington for the May Day celebration. That program will begin at 10:00 PM on Tuesday night on WMUA 91.1 FM.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Gil Winds It Up

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

This is the last column for this semester. I just want to give you some last-minute information on what's happening in case you need help before the end of finals or during the summer.

First, Draft Counseling Services will have special evening hours for the remainder of the semester to supplement the regular 9:00 to 4:30 hours. The office will be open between 7:00 and 10:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings. Please tell your friends.

Extra copies of the special draft supplement carried in last week's Collegian are available. If you want them for yourselves or for friends back home, they may be picked up in the Draft Counseling Office in 418E S.U.

The draft is being debated in Congress now. There is an outside chance that the draft may be defeated. Waste a little time and write to your Senators and Congressman telling them that you want them to vote against any continuation of the draft. Remind them that you will be able to vote for or against them in the next election, and that you will be watching to see how they vote. It might make a difference, and there's not much to lose. Try it.

Above all else, people, remember that nobody has to go if they really don't want to. You do have options. Take time to learn what they are and how you can use them. Keep in mind that if you go in you are, in view of both Nuremberg and the Calley trial, committing a war crime, if you leave the country you may be committing a moral crime, and if you refuse to serve, you may be committing a legal crime. If you're going to be a criminal in any case, you might as well make a choice which leaves your conscience intact.

Do some thinking about where you're going and what is influencing your direction. Have a good summer, live in ways which will demonstrate what peace is all about, and love. PEACE.

Leo is creative and impulsive. Natives of this zodiacal sign are anxious for results. Many times, they are too eager; there is a tendency to neglect details. On positive side, Leo is a life of the party and provides joy, intertainment. Number 1 is associated with Leo, the sun is related to this sign. The Leo voice has depth, often is described as "heavy". The Leo stone is the ruby; colors are orange and gold. Some famous persons born under Leo include Leon Uris, James Baldwin and Lucille Ball.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are not going to be satisfied with status quo. Indeed, change and travel are in order. Utilize natural pioneering spirit. Communicate: write and advertise in unorthodox manner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You do things to brim, nothing now seems to occur halfway. It is all the way or nothing. Mate, partner, close associate may try to apply brakes. Finish what you start. Be reasonable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Like Aries, you may not be satisfied now with what you have-need for adjustment is apparent. Get a fresh look at those who seem important. Strive for greater self understanding.

CANCER (June 21 July 22): Some who depend on you may now make unusual demands, requests. Key is to utilize intuitive intellect. Discern who is sincere. Discard pleas based merely on self-indulgence.

LEO (July 23 Aug. 22): Emphasis on ability to demonstrate talents, needs and love. Some who took you for granted now show appreciation. Social life accelerates. You go places, do things. Stress the creative.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 Sept. 22): Check details. Be thorough. Accent ability to perceive apparent minor indications. Family members take initiative. Be understanding, but know when to draw line. You will understand.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 Oct. 22): Some associates, relatives may display heavy hand. Strive to be patient. Tendency is to try too many things at once. Key is to investigate. Find out reasons. Discard the superficial.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 Nov. 21): Stress now is on financial affairs. One who makes big promises needs close scrutiny. Guard valuables. See through pretense. Protect family interests. Refuse to overspend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21): Study SCORPIO message. You could be victim of wishful thinking. See persons, situations as they actually exist. Don't play games with security. Check behind the scenes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 Jan. 19): What appears to be run of luck is actually result of careful preparation. Realize this and consolidate any gains. Older individual is on right track. Follow familiar course.

AQUARIUS (Jan. Feb. 18): Some friends now are extravagant, given to exaggeration. Put theories to test. Don't believe everything; do your own checking. Pisces, Sagittarius individuals figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19 March 20): Accent on goals, ambitions. Adhere to your own style. Refuse to have efforts diluted by one of little faith. Stress added independence, confidence. A new start is favored.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher, one who sympathizes with underdog and does something about it. By October, you should be happier, more productive. A Pisces person now may be making assertions which lack solid base. Know this and respond accordingly.

Netmen Host Ivy Power

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Last weekend at Williams College it was proved conclusively that in New England tennis the Ivies have it. And if Ivy power needs any more substantiation, check out the courts behind Goodell Library this afternoon, when Brown comes to UMass in the Redmen's season finale.

Come Sunday, Harvard was all alone at the top, as they earned 49 points in completely dominating the action. All three singles brackets were won by Harvard players as Captain Bill Washauer, Randy Barnett, and Johnny Bridges captured the A, B, and C divisions respectively. In the A bracket Harvard made a truly outstanding performance as both their number one and two men reached the finals as the hockey All American Joe Cavanaugh joined Washauer.

Williams, the host college, managed a distant second place with 32 points, and was followed by Dartmouth (31), Yale (29), Trinity (26), Amherst and Brown (24), Rhode Island (23), Springfield (21), and Wesleyan (18).

As far as the Redmen were concerned they found a multitude of seeded players in their paths. The whole trick to accumulating points in the New Englands is the seedings or the placement of your singles and doubles men, and UMass found the seedings all against them.

Chris Coffin was the only netman to advance past the second round in singles, as he teamed with John Bloom to represent the only UMass duo to push their way into the quarterfinals in doubles.

Coach Stephen Kosakowski commented "Bloom and Coffin did real well in the doubles, and losing to Trinity in the quarters in hardly a disgrace." Bloom and Coffin in losing their first doubles match of the year, were eliminated by two left handers from Trinity, one of whom had the distinction of defeating the powerful Pellitier from Amherst. They lost 7-5, 6-4, coming within a hair of reaching the semi finals.

The rest of the Redmen found trouble all the way down the line. First Man Goldberg swept through his first round opponent, and was subsequently eliminated by the sixth seeded man from Williams. Bloom ran into similar trouble, as he narrowly escaped defeat in the opening round, only to lose to the eighth seeded player, again from Williams.

Steve Ferber, playing in the B bracket with Fred Braley, advanced into the second round by means of a bye, only to find a sharp 8th seeded Mark Coffin, one of Amherst's netmen. Then Braley ran into a determined Trinity foe and bowed out as his back continued to plague his performance.

Mark Brass was the C bracket entry along with Coffin. It was Dartmouth's number five man that spelled loss for Brass as he came within a whisker of extending his match to three sets and a possible win.

The top point getter for UMass was Coffin, as he murdered his first two opponents before being halted 6-3, 6-3 by a Dartmouth player. Coffin's first appearance of the season at sixth singles was a highly successful one, as the junior southpaw has been steadily improving his singles in preparation for the season's ahead.

On the rest of the doubles scene Goldberg and Brass fell to Trinity, whose number one man is from Nigeria. In the first set a tie-breaker was used at six games apiece, and after taking a 4-2 lead in the overtime, UMass lost the next three, to drop the set 7-6. The second set saw them lose their service only once, but that was all it took as the 6-4 loss put them out of the tourney.

At third doubles were Braley and Ferber, the team who had given UMass their final point in the Conferences one week ago. Braley and Ferber knocked off Colby easily, 6-4, 6-3, and then faced the third seeded Brown doubles team. Brown won in three sets and this afternoon there will likely be the rematch of that contest as the sole Ivy league team on UMass' schedule closes out the season.

Brown will be the toughest opponent that UMass has faced all year. Despite their showing of sixth place in the New Englands, they, similar to the Redmen, faced a very poor draw, as they saw four Harvard-Brown confrontations right off the bat. Brown is deep in talent and it will take an extraordinary effort if UMass is to pull off a win.

At 7-2 going into their final duel meet of the year, the Redmen boast a 5-0 record at home, an undefeated mark that will be in great jeopardy today. But as Goldberg and Bloom play their final match at UMass, a little extra effort might be seen on the part of their teammates to end this season in excellent fashion.

TENNIS TID--BITS: It really seems like a farce that UMass got less than ten points in the tourney when you glance at the number 9 spot in New England and see Springfield. UMass romped over the Chiefs 7-2 last week, and it was only the luck of the draw that gave them as many points as they got. Rhode Island seems to be in a similar situation as they finished one position ahead of Springfield but were also defeated by the Redmen when it counted, up in Orono. UMass did fall to the Rams in duel match play, but they were not at full strength when the match took place.....If the New Englands want a better representation of the top 10 teams in New England they should work on positioning the draw correctly, and not having the top teams face each other early, and the weaker teams do the same. But most likely the tournament directors could care less about the rankings beyond the top three or four, thus what happens is something like this weekend for UMass, a horrendous looking draw. Come watch the netmen in their season finale today.

Gorillas Cage Wildcats 12-3

By HOWIE BLOOM
MDC Staff

On Saturday the University of New Hampshire confirmed reports out of Durham that the school's lacrosse team is not the subject that UNH students list most often when asked to choose the one thing about their college that makes them proud to be Wildcats. The reasons for the team's lack of support was made evident here that same afternoon, as New Hampshire forgot how to run, pass, catch, and shoot during the sixty minutes of their day when they could least afford to, and got mauled by Garber's Gorillas, 12-3.

The first period started with 34 fans carrying 18 umbrellas looking on, and at the end, UMass had a shutout going, 4-0. The first Redman score came a little more than a third of the way through the period with Tom Brennan on the receiving end of a pass by little Chuckie Hardy, who raised his season's assist total to 35. Dana Stone had reason to yell a minute later when he doubled the Gorilla's total with an unassisted goal.

UNH hadn't touched the ball for about five minutes when Rick Anderson scored in his second straight game, this time unassisted, to make the score 3-0. The last goal of the stanza was credited to Lou Marinacci on a fine play by the team's top scoring midfielder. Marinacci came streaking across the field from left to right and took a Hardy pass out front and caboomed it by the Wildcat non-goalie to end the period.

In the second period the Redmen played even better than they had in the first frame, but somehow New Hampshire got lucky and managed to score a couple of goals. The Redmen had upped their lead to 8-0 before the Wildcats came out of their trance to score their two quickies, by Jimmy Heard from H. B. Achbee, and Kent Stephenson from Rob McCarthy.

The Gorillas really didn't give a damn about those two goals, since at 3:56 Paul Ritch had taken a Marinacci pass to make the score then, 5-0. It was 6-zip a while later when Hardy scored with the assist going to Ritch. Ritch never gets tired because a minute later he garnered his second of the game on a pass from Phil Sheridan to make the score UMass 7, UNH 0.

At 11:18 John Nagle figured he's be more comfortable with his team leading by eight goals as he zeroed in on a pass by roommate Hardy to make UNH ask the question, "Why?" Then after the Wildcats had experienced their first two miracles of the day, Paul Wickman closed out the first half scoring on a fine play with the assist being credited to Tom Brennan.

The third period wasn't much of anything as UMass became complacent and began to sit back and enjoy their lead, something they have a tendency to do. While the Redmen should've been scoring three or four more times, the only good of the period was scored by Dwight Bloomquist who enjoyed himself at the Wildcats' goalie's expense and upped the lead to 10-2. Nagle got credit for the assist.

Nothing much else happened in the game after that--no fights, no injuries--just three more goals. At 1:36 of the period Ritch tallied his twenty-sixth of the season, unassisted, and it was 11-2. Add a minute and forty one seconds to the time you just read and you come up with the answer to the question of "When did Hardy score UMass' last goal of the game to up their lead to 12-2?" Finally, with just over four minutes to play in the contest, the Redmen decided that they didn't want New Hampshire to get too bad an inferiority complex, and let McCarthy become the Wildcat's leading scorer for the season, and it was over, 12-3.

Diamond Nine at BC

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

The high flying UMass baseball team steps out of the Yankee Conference this afternoon to take on the Boston College Eagles at 4 p.m. at the Heights in Newton.

The Eagles have not had a good season with an 8-8 record, but did give UConn a scare over the weekend before losing 2-1, which could make things a bit interesting this afternoon.

One thing that will add to this game is the intense rivalry that prevails in any UMass-BC competition in any sport.

For the Redmen coach Dick Bergquist plans to start freshman Chip Baye this afternoon. Baye was sick near the end of last week and Bergquist wants to give him some work before the big stretch of games next week.

John Olsen, Tom Austin and Lou Colabello are also slated for some action in this game as Bergquist wants some "ready arms" for URI, Harvard and UConn.

Tom McDermott will be behind the plate, with Dan Esposito, Hosea Kelly, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau in the infield and Charlie Manley, Brian Martin and Steve Newell in the outfield.

Tri-captain Jack Conroy, who reinjured his leg against UNH, will not see any action today and Thursday, but will be ready for Rhody on Saturday.

The Redmen have raised their team batting average to .296 during their torrid pace of the past month in which they have won 13 in a row and moved to the top of New England College baseball.

Esposito has hit 17 for 34 over the past eight games for .500 and has raised his average from a weak .194 after the Vermont series to a lusty .354 going into today's game.

Newell has earned himself the starting job in left field over the past three games. Given a chance to play with the varsity, after playing most of the season with the jv's the freshman has knocked in nine runs in his three games since being inserted into the starting line.

WMUA Covers Redman Sports

WMUA will broadcast the UMass-BC baseball game this afternoon from the Heights in Newton. Calling all the play by play will be Roy Gustafson with Bob Willman providing the color. Air time is at 3:45.

WMUA will broadcast the Varsity Lacrosse game at Brown tomorrow. This is an important game for Garber's Gorillas who are seeking a berth in the NCAA post season playoffs. Calling all the play by play will be Bruce Glazer with Ken Day providing the color. Air time is 2:45.

Broaca Moves On To Coast Guard

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Peter Broaca, head soccer coach and freshman basketball coach at UMass, has been named Assistant Professor of Physical Education and head basketball coach at the Coast Guard Academy. The official announcement came at 3:45 p.m. last Thursday from Coast Guard Athletic Director, Otto Graham.

For Broaca, this has been his life ambition to be a head coach. "This is what it's all about" he said upon being reached yesterday for comment. I've been a '6 p.m.' coach for five years now. I saw the opportunity at the Academy and I've very pleased to be going there and seeing that they have faith in hiring me."

Coming off a school year that has seen him coach his soccer tean to a Yankee Conference title and his freshman hoop squad to an 18-1 record, Broaca will be succeeding George Hill who resigned at the Academy to assume the past as head basketball coach at The Citadel in the Southern Conference. Hill was also involved in the Tennessee program with current Redman star Tom McLaughlin.

Broaca received his first taste of the Academy in an informal tour of the facilities when his soccer team was at New Lodon for a match with the Coast Guard booters this past season.

He recalled, "Ray Ceiplik, who worked for me as a freshman soccer coach in my first year was the head soccer coach at the Coast Guard. We played a game down there and afterwards he showed me around the facilities so I was familiar with the situation. I also had another look at the facilities when I was scouting Bill Endicott who will be coming to UMass in the fall. He was playing in a game against the Coast Guard basketball frosh and I got another good look at the set up."

The facility that Broaca spoke of is the New Field House on the campus. "It's a beautiful place to play in. A multi-million dollar operation," Broaca called it.

Coast Guard is a small college team with only an enrollment of 1000 students. Last year the team compiled an 11-13 record which is the best ever at the Academy. The year before the team won only one game and the last winning season was way back in 1956.

Broaca's new team will be facing such small colleges in the New England area as Amherst (at C.G.), Wesleyan and Trinity.

Noted for his tireless recruiting at UMass, Broaca said that he will face a different situation of recruitment at the Coast Guard. "Where I had been recruiting for UMass only in the New York and New Jersey area, I'll be recruiting across the entire country at the Academy. Coaches recommend boys to the Coast Guard Academy. From here they compete for appointment, there are no Congressional appointments to the Academy.

"For this reason I have to find a boy that, one, wants the military, two, can qualify for the Coast Guard, and three, hope he will come with us."

In looking back over his coaching days at UMass he called The Yankee Conference Championship by his soccer team this past fall "his most memorable moment."

"The year before I became coach the team was 4-6-1. In my first season we were 6-4 and this past fall we were 7-2-2. This is the toughest thing about leaving. With all these excellent athletes like Augie Calheno and Lindo Alves coming back next year it makes it tough for me to leave."

Of all the many fine athletes he has coached, Broaca cited Julius Erving as number one on his list. But he also added many other names who have contributed to the Soccer Championship and the 15-0 and 18-1 freshman hoop teams.

"If not for the successes here at UMass, I wouldn't be head coach at the Coast Guard," Broaca said. "I've coached some real good kids and it's been a great pleasure to be here."

During the past month there have been many fine coaches moving on throughout the country to other coaching positions. There have been new coaches named at Penn, Boston College and there is now an opening at Fordham.

In looking over these proceedings Broaca commented, "There are so many good men around that it's difficult to move up and I've been fortunate to have this opportunity."

Broaca also made it clear that the Coast Guard did not come to him. He was an applicant and was picked from many men.

He has already bought a home in Niantic, Connecticut and plans moving there is August.

In closing Broaca said he hoped that he'd be able to see the Redman varsity play next season, "only if I don't have to stand waiting in the lines outside the Cage."

UMass Chicken Rates Fat Zip

AND A GOOD TIME....—With the last sounds of Flight in the background, and a bright sunny sky overhead, more than 7000 students made the trek to the fields across from Southwest to enjoy a barbecue picnic supper of half a chicken with all the trimmings. It was the fifth such outing put on by Food Services in as many years, and according to those inimitable ladies who tear out your tickets, no one seems to have any complaints. True, the line was a bit frightening to look at after a walk from the Quad or Orchard Hill, but it moved quickly, and pretty soon you could even smell the chicken sizzling over an open pit. Trying to sit to eat was a minor problem to overcome, as the girl above shows, but once you started to get into it, you could even believe you were having fun, dodging footballs, ducking from frisbees, and dropping chicken onto the grass. And in the end, after tossing away paper plates and plastic utensils onto a growing mountain, you might've even forgotten about the inconvenience of it all.... Adelphia Honors Ex-Trustee Lyons

Louis M Lyons, recently retired UMass Trustee, and distinguished newsman, was honored yesterday by the UMass senior men's honor society, Adelphia. He was given the Distinguished Massachusetts Citizen Award, at a luncheon in the Campus Center.

This was the first annual presentation of the Distinguished Massachusetts Citizen Award by Adelphia, and, according to Adelphia President Glenn R. Essler of Danvers, the first time an Amherst campus student group has given an award for service to the Massachusetts community.

Essler presented the award. UMass President Robert Wood, Amherst Chancellor Oswald Tippo, several Trustees, faculty members, students, and Adelphians were present at the luncheon.

The citation given Mr. Lyons said the award was for "what you have done for your University, for its students, and for young people throughout the Commonwealth in your capacity as a Trustee of the University of Massachusetts." The citation lauded the Trustee for "his seven years of "striving for significant, relevant changes," his belief in the sincerity of our young people," and his "persistent search for truth(which) have endeared you to our hearts."

Mr. Lyons is a 1918 graduate of UMass, and in 1963 was cited by the Associate Alumni for his "distinguished public service" in his career as a journalist. He has been commentator for news analysis programs on WGBH in Boston for many years. He is a former Nieman Fellow at Harvard and for 25 years was curator of the Nieman Fellowships. He has been given several honorary degrees, including an L.H.D. from UMass.

His first newspaper work was with the Boston Globe in 1919-20. From 1920-23 he was extension editor at Massachusetts Agricultural College (now UMass) and later he worked for the Springfield Republican, and the editorial staff of the Globe--for which he reported major developments in New England, Washington, and abroad.

Mr. Lyons was born in Boston in 1897. He and Mrs. Lyons, Catherine, live in Cambridge.

Glenn Essler of Danvers, president of Adelphia, senior men's honor society, presents Mr. Louis Lyons, former University of Massachusetts Trustee with the Distinguished Massachusetts Citizen Award, at a noon luncheon yesterday. Left to right, Mrs. Lyons, Mr. Lyons, Chancellor Oswald Tippo, Glenn R. Essler.

Black Corridor Checks It Out

Tonight at 7:30 the Black Corridor is sponsoring a guest speaker, Minister John BX, from Black Muslim Mosque 13. Following the lecture, three one act plays will be presented along with an original film, and a slide series on the Black Woman. Black poetry, Black dancers (UMass Sisters) and Black music will also be featured. Its all happening at the Orchard Hill Bowl.

At The Gates Of Westover AFB

GI's To Rally May 15

The May 15 Westover Action Project is calling a rally outside the gates of Westover Air Force Base on Saturday, May 15, GI Solidarity Day. The Project is a coalition of area groups including the Connecticut Vietnam Veterans Against the War, the UMass Veterans for Peace, the UMass Student Mobilization Committee, Mt. Holyoke SMC, Connecticut Peace Action Coalition, the Springfield People's Peace Treaty Coalition, the Valley Peace Centre, and the Hadley Mothers for Peace.

These groups in conjunction with several active-duty airmen and base workers have planned the demonstration in order to turn Armed Forces Day May 15, into a day of national antiwar action and solidarity with antiwar GI's. Similar demonstrations will take place across the U.S. at every major military base.

It is felt by the planners of the action that no one has more right to assess the U.S. role in Southeast Asia than those expected to fight there. The Armed Services are not empowered to revoke the First Amendment rights of men simply because they enlisted or were drafted into the Armed Services. The purpose of the demonstration, then, is two-fold: to demand the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia (including airpower) and to express support for the GI's right to free speech.

Permission was requested by the Coalition to distribute on base the Bill of Rights, the first ten amendments to the U.S. Constitution. Permission to distribute the Bill of Rights was peremptorily denied by the Base Commander, Col. Vincent McGovern. He gave no reason for denial of permission, despite the fact that Department of Defense regulations explicitly stipulate that, according to paragraph 5-5 of Army Regulations 210-10, "A commander may not prevent distribution of a leaflet simply because he does not like its contents...." Regulations clearly state that a commander may prohibit distribution of a leaflet on base only if it is obscene or treasonous. Presumably the Westover base commander has found that the first ten amendments of the U.S. Constitution fall into one or another of these categories.

Despite harassment of this sort, the Coalition has planned a legal demonstration at the gates of Westover, Saturday, May 15. A permit for the rally was obtained from the Chicopee Police Dept. Air Force regulations permit servicemen to participate in anti-war actions if they are of a peaceful, legal nature (that is, if they have a permit and if violence is not planned as part of the action); if the servicemen are off duty and out of uniform. The demonstration at Westover is planned by the coordinators to encourage as much GI participation as possible. A lawyer has been included in the planning of the action to assure maximum protection of GI rights and to highlight the legitimacy of the demonstration in the eyes of Westover airmen.

Veterans, airmen, students, and townspeople will assemble at both gates at Westover to leaflet and talk to airmen from 12:00 noon to 2:00 p.m. They will meet at the Industrial Gate at 3:00 p.m. for a rally including speakers from the GI Civil Liberties Defense Committee, Bob Wilkinson, editor of the GI Press Service, Rev. Jeffrey Campbell, minister of the Unitarian Church in Amherst, George Schuer, co-chairman of the UMass Vets for Peace.

The UMass Student Mobilization Committee has arranged for bus transportation to the demonstration. Busses will leave the Student Union at 11:00 a.m. Saturday morning and return from Westover at 4:00 p.m. Anyone interested in the demonstration should contact the SMC at the table just outside the Hatch or in the SMC office, Franklin room, second floor of the Student Union.

Senior Week Begins May 27

Senior Week begins Thursday, May 27th. Activities climax four years of academics at UMass and present the final opportunity for the class to gather as a group.

Organized by the Senior Day Committee, which was formed when class government was abolished, the festivities include the following.

Senior night at the Pub featuring Charlie Bradshaw, and happy hour prizes for seniors only, 9:30 to closing, Thursday, May 27th.

Sandwich smorgasbord in the cafeteria Friday, May 28th, Happy hour and entertainment included from 4 to 10. Also.

-A Harvey Wallbanger and Peppermint Patti night at Mike's on Thursday, 50¢ for each of these drinks from 9 to closing.

-Senior day activities beginning at noon in the Northeast Quad. Chicken dinner, beer and entertainment included. Souvenior beer mugs will be distributed at this time. Tickets are only $1.00 for seniors and $2.00 for a guest.

The budget for Senior Week is approximately $10,000.

For further information seniors should contact Dick Palomba, chairman of the committee, or any of the members listed. They are Jane Madden, Joe Ackerstein, Carl Andrews, Pat Elynn, Rene Cullman, Jerry Burke, Betty Soloves, Betty Pugh, Bonnie Jackson, and Mary Bositis.

Senate Refuses To Fund

Concerts Committee Needs Money

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Early in the academic year, the Interim Coordinating Committee, formed for the sole purpose of putting on concerts, arose like a phoenix from the dust of the abolished class governments. Responsible for the series of concerts held in Southwest two weeks ago, the Committee was funded by the Student Senate. However, when budgets came before the Senate to be finalized several weeks ago, the Senate voted not to consider the Committee's budget proposals for next year. This turn of events proved upsetting to many people, including Russel Viera, who was instrumental in producing the concerts of two weeks ago.

Viera attributed the lack of Senate consideration to 'sheer ignorance'.

"It's my opinion that most of the Senate didn't even know what the Committee was or what its function was," Viera said. "When the proposal to consider our budget came before the Senate, it was voted down without any discussion."

John Hogan, Vice President of the Senate and Bill Belmore, Vice Chairman of the Senate Budgets Committee, gave their reasons for the Senate's failure to fund the committee.

According to Belmore, the basic reason for not funding the Committee was its failure to come to the Senate with budget proposals for next year. Belmore contended that the Committee had been given ample opportunity to bring proposals before the Budgets Committee but had failed to do so. He said that the first inkling the Senate had that there would even be an Interim Coordinating Committee was at the meeting where budgets were finalized, when the committee presented the Senate with a request for approximately $75,000. Adding that no breakdown of funds accompanied the request, he said that even if RSO's schedule could have been changed to accomodate the lateness of the funding request, the Board of Trustees would never have considered a matter handled in such an unorthodox way.

Senate V.P. John Hogan agreed with Belmore's arguments but added that he thought it was hypocritical of students to want to spend $75,000 on concerts while at the same time asking the state legislature not to raise tuition.

Hogan also said he favored decentralizing the Senate's power over presentation of concerts. He said that he thought Area Governments should be encouraged to put on their own concerts, utilizing monies given them by the Senate when class governments were dissolved. Hogan also pointed out that Program Council, the Fine Arts Council and other organizations could continue to stage concerts.

Senate Trying To Ease Student Parking Problems

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Recommendations concerning campus parking were made Monday evening at a meeting of the Student Senate Services Committee. Three motions were passed at the meeting in an attempt to correct the inequalities of the present parking system on campus.

The motions were 1) that the Student Senate start an Ad Hoc Committee to study the inequalities of the parking system, 2) that the parking commission be restructured so that it can function effectively, 3) that the Student Senate urge the Undergraduate students not to pay their parking fines until an equitable solution is presented to the Administration. It was also recommended that the issue be brought forth before the Senate at their first meeting in September.

In an exclusive Collegian interview last evening, Commuter Senator Bob Chiller listed the gripes which the UMass students have concerning the present parking situation. Chiller alleged that there is mismanagement, poor administration, and discrimination in the giving out of parking tickets. He stated that 15,000 students are assigned to a parking area which can accommodate 8,000 vehicles. "Tickets are not given to faculty members and only to students," he continued. He also mentioned that there is an open bid for towing but Anderson is the only bidder so that he automatically gets the bid at any price.

The present Parking Commission presently consists of eight members. In the commission are two Grad students, two faculty members, two undergraduates, and Ferriter and Lambert. Chiller said that just because there are two members from each group sitting on the commission that this doesn't make it fair. He noted that everyone there has staff/faculty stickers except for the students. Chiller wants to abolish the present Parking Commission or to equalize the number of students on the commission.

In a meeting with Mr. Robert Ferriter of Campus Security last Thursday, Chiller inquired as to why parking is discriminatory toward students and asked for the reason as to why so many tickets were handed out to commuters assigned to Vlot. Chillers also told Ferriter that we don't want students to pay parking tickets. "We will go to the streets if necessary until the parking situation is made nondiscriminatory and until Faculty are assigned to perimeter parking areas.

"We don't care about the parking fee. We feel that the system is discriminatory, run in an old way, and we will go to any lengths to get it changed," Chiller said.

Alpha Phi Gamma Inducts 35

Alpha Phi Gamma, national journalism honorary society, inducted 35 members into its fraternity last night in its first major initiation in two years.

The society is one which recognizes the achievement of student journalist in campus publications, radio and television.

Advisors Dario Politella, professor of English, and Alvin P. Oickle, technical advisor to the Collegian, conducted the meeting. Also speaking on "Famous politicians I have known" was journalist Neil C. Perry, who presently writes for the Greenfield Recorder.

Election of officers for the academic year 71-72 included the following: President, Linda Balicki; Vice President, Walter Sobzak; Secretary, Beth Goodell; Treasurer Gib Fullerton and Bailiff Jim Gold.

Return It...

Students who have received the Survey on Drinking and Drugtaking and who have not returned it are urged to complete the questionaire and send it back to the Seminar.

In order to conduct a completely unbiased survey a high rate of response from the participants is necessary. Because this survey is attempting to establish facts about drinking and drug taking practices of students, and indirectly of society, participation is essential in order that the seminar report and analyze this survey objectively and realistically.

ABC Art Sale

Plans have been completed for the annual exhibition and art sale for ABC (A Better Chance) according to Mrs. Herta Paulsen and Mrs. Dorothy Dempesy, coordinators of the event. It will be held on the Amherst Town Common on Saturday, May 15th, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., rain or shine.

A wide range of works include original paints, woodcuts, ceramics, wall hangings, leather work and pottery. Some of the artists represented are: Leonard Baskin, Armand Balboni, Paul Berube, Rose Vali, Joseph Samuels, Fred Becker, Jean Becker, Boots Walker, Lorie Lemmger, Susan Parks and Stephen Hamilton.

This is a rare opportunity to start or add to an art collection and at the same time contribute to the support of ABC, the educational program that means A Better Chance. There will be prices to fit every budget.

A sale of baked goods will also take place on the Common while the art sale is in progress.

V.C. Prepare Ho Chi Minh Trail

U.S. B-52's Blast Laos Bases

SAIGON (AP)—With North Vietnam reported preparing the Ho Chi Minh Trail for the rainy season, the U.S. Command assigned much of its air power Tuesday to blast that supply network in eastern Laos.

Normally, supplies move slowly in the rain and mud of the monsoon season, due to begin next week but the enemy was trying to make the trail as nearly as possible an all-weather route.

Scores of B52 bombers some of them diverted from raids on Cambodia gave the 300-mile trail network a working over. They were joined by U.S. tactical bombers from bases in Thailand and two aircraft carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin.

U.S. officers report considerable truck activity and road repair work on the trail.

The monsoon, now starting to move in, will mean six months of rain in the Laos panhandle and will hamper both the North Vietnamese supply movement and the U.S. air blows.

Much of the U.S. intelligence on the Ho Chi Minh trail is obtained from daily aerial photographs and from thousands of secret sensor devices distributed all along the trail on the ground.

Officers with access to daily reports on the trail said there are currently about 1,000 detections of movement a day compared with some days when the detections dropped to 500 a day.

The 1,000 detections do not mean that 1,000 trucks have been spotted, as each truck shuttles back and forth on short trail segments and is detected at least several times.

The main effort by the B52s is to knock out the trucks, to keep the roads chopped up and to start landslides that block mountain passes.

While the air effort centered in Laos, ground fighting in South Vietnam lapsed into another of its periodic lulls.

Both the U.S. and South Vietnamese commands reported only minor skirmishes. Battle activity dropped to one of its lowest levels this year.

U.S. Dollar Getting Stronger

LONDON (AP)—The U.S. dollar strengthened on European currency exchanges Tuesday but big money speculators held on tightly to the Westvejman marks they bought by the billion last week, hoping for profits.

An acute shortage of dollars developed in much of Western Europe as speculators bought up whatever was available to make good the dollars they had sold short to buy marks.

This was ironic, because it was the glut of dollars that prompted West Germany, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Austria to take measures Sunday to rid themselves of dollars to check inflation.

Dealers said there was a strong indication speculators were standing pat on their holdings of marks, waiting for a bigger increase in the value of the West German currency than the 3 per cent it showed Tuesday.

A thin trickle of marks was sold by small traders in Europe, exchange specialists said. This seemed to be enough to hold the rate with the dollar fairly steady.

The dollar opened in Frankfurt at 3.5450 marks, the equivalent of 28.2 cents to the mark. It was set at the daily fixing at 3.5535 marks, equal to 28.1 American cents. Just before the close a rate of 3.57 was quoted equal to 28 cents for a mark.

The official mark rate before the currency crisis was 27.3 cents. Thus it is now costing seven-tenths of a cent more to buy a mark.

The shortage of dollars on the London exchange sent the British pound down from 2.41745 dollars to 2.4165, indicating speculators were keen to sell pounds for dollars.

The dollar was stronger in Paris, Zurich and Milan and continued to move up during the day. It opened in Paris in the range of 5.5275 to 5.5350 francs and by midafternoon reached the range of 5.5341 to 5.5375 francs.

In Zurich the range was 4.1050-4.12 Swiss francs against Monday's 4.09-4.11 but most trading was done at over 4.11.

War No Way To Provide Jobs-McGovern

BERLIN, N.H. (AP)—Sen. George McGovern, challenged by a student who claimed withdrawal of American forces from Vietnam would put too many extra people on the labor market, said Tuesday that "waging war is a bad way to provide jobs."

The South Dakota Democrat, in a question-and-answer session with some 100 young people at the New Hampshire Vocational College, asked how many would set a deadline for withdrawal. The vote was about 50-50, and one of those who said "no" raised the labor market issue.

Asked by another student how he could be trusted to end the war if he should become President, McGovern replied: "If you support me, we're engaged in an act of trust. I would never commit forces abroad without a declaration of war from Congress."

On the question of American prisoners of war, McGovern said "There is no way to help the POWs except to end the war."

The senator also said he would set two conditions for complete withdrawal that the North Vietnamese release all POWs and that they not attack American forces while they are withdrawing.

"If the North Vietnamese did not agree to that, then I would not withdraw," he said.

McGovern, the only formally announced Democratic presidential candidate, toured various parts of New Hampshire during the day in his second round of campaigning for next year's earliest-in-the-nation primary. He previously visited the state in February.

In addition to his talk with students in Berlin, McGovern had lunch with Mayor Norman Tremaine and city officials and went on a handshaking tour of downtown Berlin before moving on to Keene and Nashua for later appearances.

During his Berlin visit, McGovern characterized as "ridiculous" reports that he was acting as a trial balloon for a possible campaign by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D—Mass.

"If there is anybody who doesn't need a trial balloon in New Hampshire, it is Ted Kennedy," he said, adding that he is convinced the Massachusetts senator "will eventually be President," but not in 1972.

Union Charges Nixon Of 'Playing Politics'

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The AFL—CIO executive council charged Tuesday that President Nixon is playing politics with $12 billion he has withheld from federal spending and said that his failure to provide for declining business investment in defense areas has aggravated unemployment.

The council urged the President to release the funds immediately and offered an 11-point program to aid areas hard hit by declining defense production, including the establishment of a Cabinet-level committee to direct federal assistance.

"The decision of President Nixon to withhold $12 billion in congressionally appropriated funds is a callous political device that victimizes the American people and disrupts vital national programs," the council said in a statement adopted during its quarterly meeting.

"It is obvious that a cynical political decision has been made to hold the funds until they can be doled out piecemeal to achieve maximum economic impact at a time when maximum political effect is desired."

What'll Mama Yokum Say?

BOSTON (AP) — A warrant was ordered issued Tuesday for the arrest of Alfred Gerald Kaplin, who draws the Li'l Abner comic strip under the name of Al Capp as a fugitive from justice in Eau Claire, Wis.

Judge Theodore A. Glynn ordered the warrant in Boston Municipal Court after police reported receiving warrants from Eau Claire charging Capp with sodomy, attempted adultery and indecent exposure.

The charges were filed last week after complaints by a married college coed. Wisconsin police said.

Capp still is in Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston. He was taken there after he collapsed during a visit to Alabama.

Another Try For The SST

WASHINGTON (AP)—House leaders backing a move to resurrect the supersonic transport program professed confidence Tuesday that they have the votes to win but they postponed the decision until Wednesday after 10 supporters had to leave.

Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said he believes the drive to revive disbanded SST project would have won if the vote could have come before 5 p.m. EDT.

But the Democratic and Republican leadership put the vote off to Wednesday when what Ford called ten sure votes had to leave for a Democratic dinner in Philadelphia and a Democratic rally in South Carolina.

Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D—Ill., the leading House SST opponent, said it was clear SST backers believed they could win Wednesday and said opponents were campaigning to get every "no" vote to the House floor.

Rep. Brock Adams, D—Wash., said an analysis of one House quorum call taken Tuesday indicated SST backers could have won early in the afternoon by two votes.

The vote will be on an amendment to a $6.8-billion supplemental appropriations bill to turn an $85.3-million contract-termination penalty item into that much money to resume work on two SST prototypes.

The House halted all federal SST money effective last March 30 by only 11 votes, 215 to 204, and SST cancellation notices were sent out after the Senate capped Congress' decision with a 51-46 vote.

But Republican SST backers, including Ford, urged the party's House SST opponents at a closed conference Tuesday to switch their votes contending there is ample justification for such vote switching.

The past week's run on the U.S. dollar in Europe, they argued, showed a need for building and selling an American SST abroad to strengthen the U.S. balance-of-payments position and the dollar.

This also would maintain the American aviation lead threatened by the Anglo-French Concode SST, they argued, and of more concern would restore an estimated 15,000 American jobs lost with cancellation of the SST in March.

N.E. Tiao-Yu-Tai Here Saturday

By JENNIFER CHEN
MDC Staff

A New England Regional Tiao-Yu-Tai conference will be hosted by UMass Chinese students on Saturday, May 29 from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m. on the first floor of the Campus Center. Approximately 75-100 students are expected to attend from such neighboring institutions as Brown, UConn, Harvard and Yale.

In recent months, thousands of Chinese students have come together as a result of a dispute over a group of uninhabited islands in the East China Sea.

Geographically, historically and legally, the Tiao-Yu-Tai islands belong to China. But with the discovery of rich oil deposits, Japan has claimed Tiao-Yu-Tai as part of the Ryuku islands administered by the United States. The U.S. plans to return the Ryukus to Japan in 1972. In addition, the Japanese government has committed a series of unfriendly acts against China by expelling Chinese fishermen from this area and mutilating the Nationalist Chinese flag on the islands.

The TYT movement has been gathering momentum and now includes students from almost all major American campuses. Their strength was shown in the largest Chinese protest ever held in this country on April 10th. In Washington, D.C. alone, over 2500 Chinese united in support of Chinese claims to Tiao-Yu-Tai.

These demonstrations were directed against the United States, Nationalist China as well as Japan. The demonstrators said that the United States was supporting Japan by maintaining that Tiao-Yu-Tai was part of the Ryukus. They also said that the Nationalist government was not taking effective action in demanding Chinese claims in the face of "U.S.-Japanese conspiracy." Equally important, this conflict is regarded by the Chinese as an effort to revive Japanese militarism.

Discussion is now under way in the U.S. Senate concerning the United States return of the Ryukus to Japan.

This Tiao-Yu-Tai conference will focus on three important issues: U.S. attitude toward Tiao-Yu-Tai, Japanese attitude toward Taio-Yu-Tai and reaction by the Taiwan government and legal action so far. Each two hour session will begin with a speaker from one of the participating colleges followed by a discussion period. Hopefully the outcome of the conference will be passage of definite resolutions for future constructive action. This event is open free of charge to all UMass students.

UMass donations collected in support of Tiao-Yu-Tai have totaled $286. An equal amount has been granted by UMass funded Harambe, 3rd world organization.

This Saturday, May 15 at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. in the S.U. ballroom, the Chinese Students club will show a Chinese movie with English-Chinese subtitles entitled Storm Over the Yantze River. This movie portrays the massive Japanese attack on China across a 180-mile strip of water on the Yangtze. It explores the agents and double-agents, their courage, superior tactics, self-sacrifice, moves and counter-moves which led to a decisive Chinese victory. Admission is 75¢. Proceeds will go toward the TYT movement.

New Coffeehouse Opens In Amherst

For far too long the Amherst area has been devoid of a center where good music can be played and heard. The AMHERST FOLKLORE CENTRE has been established to try to fulfill the needs of a growing community of folk enthusiasts. There will be live music Thursday thru Monday nights. Tuesdays and Wednesdays will soon be devoted to various workshops. Artists of all persuasions are encouraged to make use of the Center's open stage policy.

The Centre is an educational institution devoted to the preservation and continuation of American folklore. A wide spectrum of performers have already been booked, ranging from the far out angelic ecstatic to the low down dirty blues. This Thursday and Friday they will be presenting David Mowry from Woodstock, New York. Saturday, May 15 will feature the Prairie Oysters and Steve Martin of Orpheus.

A special feature of the center is open hoots every Monday evening. Aspiring musicians are encouraged to play. The seven founders express the hope of using the centre not only as a coffeehouse but also as a manifestation of the spiritual resurgence now happening in the Pioneer Valley.

The Folklore Centre is located behind the Grace Episcopal Church (the one near the Amherst Police station) on Spring Street, right in the center of Amherst.

More Reps Join Common Cause

WASHINGTON (AP)—Common Cause said Tuesday 132 members of the House have signed statements backing complete U.S. military withdrawal from Vietnam by the end of this year.

The self-styled people's lobby said also legislation in the form of an amendment will be introduced in the House seeking to force a cutoff of the war.

John W. Gardner, chairman of Common Cause, said while the 112 Democrats and 20 Republicans signing the statements are far short of a clear majority of 217 in the present 433-member House, the list is growing and does not include several doves who can be expected to vote for it.

David Cohen, chief lobbyist for Common Cause, said an amendment to pending defense procurement legislation will be offered by a senior member of the Armed Services Committee.

Cohen did not name the member but said Common Cause has been negotiating with Rep. Lucien Nedzi, D—Mich.

An amendment would serve to move the issue to the House floor.

The House version of the Senate's Hatfield-McGovern bill is caught up in the committee machinery and given little hope of a House floor vote.

The statements of purpose, which have been circulating since April 1, are sponsored principally by Reps. Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D—Mass., and Charles A. Mosher, R—Ohio.

Gardner said signers include eight Democrats who voted against a December 1971 withdrawal date when that proposal failed by a 101-100 vote in a House Democratic caucus March 31. He said 13 Democrats who were absent from the caucus also have signed the statement.

Experimental Films On Campus Tomorrow

Fourth World Reality? Cosmic Consciousness? MENTALMOVIES? If the title of the most current group of experimental films being brought to campus by Room To Move and Free University confuses you then you might ask any of the two thousand people who say the CINEMAGIC film showings sponsored last month by R.T.M. what those films were all about. In case you don't know anyone who did see Cinemagic-read on!

MENTALMOVIES is a collection of some of the most far out experiments by the new magicians-those film-makers with a hopeful eye on a future when the innermost voyages of the human spirit (while in meditation) can be vividly visualized in abstract cinematic trips. Some of the tools used to produce these films include oscilloscopes, analog computers, and video/film intermixes.

Among the films to be shown are World and Allures by Jordan Belson, Permutations by John Whitney, Binary Bit Patterns by Michael Whitney, and some child (7-10 yrs. old) made films.

The showings of Fourth World Reality....MENTALMOVIES...Towards Cosmic Consciousness will be at 1:00, 3:00, 7:00 and 9:00 p.m. on Thursday, May 13 in the Campus Center Auditorium and are for FREE! MENTALMOVIES are the first activity of PEOPLE'S WEEKEND which has been put together by Room To Move and Free University.

Senate Shown Bumper Movies

WASHINGTON (AP)—An inventor Tuesday showed Senators an auto bumper which he said far exceeds new federal regulations for impact protection and would meet the rules at a third of the cost estimated by the auto industry.

Paul H. Taylor, of Buffalo, N.Y., testified before the Senate Commerce Committee with the aid of color movies.

He said the shock-absorber-type devices that are the basis of his invention could be installed on next year's cars without boosting prices any more than $30.

The auto industry, which Taylor said has shown some interest in his device, told the committee Monday that meeting new federal bumper standards for 1973 models will hike the price of an average car $100.

Taylor's movies, which he said were taken last Friday at his plant in Buffalo, showed an American Motors Hornet sustaining no damage crashing into a barrier at 5 miles an hour and $91 damage at a speed of 10 m.p.h.

The Taylor bumper consists of four hydraulic tubes containing silicone oil that is compressed on impact.

Taylor said some cars he has tested with his bumper have sustained no damage in crashes at 20 miles an hour.

The committee was told in earlier testimony that average damage to a similar car without special bumpers at 5 m.p.h. is about $204 and more than twice that at 10 miles.

Taylor said he has offered to sell his device to the automakers at $5.60 each. Four would be needed per car.

Taylor, and his 23-year-old son, Doug, a mechanical engineer, said repeated efforts to bring their device to the attention of the Department of Transporation have been ignored.

"We are going to ask the Department of Transportation how come," said Sen. Philip A. Hart, D—Mich.

Senate Scars

It has been a long year for all of us and, in many ways, an interesting one. True, it may have lacked the spice of a Strike over the extra days of school. Even without resorting to the harsh tactics of last May, many changes have been achieved over the last two semesters which should carry over to next September.

One of the groups most in the limelight over the past months has been our own legislature, the Student Senate. What opened the year as an unheralded body which few payed attention to and even less cared about, is ending in 1971 as one of the most publicized and controversial organs on campus.

If any one event can be blamed, or thanked, for this reversal, it would probably have to be the debate over the payment of salaries to Senate officers. Few occurrences have evoked such harsh and angry response toward the Student Senate as this issue. When the smoke had cleared, the Student body had defeated the proposal, twice.

However, the weakening of spirit towards the Student Senate has not died on the referendum ballot sheets of the past weeks. The campus outcry over this attempt by the Senate to pay its officers manifest itself in a charge of outright "unresponsiveness" to student demands. What resulted in the Senate was nothing short of a case of third degree paranoia and the trembles were felt all the way over in the Collegian offices.

Today, the sparks have died down a bit and it appears that things are slowly but surely drifting back to the way they were in September of 1970. People are once again beginning to forget about the Senate as a governing body, forget, that is, until something else incurs their wrath.

The Senate, on the other hand, in what might be termed a backlash of conscience, has made gestures to remove the aura of irresponsibility which once surrounded it. The pay raise outcry has left a deep scar in its side, a scar that won't heal quickly, and hopefully never completely. For it is important to remember that every legislative body should be a bit paranoid. It's when they don't have to worry about anything that we have to start worrying.

Rider On My Back

Waves curved woe: "Sinbad!"--carrion cadence of an old assassin whose scythe
whistled down where I,
defenseless against him, passed by,
"I am your distillation of sea,"
the Old Man volleyed, He disabled me, ah, me! Old man over me. Easily, easily the Old man, his nakedness, feebleness, he left his rock, and in shell-bleached midday leaped upon me -- locked mortally on my shoulders' Hunched my back to a heartbeat
heavy, slow And said to me:
"Terrible case. Terrible ease of Zion.
Toil on, son of mine.
Toil, while my laudable light grows into bright young flesh anew."
Old monarch, awful in judgment seat
Old Eagle, nesting As he grew in pain and displeasure, he pitted his sway against all comers. How dared I say--
"I maintain, O burden, my way
though flesh abuse me. Though you slay,
I am not your familiar. I assume only my own dread and doom."
"You assume!" he shrilled. Heels beat my ribs, and he jerked my neck. By hair of my head he thrust me forward, spat on me, led with jealous lordship Toughened, once-dead, he said, "You account to me,
not I to you. Destiny takes what sinews it pleases. I despise freedom that's courseless in sea-shining eyes."
He drove me. Sting of his hand goaded me.
"Flesh is for violence. Why devise prayers, petitions? Nothing pries me from my mount. Now to ride high'
I alone hold you to your pace till you fall, till you die."
High the Old Man rode. And a froth frenzy lapped the shore of this fell place.

Pardon The Skepticism

Attorney General John N. Mitchell, well known husband of Martha Mitchell, came out recently in unlimited praise of the police actions employed in the May Day demonstrations to the complete surprise of no one. In fact, had he remained silent, it would have caused more of a stir.

Mitchell, who appeared to remain aloof from the whole episode and, in fact, seemed to display a Marie Antoinettesque "Let them eat cake" attitude through the whole thing, was firm in his criticism of the demonstrators and the Congressmen who voiced disapproval of police tactics.

In trying to enforce his arguments, the Attorney General alluded to three points which merit further consideration than he at the time alotted them.

In a statement which seems little short of unbelievable, Mitchell commented that the decision to arrest all of the demonstrators of May Day was made solely by the capital's police chief, Jerry Wilson. Mitchell added, "it was a courageous decision, and in my opinion it was right." Whether or not the latter statement is correct or not needs little discussion here. However, it is indeed hard for even an untrained observer to benignly accept that a mere police chief made the spontaneous decision to arrest some 7600 demonstrators.

It is important to remember that May Day was not some accidental happening. It had been planned well in advance and the President hardly needed J. Edgar Hoover to discover what was going on and he did, after all, order troops to Washington. Yet we, by manifesting our traditional faith in the verity of administration statements, are expected to take this blatant attempt at removing the whole incident from the political theatre as the gospel. Pardon the skepticism.

Mr. Mitchell moved a step further in attempting this depoliticization by attacking the statements of Sen. Kennedy who also doubted that a police chief made the decision, and by chastising the actions of Sen. Lee Metcalf, another Congressman who has voiced some disapproval of police tactics. Metcalf, it seems, scuffled with policemen who tried to stop him from entering the Capitol. Mitchell, well-prepared for all charges, defended the police by stating that "his (Metcalf's) contribution was, as reported in the press, to strike a police officer." How far can the sanctity of the law be carried, Mr. Attorney General? Pardon the skepticism.

Finally, Mitchell once again attempted to refute a statement by Metcalf charging that the police tactics in Washington reminded him of the Nazis by responding that the demonstrators reminded the Attorney General of Hitler's Brown Shirts. These purported analogies serve little use on either side unless one is a staunch cyclical historian. Perhaps if people would recognize things for what they actually are instead of comparing them to other things or trying to make others believe they are something else, there would be less chaos and mistrust around. Could man, however, survive in such an atmosphere? Pardon the skepticism.

Tenure: Attack From Both Sides

For years tenure as a form of job protection has been an accepted part of college teaching. But lately the concept has come under attack from both the right and the left. One of the great battles of academia seems to be shaping up.

The American Council on Education, the most powerful nongovernmental organization, is reappraising tenure and has already suggested that it has "sometimes been a shield for...neglect of scholarly duties." Similar sentiments were expressed by the President's Commission on Campus Unrest.

Last week "The Chronicle of Higher Education," a weekly foundation-supported publication, reported growing criticism at the legislative level. It said at least five state legislatures are currently considering bills that would re-examine tenure in public institutions.

The value of tenure to the academic profession was demonstrated clearly by the case of Clark Kerr. When Dr. Kerr was fired as president of the University of California, he immediately reclaimed his tenured rank as professor of economics. The combined power of Gov. Ronald Reagan and the California Board of Regents, though able to dismiss the chief executive officer of the country's leading state university system, could not touch his tenured position in an academic department.

Tenure is granted a teacher by his department. It is intended to safeguard his freedom in teaching and to protect him from firing at the whim or pleasure of his superiors. During the past decade, when professorial talent was in short supply, the promise of tenure was a powerful lure, often more important than a raise in pay.

The way in which tenure is granted varies. In many larger public institutions, and some private ones, it is granted almost automatically after from three to six years of service. Elsewhere, after a specific number of years in the untenured rank of assistant professor, failure to gain promotion to the tenured rank of associate professor is a polite notice to look for work elsewhere under the "up or out" rule.

Most first rate institutions, public and private, grant tenure only after careful judgement by the teacher's peers and superiors (in recent years sometimes with input of student reaction).

Under the present system, a tenured professor, though he may leave a university for another campus by his own choice, cannot be dismissed except for cause, such as proven incompetence. He is entitled to a full personal hearing before a committee of peers, in the presence of an adviser or counsel of his choosing. Violations of tenure rights may bring censure on the offending university from the American Association of University Professors (A.A.U.P.) and could eventually lead even to disaccreditation. Dismissals for cause have been extremely rare.

Before tenure, university teachers were vulnerable to any attack or action. Although the A.A.U.P. began to push in the direction of job security as early as 1915, the days of World War I saw the most outrageous treatment--including summary dismissal--of professors who were suspected of not being enthusiastic about the allied cause. Even such prestigious institutions as Columbia suspended academic freedom and debate.

It was not until the A.A.U.P.'s statement on academic freedom and tenure in 1940--"academic tenure in its freedom aspect is fundamental for the protection of the rights of the teacher in teaching and of the student to freedom of learning"--that the major battle seemed won. World War II saw no large-scale violations, and there is little doubt that the protective screen of tenure did much to prevent a political holocaust of firings during the Joseph McCarthy era, although there were violations.

The A.A.U.P. recognizes the possibility--of concern in the present economic climate--that an institution may have to let some tenured faculty members go because of fiscal pressures. But the association contends that the institution must prove the need. In reality, such cases are likely to be rare since the combination of staff reduction by attrition and by non-renewal of contracts of the non-tenured faculty can usually be expected to suffice.

Like all systems that offer job security, academic tenure is vulnerable to the charge that it protects the incompetent and lazy, or that it allows deadwood to collect--professors whose enthusiasm and capacity have deteriorated after long anchorage in a safe haven.

Criticism has come from an alliance of strange bedfellows: student activists--including some who side with the young, untenured, and often more politically involved teachers--who see tenure as the protection of the "system" and a reason why students are often neglected; politicians--usually the conservatives--who see tenure as wasteful of money and a protection of politically unpopular or dangerous views; some educational reformers who see the traditional academic departments, headed by tenured professors, as a roadblock to radical educational change.

Finally, some beleaguered university administrators have, during recent years of radical disruption and violence, complained of the faculty's unwillingness to discipline some tenured members who have incited or joined illegal student action.

All but the most extreme left- and right-wing critics of tenure admit that it should not be dropped unless teachers' rights to due process are otherwise firmly protected, and their constitutional rights upheld. But the A.A.U.P. is girding for an all-out battle.

Some supporters of tenure also warn that, without it, the already growing unionization of college teachers would gain momentum--as it has at the high school level. They believe that union-type job security and seniority would be even more rigid and less amenable to quality control.

Yet, even strong supporters of tenure agree that some compromises are likely. These may include a shift to long-term, renewable contracts of perhaps 10 years; earlier retirement and the lure of better pensions to speed the influx of new talent; and a more effective self-policing.

Reality?

As I sit here watching
Some are happy.
They run, they jump,
They play, they fight.
It only they knew
Whay was their destiny?

As I sit here watching
And they tall to the ground
I see them get up.
Without uttering a squeal
Once more they frolic
Back into make believe.

Letters To The Editor

Senseless And Destructive War

To the Editor:

Don Glickstein's parody of the position of the anti-faculty freak has some good points, but perhaps he underestimates the dangers of irony.

It is true that, off-hand, he would seem to be safe in assuming that nobody would take him seriously. For instance, he finds the faculty guilty of "namecalling" before they have done any, and he does so in an article that itself consists of little else. How can anyone think that he is serious?

Or again, he pretends to reprehend "a French professor" for allegedly saying "If I am right, I am right; if I am wrong, I am right"; and then, with an ironic brilliance that no one (it seems) can fail to perceive, he makes his whole article an illustration of that attitude.

And still again, he uses one of the most ancient and obvious fallacies of argument when he attributes allegedly reprehensible actions to nine faculty members out of some 1200, and by implication asks his readers to conclude that this three quarters of one percent is typical. He knows, of course, and expects his readers to know, that any large group of people will always include a few cranks, and that to concentrate on their shortcomings is a traditional rabble-rousing technique. Clearly, he assumes that his audience is not a rabble, and will therefore see in this procedure a sweeping satire on the campus's egotrippers whose chief pleasure is a faculty-baiting.

A satirical intent is also obvious, one would think, in the loaded or incomprehensible rhetorical questions -- printed in capital letters, too, in imitation of the last desperate resort, by a propagandist who does not trust his own arguments, to a mere mechanical device -- that are aimed in the direction of some mythical monster, malignant and all-powerful, that is labelled "Faculty Senate."

Yet without wishing to insult the intelligence of either students or faculty, I venture to suggest that many will take Mr. Glickstein's extravaganza, at face value, and feel called upon to take sides. Successful irony demands a degree of objectivity and detachment, which is out of fashion in these passionate days. In the columns of the Collegian, especially, verbal warfare typically makes use of the bludgeon rather than the rapier, and the preferred method of argumentative bombardment is saturation rather than selection.

And then, of course, the members of the Faculty Senate do have shortcomings. We are not always altruistic in our motives, nor infallible in our judgment, nor decisive in our actions. Even Mr. Glickstein's grotesque exaggerations sometimes contain a modicum of truth that may make them plausible to unsophisticated readers.

As a member of the Faculty Senate, I am grateful for what I can only interpret as a defense of that vulnerable but, I think, useful body. But I fear that many readers will take the article seriously, as an episode in the senseless and destructive war between students and faculty that a few members of each group apparently find a perverse pleasure in fomenting.

Grave Matters

To the Editor:

True to the Collegian style, the report of last Wednesday's ASA meeting was a complete sham, and because Letters to the Editor are restricted to one typewritten page (which the editors reserve the right to do with what they wish), I urge that those of you who want to know the facts behind the issues attend the next and final ASA meeting. The "no more concerts" issue will be discussed.

Although most people may have "grooved to the good vibes" of the Concert Festival of May 1-2, certain Collegian writers seem to have their facts awry about some very grave matters.

During the Sunday concerts, the Columbia Records Promotion Manager for UMass whose responsibility it is to see that artists up here get adequate coverage so that they and other artists will want to return for future concerts, was ordered to leave the stage by the concert coordinators. Because closeup shots of the performers were thus prevented, the artists' promotion was harmed, and the artists left with the indication that the New York talent agencies may no longer deal with the UMass campus if this inexcusable action is to take place.

David Poisson's remark: "I made the policy. I'm not going to break that policy" and concert committee member Ed Dempsey's statement: "Get off the stage--now" are known by persons who have the authority to blacklist this campus so that no more groups will want to come up here.

The Collegian says that Poisson "put on a show in his own right ... in a mock-Woodstock style." But evidently the groups and their affiliated entertainment personnel weren't impressed, for their feelings about the concert coordinators, as expressed in artist appearance evaluation forms which now lie on several desks in the entertainment offices of New York, speak for themselves. In part, the evaluation states: "Without doubt, the concert coordinators proved to be uncooperative, irresponsible, and incompetent ego-trippers."

Besides the danger of agencies refusing to book any more groups at this campus because of the incredibly poor handling of the May 1-2 weekend, the Student Senate itself has refused to fund any future concerts up here.

The damage done is bad, but not irreparable. Senate action can be overturned by the student body, and New York agencies can be shown that the events of May 1-2 were not the fault of the student body but the fault of a few unrepresentative individuals.

Editorial points may also be submitted and follow the same general rules of the letters except that they may be anonymous.

Important Points

To the Editor:

I feel that the Collegian, by not printing my article in full, (Mayday, An Eyewitness Account, Tuesday May 11) has done a disservice to their readers. Two important points were left out and one was not reported accurately. First of all, the article did not speak at all about the behavior of the police. Some of them, as I mentioned in the original manuscript were friendly they bought cigarettes for the protestors, talked with them, tried to understand what was happening. Others had maced busloads of people because we were singing (a blind man was maced for this reason), had manhandled people, and had clubbed others indiscriminately.

Secondly, the government gave us some food, contrary to what the article said, but it was mainly baloney sandwiches and some of the meat was spoiled. On Friday, we had one sandwich for the entire time we were in jail that day (until about 7:00 p.m.).

Third, I left my name and telephone number so the others from UMass (I have reason to believe there were at least 20 others with me) could call me and we could perhaps get this thing publicized more than the regular news media has done. I was also hoping to set up a rap session along with the others who were down there for the benefit of any interested persons. I can be reached at 546-7780 or 546-7786 usually after 7:00 p.m.

Necktie Party

To the Editor:

To attack a Nesti/Suprenant review is rather like attacking the Academy Awards--both are vulnerable and both frustratingly self-assured in their misdirection. But in the case of their review of Does a Tiger Wear a Necktie?, I feel that this misdirection resulted in a greater-than-usual injustice and represented a greater-than-usual misuse of the critic's role. If as these reviewers suggest, the script "answers its questions...far too early to be of any interest," they as reviewers ask such misguided questions that their review is without value.

To anyone remotely interested in theater it must be obvious that the actor is at the heart of theater. Then a group of actors practicing their craft with a high level of personal intensity and technical facility can transcend a script riddled--as Tiger was--with structural and linguistic flaws. And herein lies the injustice of the review--an honest reviewer does not categorically dismiss an excellent production of a flawed script. To do so is to fail to recognize the difference between the play on paper and the play on stage. As a script Tiger is bourgeois and unsophisticated; as a performance it is sincere and at times the acting technically brilliant.

Further, it is ironic that these reviewers fault the script for its dishonesty when the resulting review was annoyingly dishonest. Failure to give even passing mention to the fact that audience members were visably moved during the production and gave the performers a standing ovation at its close is not only unjust to the performers and to those who this review might have turned away, but it is an inexcusable misuse of the critic's power. This being one in a long list of fallaciously thought out reviews leads me to suggest that the MDC either find a reviewer with some insight into and love for the theater or publish only the production dates and times.

Editorial Points

If the Collegian is being boycotted, does that mean we now have New England's largest college blackboard?

I thought I read somewhere that the SST was dead.

* * * *

Mrs. Ronald Reagan, wife of the California governor, was so upset by the recent income tax controversy surrounding her husband, that she said she hoped her husband would never again run for political office. That may be an ominous statement. Almost ten years ago, President Nixon, after losing a battle for the same position, made it sound like he was through with politics too.

The Army, in a recent landmark decision, is now allowing GI's to wear sideburns to the bottom of the ear opening, which could be anywhere from 1/16th to a quarter of an inch longer than what was previously acceptable. Almost makes you want to run right out and enlist, doesn't it?

Good news for you 18-year-olds. Gov. Sargent signed into law a bill lowering from 21 to 18 the age in which a male may marry without parental consent. I guess they'd rather see you betrothed than boozed.

A Way Of Life

To the Editor:

I was not here this past weekend so I did not have a chance to personally witness what occured at the concerts this weekend, but I have seen similar events occur on this campus before and I'd like to make one comment. I know from experience that if you are sure enough in yourself that what you believe is true, you crave no acceptance of your beliefs by others. There is no desire to demonstrate what you believe or to ask society for acceptance of that belief. It is enough to know that you think the way you are acting is correct. Why try to force your ideas on others? Acting the way the homosexual group on campus did last weekend only turned everyone off to what they are saying. People with similar ideas tend to congregate together. There should be no need for acceptance from the outside to reassure their group that they are doing what is right for themselves. The public has been well-informed of the group's presence on campus by information printed in the Collegian, by the gatherings they have had, and by their information center in the union. Will any further action really help them get the acceptance they apparently want? I doubt it. Personally, I am completely turned off by homosexuality, but I realize it is a way of life that some people follow. That's fine with me, but I see no reason to flaunt a way of life in front of everyone. I think that open demonstrations like last weekend sort of degrade the whole cause.

Evelyn Czerwinski

The Right Formula

To the Editor:

Well, May 5th has passed away quietly... I spent the day passively until evening. I watched a candle burning in silent vigil, setting my brain on fire with thoughts of an echoing image.....

A spring once shouting, now gone, not even whispering of its sorrow. Six bodies once very vital and alive, now rotting in a darkness. Watching a burning candle and thinking of death and fearing it, thinking of life and despairing, thinking of humanity and damning it. There will never be peace: and little hope to bring laughter.

Watching a candle burning and thinking of all the lives and deaths that have come and gone to try to bring the Earth's people together, to bring peace, hope and love. Comings and goings...hassles and beatings...killings and prayings devoted to make us believe in ourselves, to give us birth and life. Comings and goings...dyings..FOR WHAT? nothing? For humanity, damn it.

All you people who watch us work and live and die; all you people who watch us with our flickering candles, it's all for you, god damn it. As hard as you try to make us hate, to take away our joy, to turn us bitter, to harden our hearts, to make us quit, you will not. You have tried since the beginning of history to take away our breath, to deny your living, but you are alive and not all your ignorance or silence or sleeping or dope will give you peace until you work for it.

May 5th has passed away quietly with no self-righteousness...no great masses to mark the day but there will always remain the stubborn flickering of a flame. Its warmth and light will spread until this whole forsaken planet has enough candles on it to wish the Universe a happy birthday. Peace and joy to the world, if we keep having children, we're bound to get the right formula.

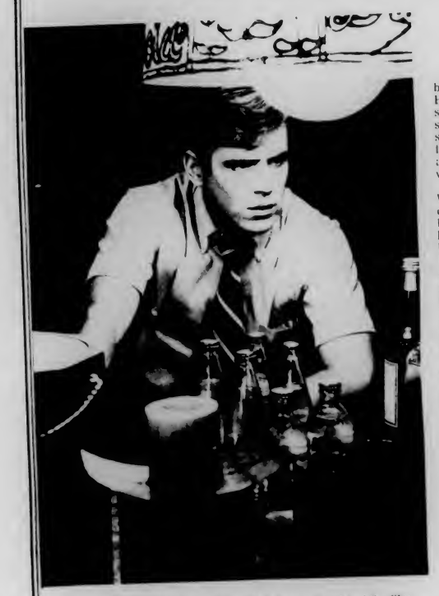
About Sensitivity



To the Editor:

Seniors, this letter is to all of you. Many of you have come to UMass for four years and are wondering what it all meant. You come and go and wonder why no one will remember you here once the others that you have contacted in your stay leave too. Maybe you have felt like a number without real attachment to the University as a whole. Well you can make some contribution to this community. Just go to the Placement Office some time before you leave these hallowed halls and tell them what you are going to do next year. They really want to know. You see, this kind of information will be used to help kids next year get jobs. This input helps them know what kinds of jobs go to what majors, what salaries students can expect to start at, and what employers have been pleased with UMass graduates in the past. What do you get out of it, seniors? Only a small contribution to the University. You can help it successfully function in the years to come. Don't say that someone else can do it. Every person has something to give. Those without jobs can still be helped to find jobs as you have wanted to this year. If you are going to talk about caring about people, about sensitivity why don't you act on your principles. This is important. Legislators use this data to evaluate the contribution of UMass students to the state. If there is nothing to show that the community is being helped, they may not be so lenient on tuition hikes next time. If you want others to be educated as you have been please do me this small favor. Just go to Room 239 Whitmore and tell them you want to fill out the questionnaire for your future plans. Thank you very much.

The Criticism Goes "Either Way"

More A Cinematic Novel

Clint Warner plays John Hudson, the main protagonist of the film EITHER WAY. The film concerns his struggle to achieve a sexual identity and will be shown tonight and Friday evenings in the Campus Center Auditorium.

By JIM LAMACCHIA
Special to the MDC

Either Way is a brilliant presentation of the bisexual trying to come to terms with his identity. But the film is much more than a psychological study. It is a lyrical work of art which goes beyond stereotypes and probes realistically the agonies of self-cognition and the nature of human love. Both in form and content, the film maintains a complexity and depth of insight which allows it to deal honestly with its subject matter.

The film opens with John Hudson, played by Clint Warner, articulating his confusion and uncertainties. He loves a young woman, Casey, played by Catherine Shelborne, and he wishes to marry her. But his relationship is complicated by a homosexual love affair with Jerry, played by Jack Deaver. John is confused and anguished over his sexual identity, and he experiences a great deal of guilt and alienation. He reconstructs his experiences for a friend and professional associate, Clay, played by Tom Clark, and seeks to understand them. The film culminates in a scene in which John enters his apartment one night and finds both his lovers seated on the couch. He must decide.

The film is more than a psychological treatment of bisexuality. It depicts in an honest and sensitive way, the attempt of an individual to realize his core personality and discover who he really is. John has been conditioned by his society to hate the homosexual, and he experiences a great deal of anxiety and guilt when he acknowledges his own homosexuality.

Perhaps the best and most amazing aspect of Either Way, is its ease and percision in presenting cinematic stream-of-consciousness. Either Way is more a cinematic novel than a film, and a Proustian consciousness permeates the work. The entire film, with the exception of the first and last, and the scene in Clay's apartment, is comprised of remembrances. The story is told through the subjective perspective of John, and by ordering his memories, he can assemble "the component parts of his ego." Fast editing and close-ups are used a great deal to convey the whole spectrum of reality subjectively seen through the filter of John's perceptivity.

The film is not overburdened with dialogue. Instead, facial expressions and movements, which are catalogued in John's memory, capture the essence of the situation, and the camera cuts quickly from person to person and object to object in order to convey the totality of a scene as perceived by John. An incredible amount of detail is present in the film, as books, paintings and sculptures are often used to accentuate and contribute to the action of many scenes.

Mirrors occur in several scenes of the film when a character confronts the question, "Who am I?" Stop-motion is often used when the director wishes to emphasize a particular shot. Jazz music from the Elysian Spring is carefully coordinated with the mood or action of the scenes. Two memorable scenes occur when John walks through Time Square after Jerry has left him, and his mind produces a collage of images, consisting of memories and significant pieces of immediate surroundings.

of the immediate surroundings.

In a statement that reveals the main thrust of the film Jerry says to John, "One day they'll realize, that as human beings, we all have a vested interest in tolerance." Either Way confronts the viewer with the problem of discovering and accepting one's psycho-sexual identity. It probes the problem of coming to grips with personal alienation, determinism, and guilt.

The film is also making a plea to the viewer to understand and accept the complexity and depth of homosexual love. With reference to homosexuality, Jerry says that he never consciously chose to be what he is. He simply realized one day that he was homosexual, and it hurts to be illegal in 48 out of 50 states. Director Jack Deaver has created with Tom Clark's script, the most humane and sensitive exploration of homosexual love on film to date. The film goes beyond the stereotypes, and presents the dilemma of a young man who must tear away the masks and confront himself authentically. The false impression of lacerating homosexual love often presented in other films, is destroyed in this film.

Either Way is the story of three people who touch the core of each others being. It is presented with psychological nuance, and a deep sense of humanity and artistic orchestration.

Story Extremely Well Told

By PAUL MANKIN
Special to MDC

EITHER WAY is the story of a dilemma and it is extremely well told. Through a series of flashbacks we find out that the film's protangonist faces a difficult choice, whether to marry his beautiful successful painter girl friend or return to his vagrant lover Jerry with whom he has shared a passionate relationship.

I thought the acting was uneven: the central character is clearly the victim of the superior portrayals achieved by both Casey and Jerry. The latter, especially, is brilliantly played by Jack Deaver (he directed the film as well), who creates the perfect balance between rakish aggressivity and desperate loneliness.

Audience reactions to this film will surely vary according to the previous exposure to the theme (if indeed there has been such an exposure). The familiarity of the locale contributed to the "deja vu" feeling: the Pub and the Drake are an "altera comus" for many of us and who would have thought that the South West complex was so damned photogemc?

There are occasional lapses in taste: the finger stirring the drinks (in the pick-up scene) was bothersome and the Providence-Either Way" sign could easily have been omitted. But these are minor flaws compared to the success of some vivid images: apple orchards in the spring (out near Hampshire, I presume), a walk under a covered bridge and the view onto Mount Warner in Hadley. A uniquely touching scene is shot in Provincetown where there is a brief declaration of love between John and Jerry which hits the right tone of absurdity and carefree vacation spirit. It is the only humorous incident in this serious film and I found it immeasureably welcome.

Although this is not a "skin flick" there are a few "strong" scenes: John's initial secution by Jerry may shock the unexpecting and a dance sequence in a gay bar in New York may bother the unmitiated. And yet that is the way it crumbles cookywise, as they used to say. Jerry's frantic confessions of what his sex life has been (and may continue to be) have just the right amount of anguished despair to be memorable.

The dialogue is eclectic, ranging from banter to Tonio Kroger. The effect is at times good, when it seems compressed and compelling, at others it sounds banal. (The pivotal confession scene with Clay, the supervising psychologist who is John's friend was the least convincing.)

If one must look for an all encompassing optique in EITHER WAY, it would be its determinism and one can argue all night about the validity of the premise. But that's not what makes the film work: it is rather the poignant urgency to see aberrant behavior without sneering, it is an attempt to understand the complexities of an intimate relationship and it is, ultimately, an eloquent plea for tolerance.

If the final confrontation seems overly melodramtic it is nonetheless suspenseful and the answer to John's problem is less important than the asking of the question, whether the film justifies its title obviously depends on the sexual predilications of the viewer, but if a few of us liberated souls (or bodies) are not uptight about "swinging either way" then we shall have to admit that the dice are loaded in favor of the all male solution.

It should be emphasized, though, that EITHER WAY does not proselytize and that, at a time when terms are frayed and fraught, it deals with an important problem in a compassionate and honest way.

The Gay Lib View

The movie Either Way is of interest to Gay Liberation because it presents two alternatives: heterosexuality and traditional homosexuality, neither of which is satisfactory for the two main characters.

Neither John nor Jerry are able to cope with their homosexuality. The entire movie, except for the final scene is seen through John's eyes, simply a series of memory sequences. He is paranoid, unable to accept his own homosexuality. Through this perspective we meet Jerry, dark and evil, the stereotyped image of a queer, luring poor John to his apartment.

Later, Jerry becomes a compassionate, loving human being. Unfortunately, John never escapes from his closet. He continues to characterize other gays as screaming queens,unable even to sit and dance in a bar, the perfect representation of the type of gay scene described in the film. He hates being homosexual because he clings to the anti-gay sentiments imposed on him by twenty-six years in bourgeois society.

Jerry, too, is a rather sick queen, a product of outdated, oppressive, puritanical values. There is very little chance of him establishing meaningful human relationships. When his dream does come true in John Hudson, he can't cope with it. His yesterdays of one night stands have unalterably determined his today and tomorrows.

There is no question of the reality of the film. It is an excellent depiction of the oppression faced by most homosexuals in their attempt to superimpose straight roles and relationships on to a homosexual life style. The film shows the pressing need for gay liberation, that is, an entire restructuring of society so that people aren't forced to make the Either Way choice, but instead can remain open to all forms of love. John and Jerry are homosexuals in a straight world, we in Gay Liberation work to be gays in a gay world.

Gay Liberation chooses neither way.

An Important Event

By SEYMOUR RUBIN

There are some doubts about the quality of Tom Clark and Jack Deaver's Either Way as film and as treatment of its subject, but none at all about its value and importance as a phenomenon at the University.

Either Way treats, in semi-documentary terms, a young man's discovery of his bisexual nature; it does so earnestly and responsibly. Though it is not prurient or sensational, it presents scenes of homosexual activity--the strategic operations in a gay bar, the seduction of a young bisexual by a homosexual--knowledgeably and explicitly.

It was written, directed, produced, and--in great measure--acted by University people not professionally involved in film making, some of whom revealed a measure of talent far beyond the normal expectations for amateur artists. And they revealed also a touching willingness to involve themselves in a "daring" enterprise, to put themselves on the line before the University community in a "dangerous" role. Sexual deviation is a touchy subject at best, to treat it seriously in a film made on home ground, as the people who made Either Way have done, is a brave and commendable act.

The psychology of the film seems elementary. Its versions of youthful soul-searching, of profundities purveyed at academic cocktail parties, of maneuvering in gay bars, lack the impress of an original point of view and are sometimes embarrassingly stiff and cliche-ridden.

Though bisexuality is a rare subject for film even these days, it could have been treated in less solemn, textbookish fashion. It would have been nice to "live" more fully in the world of the film, to be less conscious of its earnestly liberal attitude.

The statement of the film is, finally, admirable but old-hat. As to film technique, it was not always sure--and was not intended to be sure--where the young hero's subjective vision of his experience ended and the film's objective "reality" began. Nor was there much originality in the use of current techniques like the freeze-frame.

Mr. Deaver and his associates

University professor Jack Deaver who starred and directed in the new film EITHER WAY, now in a premiere presentation on campus.

used the camera, for the most part, with skill and precision, but without a personal stamp. Which is, perhaps, merely to say that they operated as intelligent, dedicated; but mostly inexperienced film makers, trying with honesty and commitment to treat a difficult subject under severe limitations of resource.

Whatever the general distribution of Either Way may turn out to be, its showing is a major event for the University.

ACADEMIC WOMEN LIBERATED at Berkeley. That's the news in the Daily Californian, which carries a report that "Women at the University are being treated more fairly than they were last year, but further action must be formally taken to achieve their equality."

The Faculty Senate has adopted two recommendations: that University President Charles Hitch be asked to reverse the "nepotism" rule, so that near relatives may be appointed to positions in the same department, and that in hiring and appointing, departments should not assign preference to a man over a woman on the basis of criteria other than those customarily employed in the evaluation of candidates.

LONESOME FACULTY members of the English department are confused at UTexas-Arlington. The Shorthorn there reports that a "Counseling Week" was established by the Department after students complained they are not listened to.

But few students appeared. It should happen when they declare wars, too.

GIRL GETS MALE PRIZE...Ladies' Lib is ecstatic at UTexas-Austin. The Daily Texan there reports gleefully that the first woman prexy of the local chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, the professional journalism society, has been named "Outstanding University Male Journalism Graduate for 1971."

The certificate she received was so imprinted-a throwback, no doubt, from the fact that SDX until two years ago was restricted to male students,faculty and professionals.

SHACK JOBS OK IN PORTLAND, Ore. A couple of students at Portland State have discovered that landlords are willing to rent apartments to avowedly unmarried students in 25 out of 30 tries.

They made their discovery in doing research for a term paper in a social psychology class.

Their five rejections came from older women between the ages of 50 and 60 usually running lower rent apartments.

IS ANYBODY LISTENING? They're going to find out at Washington State U., according to the Daily Evergreen, which announces a new course in "Effective Listening."

It won't take long, either. Two sessions are scheduled of two hours each.

WINOS IN ORONO? The UMaine Campus newspaper reports that its students have given up the beer stein of Rudy Vallee's day for the wine glass.

In a survey of local grog shops and grocery stores, the Campus found that "UMO students are the most regular and faithful wine buyers in the Orono area."

Their theme song has gone from "The Maine Stein Song" to "Little Ole Wine Drinker Me."

Hic!

AND WHILE THEY'RE DRINKING IT UP IN MAINE, profs are working harder than ever at UTexas, where a survey of work habits in the psychology department reveals that the 60-hour week is their thing.

Of the three professorial ranks, the mean group of associate profs reportedly works the longest. They spend an average of 67.5 hours at their jobs, while full professors have slacked off to an average 60 hours. Assistant profs are taking it easy with 57.5 hours.

With the bulk of their time being devoted to teaching, it appears that teach increases inversly with rank. Full professors teach 34 hours, while associates give 43.7 hours and assistants, 43.8.

Verily, the meek shall inherit the students'.

School Closed After Drug Raid

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass. (AP)—Cornwall Academy was closed Tuesday following a drug raid and disturbance at the private boy's preparatory school Monday night and early Tuesday morning.

No classes were held at the school and its approximately 50 students were seen milling about the campus, packing their things and preparing to leave.

Police Chief Emmett Shea said police went to the campus at about 6 p.m. Monday at the request of headmaster John Moran. Shea said a quantity of various kinds of drugs, including marijuana, and drug implements were seized, but no arrests were made.

Shea said some students called shouted obscenities at the police and chanted slogans.

Police were called back to the school early Tuesday morning because of a student disturbance, but they made no arrests and confiscated no more drugs.

The school's main building was destroyed by fire earlier this year, but it was decided to finish the year out in makeshift classrooms.

Heroes And Villains

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

Two recent happenings--one in Washington, and one in the Campus Center Auditorium--have pointed up a serious need for us to examine the way we relate to our "revolutionary" heroes and leaders. In both instances, those people who lay claim to being in the vanguard of the political/cultural revolution have shown themselves to be members of the same movement which is represented by Richard Nixon and Strom Thurmond. It's frightening.

I attended the Phil Ochs concert in the CC Auditorium on Sunday, and heard him make a remark about tags. I'm willing to believe him when he stated that he meant no harm in the way he used the word, but he should know by now that words can often cut much deeper than they are intended. Gay people in the audience were understandably upset by his use of the term, and made their feelings known.

Generally, I don't approve of interrupting a speaker or performer--it shows a lack of respect for everyone in the audience, as well as a lack of respect for the humanity of the person on the platform. However, I feel that it is fair to demand that speakers show the same respect for the humanity of all the members of their audience, and when they fail in this respect they should expect to be called on it--hopefully in a firm but polite manner. It is to the credit of Gay Lib that their response to Ochs' provocation was extremely compassionate and human.

Ochs, on the other hand, did not deal with the objection but instead chose to deal with the supposed affront to his sanctity as a radical and a performer. He could have acknowledged his error, apologized, and gone on with his concert. He didn't. He launched into a sanctimonious speech about a "tyranny by a small minority which denies the rights of the majority" and which the "majority should deal with or else some people might be hurt." In the past I have heard Strom Thurmond and Hubert Humphrey use the same words on this campus, and Richard Nixon, Spiro, Mitchell, and Hoover say the same thing on television.

Ochs then sang "Love Me, I'm a Liberal."

Near the end of the performance, when the gay people had left, Ochs gave a quiet plea for a revolution of sensitivity, where there was concern for other people. Apparently, he did not feel that homosexuals were people, for he seemed unable to admit to, or correct, his insensitivity to them.

The other incident shows that Ochs' isolation from the people for whom he purports to speak is not simply his own idiosyncracy. In Washington, at the great peace rally, our "leaders" spoke to us from behind a fence separating them on their platform from the people to whom all power is supposed to accrue. There was no need for police. Marshals protected the fence so that no unscheduled speakers could reach the platform. They were as far from us as Richard Nixon, surrounded by Secret Servicemen and the White House fence, is from his supporters.

Are these people really our spokesmen? Granted, they speak the words we want to hear, they espouse the causes we so fervently endorse. But are they really the leaders of the revolution we are looking for? It seems to me that there is something gravely wrong when the words and the actions are so far apart. Is it possible to be sincere in a plea for sensitivity while being insensitive? What does "Power to the People" mean when the people speaking it insulate themselves from their listeners.

I'm concerned about the future. When I talk about revolution, I mean a real revolution, a change in basic values, a change in the way people relate to each other, a change in the way people live love.

I don't simply want to see new faces in the seats of power. I don't want to change the words "President" or "Fourher" for the words "Chairman" or "Premier." I don't want to replace one manipulative system for another.

I'm looking for a culture which allows and encourages us to give as much human respect to conservatives as to liberals as to moderates as to radicals as to apathetics. I'm working for a culture where some people don't dehumanize others by calling them pigs, commies, fags, niggers, hippies; where we can recognize that we are all brothers, that the world belongs to all of us, and that we must disagree in order to grow but that we cannot afford to allow ourselves to stunt that growth by letting the disagreements turn to hate or fear.

I'm seeking a culture where we learn to deal with attacks in ways other than with counterattacks. I'm trying to help build a culture which refuses to travel the roads of death and use the institutions of death: a culture which prizes life and humanism above all else. I'm looking for ways to deal with people whom I feel are misguided which will assert their humanity instead of denying it.

It's an ideal, of course, and difficult to reach. But I feel that we climb higher if we reach beyond our grasps than we ever will if we only chase visions which we believe to be attainable. I don't have the answers, only the desire and a willingness to search. Join the search.

BOOK REVIEWS

Summer's coming, and you'll all have lots of time to read, so let me run down a few books which I think might be of interest.

The Soft Revolution by Neil Postman and Charles Weingartner (authors of Teaching as a Subversive Activity! ($1.95, Dell Publishing Co., Inc., N.Y.C.) is a marvelous handbook of fifth column activities to revolutionize the educational system, which will in turn revolutionize all of our other institutions. The methods are imaginative, delightful, and consistent with the kind of counterculture the body of this column is about. I've become a great fan of these two men. They seem to be going in a good direction with little patience for any bullshit, including their own.

Dave Bellinger is one of the Chicago 7. He's a lifelong pacifist and editor of Liberation Magazine. His new book, Revolutionary Nonviolence ($2.50, Doubleday and Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y.), is a collection of essays covering the past 25 years of American history and international affairs as viewed by a revolutionary pacifist. There is criticism, analysis, and alternatives about Vietnam, civil rights, WWII, violence and nonviolence, and other subjects. There's an incredible amount of food for thought here, and I would urge you to read it if only to get a broader perspective on where things could go.

Square Sun Square Moon by Paul Repps ($2.50, Charles E. Tuttle Co., Rutland, Vt.) is a poetic/-poetic essay journey around the world, stopping to touch on the poetry of different cultures. The book is warm, hopeful, and encouraging. It just might give you some new pictures of features to incorporate in our new culture.

And I must put in one last plug for Mother Earth News. This magazine is, to my mind, one of the best available sources of first-hand information on how to live in parts of the counter-culture. If you're into farming, crafts, home industry, making do with less, getting off treadmills, or living the good life without exploiting either your brothers or your planet, this magazine will help you find some paths toward your goal. It's regularly sold for $1.00; some special issues cost $1.35--it's worth it. Mother is available at the Draft Counseling Office in 418E, SU (While they last, all eight issues for $6.00--save 70¢!) or write to Mother Earth News, P.O. Box 38, Madison, Ohio 44057 for a subscription. Cost is $5 for one year's issues, and $9 for two years. Tell them you read about them in CULTURNATIVES.

Have a good summer, people, and spread the faith.

PEACE.

Volpe Won't Give

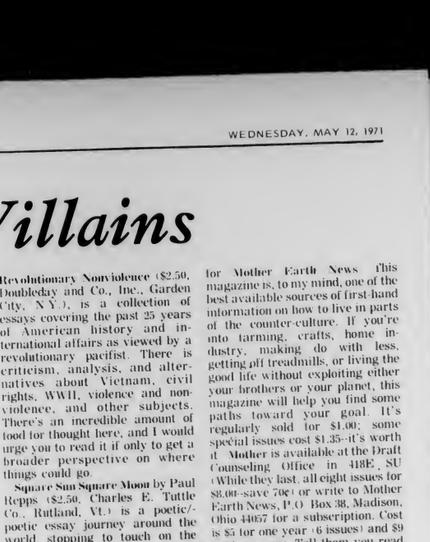
WASHINGTON (AP)—A Democratic fund-raising appeal for "an early retirement for the Nixon-Agnew team" is a dead letter in the mailbox of one team member Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe.

No dough. Volpe wrote Democratic Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien in response to a "Dear Friend" form letter from the Democratic committee.

A spokesman for the committee said the slipup occurred because "it isn't worth the time and effort" to call the names of prominent Republicans from newly purchased magazine subscription lists used for the mailings.

He said other Republican officeholders have inadvertently been asked to contribute money for their own electoral downfall. They include Sen. Gordon Allott of Colorado, and Helen D. Bentley, chairman of the Federal Maritime Commission.

The Democratic form letter contended "what this country needs to get back on its feet again is a good healthy ex-President like Richard M. Nixon."



In a good humored, "Dear Larry" response, Volpe praised President Nixon and said "I will make my contribution to perpetuate his administration."

May Day Survivors Live On

Tentative plans for a radical political collective in the 5-college area were made Sunday night at a May Day Survivors' dinner in Pierpont House.

A meeting will be held Wednesday night at 7:30 to discuss and formulate local actions, in room 174 of the Campus Center.

About 75 participants in Washington May Day activities were at Sunday's gathering in Pierpont. Many possible actions were discussed: guerilla demonstrations Saturday during Armed Services Day at Westover AFB, door-to-door canvassing and money raising with the Peoples' Peace Treaty, renting a Movement house for the summer, media presentations (films, videotapes and a newspaper), and various possible local civil disobedience actions.

Those present agreed that each May Day participant should continue to relate his political convictions to people in a variety of ways. Many felt that this could be done more effectively by individuals or small groups rather than a central organization.

There was also strong feeling that an ongoing area May Day collective could be a valuable resource and energy center.

Tomorrow's meeting is open to anyone interested in future radical political activities in this area. Following the meeting, Roadarte's videotapes of May Day in Washington will be shown.

For more information about the local May Day collective, call 546-5167 or 546-5233.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces is associated with the color gray and the stone of this zodiacal sign is the bloodstone. The number associated with Pisces is 7. Pisces harmonizes with Capricorn, Taurus, Cancer and Scorpio. Many Pisceans are drawn to Virgo, but there can be problems, just as with Gemini and Sagittarius. Pisces loves a mystery. The more intrigue, the better as far as natives of this sign are concerned. Some famous persons born under Pisces include Jackie Gleason, Anais Nin and Irving Wallace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on journeys, vacation plans, ability to learn from experience. Look beyond the immediate. Perceive potential. Clear lines of communication. Write and advertise. Spread the word.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get facts concerning wills, legacies, financial status as it affects one close to you. Creative juices flow. You know what must be done. Key is to act with resolution, confidence.

GEMINI (June 21-July 22): Highlight versatile approach. Have alternative methods at hand. Show others that you possess humor, poise. Sagittarius individual plays key role. Avoid excess. Improve relations with co-workers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with creativity, relations with children. Be ready for surprises involving change, travel. Break out of any rut. Be aware of details. Aquarius person will aid.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Domestic area, home, property: these are emphasized. Gemini individual will prove sympathetic. Confide in one who has been loyal in past. Don't risk security. Get promises in writing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Entertain at home. Period features reunion with relatives. Exhibit warmth. The more you give, the more you are likely to receive. Get errands out of way early. Develop ideas.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Collect necessary data. Be true to yourself. Trying to be something you are not would be an error and waste. You receive communication which can be transformed into profit. Be ready.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through on projects you now can prove major points. One in authority listens and is receptive. Cycle high; state your case with confidence. You will win.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You need additional rest. Realize that being alone is not same as being lonely. Seclusion now would be of benefit. Meditate. Appreciate loved ones. Outline program for future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome new acquaintances. Accept social invitations. Accent good cheer. Optimistic attitude now can bring rewards. Emphasize your own uniqueness. Don't hid light.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give career business affairs strict attention. Your efforts are appreciated. You receive proof of this. One who seemed indifferent makes meaningful gesture. You advance.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have brilliant wit. You must learn to laugh at your own foibles. You have recovered from emotional setback. Know this and proceed to success happiness. You have more responsibility, but rewards also will be greater. You have a way of making people like you even when they oppose your views.

Brown Tops Netmen 8-1, In Finale

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Brown University showed all the power and class that marks those Ivy Leaguer tennis teams as they dropped the UMass netmen 8-1 in their season finale.

Despite the fact that Brown swept all six singles positions, UMass put up quite a fight in four of those matches.

First it was John Bloom who ended his Redmen career with a great effort. Taking the first convincingly, Don Smith, Brown's excellent second singles man, came back. With split sets behind them Bloom and Smith moved into set number three. Bloom bowed 6-4, but not before he had put on a tremendously impressive performance before a large gathering of spectators on the hottest day of the year.

The heat surely was a factor, as players on both sides suffered through the humidity and the 80 degree temperature. Chris Coffin at fourth singles felt the heat in his three setter, as he extended Tom Lay, the Brown netman who boasts a excellent winning record this season. He, like Bloom, dropped the third set 6-4, but his play has been improving steadily and yesterday afternoon's performance was something to boast about.

In the third singles slot Steve Ferber faced Peter Gutterman of Brown. Gutterman ran through Ferber 6-2 in set number one, but found the going tougher in the second one. Ferber lead 5-3, only to drop three in a row. Down 6-5 the third singles man tied the set, and sent it into a tiebreaker. Gutterman led four points to two, in the best five out of nine series. Ferber tied the points at four, thus making the next point a set point for both. Gutterman smashed away an overhand to take the set and the match, as both players came off the court in sad physical condition, having been subjected to the heat for over 90 minutes.

At first singles Alan Goldberg struggled, before losing 6-4, 6-3, in what was his last singles match at UMass. Down at fifth and sixth singles, Jim Bornheim and Bob Webman came up short, and Brown led the match 6-0.

Doubles play gave UMass its only point, Webman and Bornheim romped over their opposition 6-2, 6-1. Bloom and Coffin never did find the handle as they lost in straight sets. And in the top doubles competition Mark Brass joined Goldberg, but couldn't overcome the Ivy power, lalling 6-4, 6-3.

The final match gave UMass an overall 7-3 mark, and a 5-1 record on their home grounds. Behind them too is a Yankee Conference Championship and a showing in the New Englands, that was as good as could be expected due to the remarkable draw that they received.

NBA-ABA All-Star Game

NEW YORK (AP)-The National Basketball Association players openly defied the league's club owners again Tuesday by announcing plans to play an all-star game with the rival American basketball Association in the Houston Astrodome, May 28.

The game, which will match 11-man all-star teams from the two leagues, was scheduled by agreement of the players in the ABA and NBA despite the fact that club owners had barred such an event until formal merger of the warring leagues.

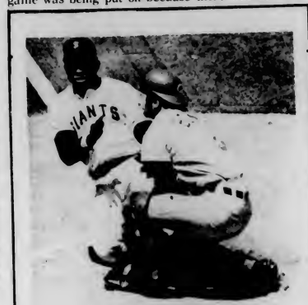
Only last week the owners of the two leagues agreed to seek congressional legislation sanctioning such a merger. The NBA Players Association has been fighting the merger and currently has a court injunction in force barring any amalgamation.

Oscar Robertson of the NBA champion Milwaukee Bucks, president of the players association, said the game was being put on because there was demand from the fans and to show it could be put on without a merger.

"The supergame," said Robertson, "will show that the two pro leagues can play against each other at the highest competitive level without an illegal merger. The owners refused to present any game between the two leagues without such a merger. But with such refusal, the owners' sole motivation becomes clear-money.

"What should be of interest is the fan and the quality of product he sees."

Asked whether the owners approved of the players' decision to go ahead with the game, Robertson said sharply:



"It doesn't matter whether they approve or not."

ABA Commissioner Jack Dolph said the league would "take steps to stop our players from participating if it is decided the game would be detrimental to the league, which we have not."

Dolph also revealed he had told the ABA's 11 member clubs to "not grant permission for a player to participate if the league decided the game was detrimental, Dolph said:

"A player's contract requires him to get permission from his team for any such game."

NBA Commissioner Walter Kennedy declined comment on the situation.

Marshall University Attempts Comeback

HUNTINGTON, W Va. (AP)-"The entire country is watching to see how we can exemplify the greatest lesson in athletics-to face adversity, pick yourself up off the ground and continue toward success."

The handsome face of 35-year-old Jack Lengyel, head football coach at Marshall University, tightened as he carefully selected his words.

"We must start talking about the future," the man who next fall will be entrusted with rebuilding the football team of this 15,000-student school said, "...respecting the past, learning from the past, but moving ahead."

Marshall's recent past is a tragic one. It began and ended on a wooded hillside one rainy night last November. The firey crash of a DC-9 jetliner claimed the lives of 75 persons, including most of the university's football squad, its coaching staff and most dedicated fans. Suddenly, Marshall found itself the victim of the greatest tragedy in sports history.

Joe Rogers Nearing Sixty-five Boyden's Oldster With Forty Years Of Service

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Editor's note: This is the first of a three part series.

When it comes time for Joe Rogers to ring out his bathing trunks and turn over his clipboard in a gesture of retirement, he may very well be the oldest coach in UMass history of tenure and of age. According to the Sports Information department sources the Redman swimming skipper recently hit the four decade plateau in point of time at the university and will no sooner be at the ripe old age of 65 on the final day of this month.

Asked if he had a certain date in mind in which he would bow out of the coaching scene, the well known teller of tales replied: "I haven't thought it over", and then changed the subject by going into one of his entertaining stories which has been a typical trademark of Joe Rogers to those who knew him in younger years.

If this is any indication to what lies ahead the father of UMass swimming will probably stick it out to his age qualification expires.

Rogers, who says: "You can't become a champion swimmer in four years of college--you got to reach that in 15 years of swimming", was far from a chicken of the sea at childhood. It was favorable for his future's sake that his father had owned a summer cottage on Stiles Reservoir (Leicester), and this enabled young Rogers to develope his strokes early in life.

When he was old enough he decided to join the Worcester YMCA. And at age 11 he made a sound impression at summer camp by entering his first competitive race and winning it. It was a minor victory-but a start of things to come.

A pool shark at high school (and I don't mean at Billiards when I say this), a much developed Rogers was well on his way to Worcester Poly Tech, a school that attracted him because of a new pool and the engineering program it offered. Joe's dad advised him to attend a school of phys ed, but he declined to make the decision that would one day haunt him.

In any event at WPI the local boy made a name for himself in the course of three years and set all sorts of records. His aquatic accomplishments include such titles as the NEAUU Junior Diving crown and Senior NEAUU titles in 50 and 100 free style and the 220 backstroke. A freak attack of appendicitis was the only thing that kept his 100-yard race record shy of perfection.

Having been offered a position with the Massachusetts District Water Supply Commission in February of 1930 Rogers set out as an engineer at the water tunnel between Quabbin Reservoir and Clinton. In the meantime he still kept in tact with swimming and later hitched up with the Whitensville Community Swimming Association. As a member he helped them to the National AAU relay championship in 1931.

Seeking more pleasant working conditions than that offered by his trade as an engineer (his father advised otherwise) he deserbed his affiliation to UMass as delightful and quite accidental. It seems that Rogers was swimming down at the WPI tank one day when WPI athletic director Percy Carpenter introduced Joe to Mr. Curry Hicks, then Phys ed director at UMass. Hicks questioned Rogers as to how he would go about constructing a pool. Rogers gave his comments on the matter and the notion struck him later that day that UMass was in need of an aquatic instructor.

Not long afterward, he inquired (was the first applicant by the way) and was accepted for the task. He officially began his work on May 2, 1931 and has been at the helm henceforth. Rogers launched the university's first organized swimming outfit in 1935, and they finished in fine fashion for openers with a 4-2 mark.

Five years later the Massachusetts mermen recorded their only unbeaten campaign on tap 15-0-1. In his first nine years UMass swimming was a sight to behold while boasting a remarkable record of 48-12. A three year intermission came forth with World War II, so Rogers relegated his time to a pre-induction physical education program. In the post war years it was slow getting started again as the swimmers suffered three successive losing years. They finally broke out of things and got back in the winning groove with a seven year span of 41-19 which prevailed into the late 50's.

But things are changing. And success has tailed off greatly since then with only three winning seasons in the past 14 years, and even those were in a row. The age of boysclub swimming has seemed to have dipped into the past. More and more of your good material is coming from the country club set. No swimming scholarships and possibly a number of other things have attributed to the rough going.

Never the less, the man has molded a lifetime record of 148-133-1 in 34 years at a place where swimming is not expected to be king, has also produced some great All-Americans. Bud Hall, George Tilley, Jimmey Cutler, and Myrl Welker, to name a few.

Apart from his coaching chores he is also recognized as one of the nation's leading authorities on pool consultance and has done an admirable job in that area too. Other contributions to the sport of swimming include membership in American Red Cross aquatic program since the age of 17, as both an instructor and an examiner.

Rogers was a former president of both the College Swimming Coaches of America and the New England Swimming Coaches Association. In 1946 he helped to establish the first swimming program for the Massachusetts State Police. Rogers had been called on in the past to work as a pool consultant in the Women's Physical Education building and for the United States Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs. He's done other consulting throughout the country as well as abroad. As you can see, Rogers endeavors in aquatics seem to be endless.

To add to his versatility he was also a cracker-jack behind the trigger of a pistol. Serving for many years as president of the U.S. Revolvers's Association, he achieved significant acclaim nationally. Five times he finished in the runnerup spot and he managed to reach the top of the pile once. His university pistol teams did quite well for themselves too until their activity was permanently halted by the administration.

Asked if he still gets the same thrill from coaching as he ever did, the old guy who is in good enough shape to whip half the swimmers on his squad replied: "Yes, it's pleasant to work with young people instead of the old folks like myself. There's nothing quite like it in the world. My father wanted me to go to a phys ed school, but I insisted on taking up engineering. But I got involved with coaching and it has meant everything to me ever since."

"I don't get that much satisfaction out of a kid if he doesn't work. I could remember a kid coming up to me in tears because he couldn't attend a meet on account of being the best man at his brother's wedding. I told'em not to feel bad about it because you only get one opportunity in life to go to your brother's wedding while you can go swimming any day of the week. It turned out that we lost the meet by a single point and the poor kid just never lived it down although he made up for it.

"I don't have that kind of spirit anymore. There are many reasons for it. When I had good swimmers, I would be here every day of the week. If you're gonna work just four days a week it's just impossible.

"You got to make up your mind that you have to work and there's no short cut. The trouble today is that kids want instant success. Swimming, just like football or any other sport, is a year round thing. You just don't get into condition in a week. You have to get there and stay there."

While his critics may argue that his coaching methods are outmoded for the times, maybe it's about high time the UMass sports administration step in and lend him a helping hand. Possibly a second hand man, more recruiting, and a scholarship or two is just what is needed to perk up the program to what it was.

Let's face it Joe Rogers has erected a brilliant past. But one cannot lean on the good old days if success is sought in the future.

Having dedicated two thirds of his life to UMass he will not hesitate to reminisce on his years of coaching in the retreat of retirement. The university will not be quick to forget his accomplishments and endeavors at the pool. For he'll be a tough man to replace when his time comes to step down.

Eagles Thump Redmen, 7-5

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

NEWTON—There's always a time in a sports season when a team that has been rolling along experiences the let down or looks ahead or comes up against a team that's psyched to the gills. Yesterday at Boston College the UMass baseball team ran into this situation and dropped a 7-5 verdict to the Eagles before a wild bunch of B C rooters.

What the defeat did was end a 13 game UMass winning streak and that's all. There'll be no change in the regional rankings, no harm done to the playoff hopes and no damage in the conference. All that the B C win means is that the Eagles will have at least another year to savor a victory over a team that is possibly headed to the college World Series.

It was during the long streak that the Redmen were used to seeing fire-ballers on the mound, but yesterday they came up against a little 5'4 1/2" junk baller who almost completely stifled the heavy Redman artillery for the six innings that he worked.

The Redmen opened the game with a quick score in the first when Charlie Manley reached on an error, advanced on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Ed McMahon.

The Eagles came right back in their half of the inning to score off Redman starter John Olson who lasted only three innings in by far his most unimpressive outing of the season.

In the second B C put three runs on the board, on a hit, a walk, an error, a sacrifice fly and a suicide squeeze play.

This was the first time since the Redmen returned from their southern trip that they were this far back in a game. But they came back in the fourth with three of their own on three hits to knot the score.

In the bottom of the sixth with Chip Baye now on the mound for UMass, the Eagles scored an unearned run when Hosea Kelley booted a potential inning ending grounder to allow Ed Rideout of B C to score the go-ahead run.

Up to this time Baye was rolling along, but this run set the stage for what was to come in the next at bat for the Eagles.

The Redmen scored a single run, their last, in the top of the seventh when Manley led with a single, stole second (his 22nd in 23 attempts), advanced to third on an infield single by Mark Palau and scored on single to right by Dan Esposito, who continued to rip the ball with two hits.

One swing of the bat decided the game in the bottom half of the seventh. With two out, Bill Medea singled and the next man to the plate, Jack Abbott, the cleanup man, hit a long shot over the right field fence to put the Eagles up by two, 7-5.

The Redmen were able to mount a threat in the eighth when with two men out, Jim Kiley, pinch-hitting for Baye walked and Manley singled. McMahon, however, flyed out to end the inning.

In their last at bats the Redmen went out in order and Boston college had its ninth win of the year against eight defeats. The Redmen now stand 18-5. This win undoubtably made the B C season a success, regardless of their final record.

The intense rivalry between these two schools in athletics brought the best out of the B C players and left the Redmen of the defensive in the entire game.

But as coach Bergquist so rightly put it in the locker room after the game to his players, don't hold your heads down after this loss. B C will be able to say in the next month that they defeated a team that went to Omaha.

Gorillas At Brown

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

With the possibility of an NCAA bid staring them in the face Garber's Gorilla's will go up against nationally ranked Brown University, a lacrosse powerhouse that has all the credentials.

The fifth ranked team in the nation will host the Redmen today at 3 p.m., and the Brown stickmen are, in a word, great. They have depth, they have size, and equally important they have thinkers.

Brown is atop the New England polls with a 10-2 mark, as opposed to the Redmen's 10-4 mark. Brown's two losses came to teams ranked among the top four in the nation as Maryland dropped them 15-9 and Cornell bombarded them 12-4 last Saturday.

Of their 10 victories, Brown knocked off three teams that UMass opposed, beating Harvard 11-5, Adelphi 11-7 and Connecticut 19-6. By the means of comparison scores we find UMass falling to Harvard 7-6, and defeating Adelphi 11-9, and UConn 11-4.

If comparisons are any indication, Brown has a definite edge, although in the Harvard-Brown game, Harvard was playing without their first-string goalie, which can mean all the difference in the world.

But as Coach Garber said, "This is the first game all year where we'll be going in as the underdog." The reason that UMass has taken on the underdog role begins with the three outstanding attackmen on the Brown squad.

Kevin Cleary, Steve Russo and Bob Selise have managed 58 goals for Brown, and Selise owns 37 of them. Last week Selise scored 11 times against UConn, most of those goals coming off of Russo passers. This is the combination that the Redmen will have to stop.

Joey Smith will be the Redmen's counterpart to Selise, as his success at shadowing Selise will be a key. John Walsh will be covering Russo, and his task will be to prevent Russo from getting the ball to the tough crease man.

Al Ruggiano, the Redmen's defensive tri-captain, will have Cleary to worry about, as Cleary is "Brown's best all around attackman" in Coach Garber's words.

Two other attackers will see action for today's home team as Brown likes to substitute often, and does so with narry a loss of ability.

Two great dodgers highlight Brown's midfielders as Rupert Schofield and Dean Rollens will be covered by Tim Bosworth and Dana Stone respectively. Schofield is the mainstay of the first midfield as is Rollens of the second squad. With Bosworth moving up to the first line of UMass middies, his defensive ability, which has been outstanding all season long, will have to be at its best today.

Like every outstanding lacrosse squad, Brown has no weaknesses.

Brown is far from the stereotype ballclub usually seen on the lacrosse field as they change their clearing, riding and power play tactics often, with great efficiency. Adjusting to the various set-ups of Brown will be another of the key's in today's contest.

UMass will also sport a few wrinkles of their own, but "Too many changes are apt to hurt you" pointed out Coach Garber. Riding and clearing tactics will be altered slightly as Brown had scouted UMass four times, practically forcing the Gorilla's to throw a little something new at them.

Enough cannot be said as to the importance of this game. For the first time in the history of NCAA lacrosse, there will be an 8-team playoff at the end of the year to determine who's number one. Thus far five teams have been chosen, namely Virginia, Cornell, Army, Navy and Brown. With three spots left, UMass will need a win today to have a shot. Teams like Hoftstra, Cortland and Washington & Lee are all in positions to fill up the openings, thus a loss to Brown would all but nullify any post season aspirations.

Garber called this game, "The most important one in four or five years" for a UMass lacrosse club. Facing the number five team in the nation is no easy task, but Garber's Gorilla's should be raring to go, seeking the number one ranking in New England and a post season tourney bid.

To catch all the action of today's game, tune in WMUA at 2:45 p.m. where Bruce Glazer will be calling the play by play, and Ken Day will provide the color. Listen in if you don't make it down to Providence, it should be a thriller.

Canadiens Romp To Even Series

MONTREAL (AP)-Fleet Yvan Cournoyer and Montreal's Mahovlich brothers, Pete and Frank, led the Canadiens to a 5-2 romp over Chicago in last night's fourth game of the Stanley Cup playoff.

The victory squared the best-of-seven National Hockey League championship series at two games each with game five set for Chicago tomorrow night and game six back in Montreal on national television Sunday afternoon. A seventh, if necessary, would be played in Chicago next Tuesday night.

Cournoyer scored a pair of second period goals after the Mahovlich brothers had helped Montreal grab a 3-1 lead in the opening 20 minutes.

Pete Mahovlich got the Canadiens started at the one minute mark of the first period, deflecting Terry Harper's shot past Hawk goalie Tony Esposito. It was the first shot of the game for either team.

Stan Mikita tied it for the Hawks on a power play goal at 3:09 but less than four minutes later, the Canadiens were in front again with Pete's older brother, Frank, setting up Jean Beliveau in front.

Chicago's Cliff Koroll was in the penalty box only 12 seconds when the Canadiens burst into the Hawks' zone. Cournoyer and Frank Mahovlich zipped passes back and forth before Frank caught Beliveau lurking at the corner of the net and hit him for the go-ahead goal.

Chicago tried to come back with Jacques Laperriere in the penalty box but Pete Mahovlich intercepted the puck and forced rookie Rick Foley into a holding penalty that erased the Hawks' manpower advantage. A few moments later, the Canadiens had their third goal of the period on Guy Lapointe's slap shot.

Cournoyer took over in the second period.

The quick right winger was just coming out of the penalty box when the puck came to Foley in midice. Cournoyer, behind the rookie, flicked the disc away from him and sailed in alone on Esposito for his eighth goal of the playoff.

After Dennis Hull's slap shot caught the far corner of the Canadiens' net, beating goalie Ken Dryden on his glove side, Cournoyer and the Mahovlich brothers struck again on a power play.

This time Chico Maki was off with just over four minutes left in the period when Frank and Pete drew assists on Cournoyer's second goal of the game.

The third period was scoreless with two brawls in the final minutes resulting in six majors, five misconducts and three minor penalties.

Sox Keep Rolling; Tip Twins, 5-4

ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—Duane Josephson and Carl Yastrzemski smacked 2-run home runs for the Boston Red Sox but it took an unearned run to give Gary Peters, one of his rare victories against the Minnesota Twins 5-4 last night.

After Yastrzemski's fifth homer, a 403-foot shot into the right field bleachers, sent the Red Sox into a 4-2 lead in the sixth, Rico Petrocelli singled and moved to third on two ground outs. Rick Renick booted Josephson's grounder to allow the deciding run to score.

Peters, 4-2, who had lost 16 of 19 career decisions against Minnesota, lasted only five innings and needed strong relief help from Bill Lee as the Red Sox won their 14th game in their last 17 outings.

Josephson's third homer of the season staked Peters to a 2-1 lead in the second off Tom Hall, 1-3.

The Twins, who got a run in the first on Cesar Tovar's lead-off triple and Harmon Killebrew's double, tied it in the fifth when Rod Carew grounded into a bases-loaded double play.

The Twins got two more in the sixth, finishing Peters, on a walk, singles by Leo Cardenas and Renick and George Mitterwald's sacrifice fly.

Hoop Star Comes to UM

James Burke, All-State basketball player from Needham High School has announced his intentions of attending UMass in the fall.

Burke, a 6'2 backcourt prospect, averaged 21.5 points to lead his team to an outstanding 16-2 season and a runner-up spot in the tough Bay State League. For his performance Burke was selected as the League's Most Valuable Player by a vote of the coaches. Needham, coached by Ralph Parmigiane, participated in the Eastern Massachusetts High School Tournament. Burke was also chosen to play for the Massachusetts team in the Capitol Classic in Albany, N.Y. This tournament pairs the best of several states in the Northeast area and Massachusetts finished runner-up.

Burke is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Burke of Needham and plans to major in Business Administration. His father is the golf professional at Needham Country Club.

Redman Coach Jack Leaman said, "We are happy to have a player of Jim's ability in our program. We know he will be an asset to our school and to the Basketball team."

VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 143 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1971

University President Robert C. Wood (left) fielded questions on topics ranging from campus governance to a new academic calendar after a brief address to the Student Senate last night. Senator John Stevens (center) led off the question period by asking for Wood's opinion of a University Senate. Senate President Lee Sandwen (right) listened pensively to Wood's comments. Sandwen Appointments Debated

Wood Favors Unicameral Senate

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

University President Robert C. Wood was received with mixed reaction when he addressed the Student Senate at its final meeting of the year last night. He answered questions on numerous areas of University affairs, including a unicameral senate, faculty tenure, a new academic calendar, year-round usage of campus facilities, off-campus rent control, educational reforms.

Wood's appearance was followed by two hours of debate on President Lee Sandwen's recommendations for committee chairmanships. Seven were accepted by the Senate but two were defeated. The Senate did not approve of William Abbott as Budgets Committee Chairman or Susan Spatrick as Public Relations Committee Chairman.

President Wood opened his address by thanking the Senate for budgeting the CCEBS program again for next year. He said the Senate's continued support of this scholarship and tutorial program for disadvantaged students showed a consistency which he would like to see more often in other parts of the University.

A question and answer period followed President Woods' brief comments. When asked if he supports the concept of a University Senate, Wood said "It is my opinion that it should be formed." He added that a unicameral body incorporating the three present senates--Faculty, Undergraduate, and Graduate--is his personal preference, but that he and the trustees will accept any reasonable form of campus governance that the campus decides on.

Wood further commented that he does not want to give any formulas for governance proposals because he feels it is up to the campus to decide. He said he does not want to "intrude" now and was only offering his opinion.

Another Senator asked Wood if he would support a stand against continuation of a system of faculty tenure. The President responded that tenure is something which should definitely be studied to determine the value of its continuation. He said that almost every practice and tenet of American education should be re-examined to assure that they fit the times. He said this examination is something he formed the Commission on the Future of the university to handle. The Commission is still meeting.

Wood was also asked what he is doing related to the issue of priority of the classroom over research in a professor's duties. He stated his belief that the good scholar and the good teacher overlap. He said the problem has not been because of a dichotomy between the two areas but has been because of the distraction of faculty members away from campus.

According to Wood, the real problem has been that too many faculty members regard the University as a "post office"; with professors coming in just once a week to teach a class and pick up their mail. He said he does not see faculty participation in research itself as the problem.

Wood was asked if the State Legislature would be "upset" by passage of a calendar creating a shorter semester next year, one year earlier than recently scheduled by the Faculty Senate. The Student Senate has asked that the calendar, which shortens the Fall semester from 14-13 weeks, be approved for the coming year. The Faculty Senate votes tomorrow on whether to move up the calendar one year earlier.

Wood responded that it is his understanding that the new calendar is a year away from coming into effect, and that he hopes the calendar will go ahead at its proposed rate.

On the topic of the Legislature's attitude toward tuition increases, President Wood predicted that tuition will be a major issue next year. He said that this is despite the Legislature's overwhelming defeat of tuition hikes this year.

Usage of the University campus and facilities year-round and for longer hours daily was also discussed. Wood is not prepared to say whether extended use of facilities can be answered only in terms of educational increases. He pointed out that such full-time extensive education must also be looked at from a financial viewpoint. Net savings would not be as great as he feels many people expect.

As for experimental programs in innovative education, Wood described his priority as "pretty high". He is deeply convinced that educational programs which used to work are often outmoded in these times. He warned, however, that just the definition of problems and goals does not solve problems and that too often experimental programs stop short of effectively innovating their proposals.

The problem of high rents in off-campus housing was brought to Wood's attention. He was asked if anyone in his office is working on setting up rent control for the Amherst area. Wood informed the Senate that people in his office and on this campus have been working on the problem.

Wood is strongly opposed to a rent control program such as is run in many cities. He called it a "Mickey Mouse" way of handling the rent problem.

He expects a better solution would be in terms of increasing supply to meet demand.

The general attitude of the Senate toward Wood's attendance was mixed. Senators were glad that he came and felt that he gave straightforward answers to most of their questions. Some, however, questioned his commitment to the Senate in light of his not appearing earlier, although invited last semester. They also spoke of his coming across as an excellent politician and said he fielded their questions well, although seeming to avoid the issue at times.

President Wood left the Senate chambers immediately following the question and answer period.

Consideration of Senate President Sandwen's committee chairmanship appointments followed Wood's appearance. Chairmanships of the Senate's standing committees are annually appointed in the Spring shortly after officer elections. Sandwen last night submitted eight appointments to be approved by the Senate.

Two of Sandwen's recommendations were overturned by ballot votes. The Senate voted not to support Senate William Abbott as Budgets chairman or Susan Spatrick as Public Relations chairman.

There was heated debate over these recommendations before the Senate defeated them. They were questioned as to qualifications and past experience. The appointment of former Senate President Glenn Elters to the chairmanship of the Academic Affairs Committee was also debated, but accepted.

Other appointments approved last night were the following: Bruce Bernstein to Student Matters; Albert Olmstead to Finance; Ed Voci to Services; Patricia Asack to Social Action; Robert Chiller to Rents and Fees Commission; and Mary Silveira to Student Government Affairs.

The Senate was still in session at the time of this writing.

WFCR Program Wins Broadcasting Award

The first CPB (Corporation for Public Broadcasting) Community Service Award for Radio was presented yesterday to public station WFCR, FM, Amherst, for "Que Tal Amigos," a daily prime time Spanish language program designed to aid newly arrived Latin American families in adapting to living conditions in the highly industrialized Northeast.

The award was presented by Frank Gillard, former managing director of BBC radio and CPB Distinguished Fellow at the first annual conference and radio awards luncheon. The CPB Community Service Award is given to the public radio station which produces the one program or series for local listening that reflects the highest achievement in community service in a given year.

Accepting the award, Joseph S. Marcus, special assistant to the chancellor of UMass, licensee of WFCR, QUO quoted from FCC chairman Dean Burch's speech to the 1970 NAEB (National Association of Educational Broadeasters) Convention. "Your job is to dig deep into the community's problems and needs, and to take risks to try and serve them." He said that this is what WFCR has done with Que Tal Amigos.

To help the Spanish speaking immigrant adjust to living in the United States, Que Tal Amigos provides news from his homeland; world, national and area news, including weather and sports, information about legal matters, labor regulations, opportunities for leisure time activities, health, educational opportunities, social customs, and entertainment in the form of currently popular Latin American music.

This series, Frank Gillard said in making the award, "is a fine example of how public radio provides news from his homeland, world, national and area news.

This series, Frank Gillard said in making the award, "is a fine example of how public radio provides a service that no other medium can afford. It not only provides information and entertainment, it also helps establish an ethnic identity and fosters a feeling of self-pride in its Spanish speaking listeners."

Williams Cops ASA Prexy

By ROBERT NORTHSHIELD
Special to the MDC

The last American Students Association meeting of the semester ended in turmoil last night as MDC managing editor David Williams was overwhelmingly picked as chairman of the group.

The former chairman, Harold Koltin, was unavailable for immediate comment.

Koltin arrived late at the meeting to find himself confronted by an irate group of students who proceeded to rebuke him on a number of points concerning a letter Koltin had published in Wednesday's MDC. He had made several allegations concerning the handling of the recent concerts held on campus.

David Poisson, organizer of the May 2 concert, asked several questions about accusations Koltin made and was repeatedly told to contact Columbia Records in New York for answers. Koltin is Columbia Records promotion manager on campus.

A question was posed to Koltin by Bob Nesti of the MDC about who was entitled to membership in the ASA. Koltin replied that anyone who wanted to go to the meetings would be a member. Commuter Senator Ed Fenwick immediately nominated Williams for chairman, he was seconded and the 30 or so people, mostly from the Collegian and Spring Concert Committee, in the room responded almost unanimously in favor of the motion.

When asked about the future plans of the group, Williams said he wants to straighten things out between the ASA, the Senate and the Collegian so that "maybe we'll have a better University to come back to in the fall."

Poisson To Bring Koltin To Court

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Robert; Rochford, Chief Justice of the General Court of the Student Judiciary, announced last night that he plans to serve Harold Koltin, Former Chairman of the American Students Association, with a subpoena to appear before the UMass General Court.

"Dave Poisson has filed a request for judicial action against Harold Koltin for 'malicious harrassment' for allegations about Poisson for actions he took as Chairman of the Spring Concerts Committee," said Rochford.

These 'allegations' appeared in a letter to the Editor in the May 12, 1971, issue of the Collegian. In this letter, Koltin stated about the May 1 and 2 concerts that: "evidently the groups and their affiliated entertainment personnel weren't impressed, for their feelings about the concert coordinators, as expressed in artist appearance evaluation forms which now lie on several desks in the entertainment offices of New York, speak for themselves. In part, the evaluation states: 'Without doubt, the concert coordinators proved to be uncooperative, irresponsible, and incompetent egotrippers.'"

The hearing will be held in the Campus Center, Room 165, at 4 o'clock on Friday. William Bellmore, of the Student Senate Budgets Committee, and John Hogan, Internal Vice-President of the Student Senate, were mentioned as witnesses.

'May Day Survivors' Support Demonstrations

About 25 survivivors decided to continue radical political activities in this area throughout the summer.

The May Day Survivors decided to continue radical political activities in this area throughout the summer.

About 25 Survivors met last night in the Campus Center to discuss future plans. The group agreed to leaflet and organize a car caravan to Saturday's Armed Services Day demonstration at Westover AFB. More information on the caravan or the demonstration is available by calling 546-5167 or 546-5233.

Videotapes of May Day activities in Washington will be shown by the Survivors to any interested schools or community groups. A schedule of talks and videotape showings are now being put together.

A Movement house is being rented by local Survivors who will be in the area this summer. A few May Day activists will be moving to Springfield during the summer to work with a larger Movement Center, which will serve as a clearinghouse for radical political activities throughout Western Massachusetts and Connecticut.

The Survivors also decided last night to help prepare a May Day analysis for the first edition of the Amherst Radical Community Union newspaper, which should be out this month.

Anyone wanting to know more about The Survivors' plans for the summer is invited to an informal get together Friday night at 7 in the commune living room, 321 Pierpont House. The phone number is 546-5167 or 546-5233.

Changes Seen Unlikely In Cance Coed Policy

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

The group of residents of Cance House met with Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Bromery Tuesday night to discuss the delay in the consideration of their proposal to change to an alternate room coed dorm from their present alternate floor arrangement, but the meeting resulted in no change.

Jeff Brodman, speaking for the residents of the house, said that members of the dorm had decided to simply change to an alternate room arrangement last year without permission but on outside advice decided it go through normal channels. They did this, through the area Coordinator's office, from where it was scheduled to be on the agenda of the Board of Trustee's December, 1970 Meeting. However, "It's just been pushed back and back so that we still don't have a decision," Mr. Brodman said.

Dr. Bromery responded by telling of his support for the program written up by Cance House and he then told of the opposition of several members of the Board of Trustees when a proposal to "give students a greater say in determining dorm life..." and turn dormitories into actual living-learning centers was submitted to the Board. The proposal was defeated by the Board.

He said that he had been given power by the Trustees to make decisions through his office regarding student life, but with the provision that he had to report to them "in detail and in advance" on any changes.

Saying that he felt the program's acceptance by the Board of Trustee's was "doubtful" at this time, he said that "I'm quite impressed with the proposal and will take it under consideration," and decide if and when he will present it to the Trustees.

The residents of Cance said after the meeting that they were prepared for several courses of action if the proposal was defeated, and that they would make their decision at a later time.

Weekend Mental Movies Described

To give the community a better idea of what the films in the Room To Move and Free U. co-sponsored Fourth World Reality....MENTALMOVIES...towards Cosmic Conciousness... film showings are about the following brief descriptions will be helpful.

Phenomena-The physical universe, sangsara, and its antithesis, nirvana, are the concepts dealt with in this film.

Catalogue- a computer generated film in which floral patterns curl as thoough they were actually organic growths.

K9000—A Space Oddity- a cartoon skit on a 2001:A Space Odyssey and science fiction films in general.

Binary Bit Patterns- a dazzling exploration of archetypal geometrical configurations which approaches deja uv.

Allures- a trip backward along the senses into the interior of the being...it moves from matter to spirit.

Menagerie-a collection of child (7-10 yrs. old) made animated films made before..."As soon as you're young, they make you feel small."

Autumn Spectrum- a cinematic study of the most colorful of all the seasons shot in extreme close-up photography.

World-inner space....outer limits.

Permutations-a search for an abstract color visual approximation of the powerful and haunting state of nonordinary reality of a voyage of the human soul.

Bumper Standards Bump Into High Damage Yield

WASHINGTON (AP)—Many 1971 model autos meet the 1973 federal rear-bumper collision standard but fail to reduce collision property damage, the Senate Commerce Committee was told Wednesday.

William Haddon Jr., president of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, said, "The sad fact is that the requirements of the recently issued so called rear-bumper standards of the Department of Transportation...are so weak that damage-prone cars with their eggshell exteriors have for some years been able not only to meet but to exceed the requirements."

He asserted the standards would do little if anything "to reduce the staggering, unnecessary property-destruction levels we are witnessing daily in highway crashes because of poor automobile design."

Tests of six 1971 autos showed five met the 1973 standard for rear bumpers in a collision at 2.5 miles an hour, he said.

But more significantly, he added, the dollar damage sustained by the autos ranged from $26 for a Mercedes 220 to $71.70 for a Dodge Colt.

"Enormous amounts of damage can be suffered by a car that still meets these specifications," he said. "For example, there is no requirement even that the car itself be capable of being driven away from its test crash."

Jury Hears Huggins' Rackley Tape

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—The jury in the trial of Bobby G. Seale and Ericka Huggins heard for the second time Wednesday Mrs. Huggins' tape-recorded introduction to an interrogation of Alex Rackley, a Black Panther who later was slain.

"Most of the things I said, I said because I wanted to say what George Sams wanted to hear," Mrs. Huggins told the prosecutor, State's Atty. Arnold Markle, in her second day on the witness stand in Superior Court.

She and Seale, national chairman of the Panthers, are charged in connection with Rackley's death, who was slain two days after the questioning.

Mrs. Huggins' recorded narration of the events that led up to Rackley's interrogation was played when the prosecution presented its case, and defense attorneys objected to having it played again.

But the judge ruled that it was permissible on cross-examination after Mrs. Huggins testified that some of what she said on the tape was inaccurate. As the tape was being played, Mrs. Huggins mentioned six places at which she said she had been prompted or advised by Sams or another man who was present-Warren Kimbro.

As the prosecutor went over the transcript of the recording with Mrs. Huggins phrase-by-phrase, she pointed out remarks that she said were merely repetitions that Sams and others had drawn about Rackley.

Army Captain Gets SCREW Award

The first annual S.C.R.E.W. award was presented to Capt. Emington of Army R.O.T.C., who was selected during four days of student balloting at a penny a "vote," last week in the Campus Center. The award, a mounted two-foot wooden screw, was made by Dr. R. Bruce Hoadley of the Wood Tech. department.

The S.C.R.E.W. contest was sponsored by the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Fraternity. All profits of the S.C.R.E.W. award, expected to be over fifty dollars are to be donated to the Library Fund for the purchase of new books.

Industries Day 'Slumps'

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Oatmeal cookies, belts and sandals, and homemade root beer were among the student-made products for sale in the Campus Center during Student Industries day yesterday.

Sponsored by the Program Council, Student Industries Day was an opportunity for students to sell to each other for a change", as one member of the Program Council put it. This year's participation was somewhat lower than expected, which was attributed to the end of the year slump.

Most of the entrepeneurs interviewed seemed pleased with the business they were doing, terming it "about as expected." One sandal-seller said that he would be busy for a week filling orders from students.

The project, open to any student or member of an RSO organization, may be made a daily affair next year by the Program Council.

European Troop Showdown Put Off For One Week

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nixon administration succeeded Wednesday in putting off for one week a showdown on a proposal to halve U.S. troop strength in Europe, giving it time to find a way to block the move.

After a day of maneuvering and behind-the-scenes meetings, the Senate agreed to vote next Wednesday on the troop-cut proposal and alternatives that seek to blunt its effect.

One Senate source reported, however, the administration is opposing any alternatives and will seek to defeat the troop-cut measure itself.

Apparently taken by surprise when Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana offered the amendment on Tuesday, the White House passed the word to use whatever means were necessary to delay action.

Both Mansfield and Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R—Md., author of a pending alternative endorsing President Nixon's plans to maintain U.S. troop strength in Europe, said they were ready to vote at any time.

But Sen. John C. Stennis, D—Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee and floor manager of the draft-extension bill to which Mansfield offered the amendment, said many senators want to speak on the proposal.

Asked whether a vote would come this week, he told a reporter "There's no decision been made."

Mansfield's proposal had more than 50 sponsors when it was introduced in the previous Congress. Administration forces indicated privately they were uncertain they had enough votes to beat it and needed time to come up with an acceptable counter-proposal to block it.

Mansfield's amendment would bar funds for more than 150,000 U.S. troops in Europe after the end of 1971. Current American troop strength is more than 300,000.

Thousands Die In Wake Of Pakistan Civil War

A civil war of staggering butchery and hatred has left the 23-year-old nation of Pakistan on the brink of economic and political ruin.

Pakistan, though broke, is spending more than $2 million daily to support the army that shelled and machine-gunned this province of 75 million into submissive inactivity.

It is responsibly estimated that deaths since the war started March 25 number more than the 400,000 killed by nature in last November's cyclone. This time, each death means a family's lasting bitterness.

Killing was indiscriminate. Bengalis bent on a separate East Pakistan nation slaughtered many of the six million non-Bengalis. When the army moved in, it settled the score, aided by non-Bengalis seeking revenge.

The resultant fighting brought damage reminiscent of World War II.

Losses to industry and to commerce between the two wings of Pakistan are incalculable. So are the effects of stalled development. The 55 mills that turn out jute, East Pakistan's chief money-maker, are working at 15-20 per cent of capacity.

Reporters touring East Pakistan found that millions face starvation from famine and from halted relief distribution.

Politically, the problems are as great. Bengalis voted 167 to 169 National Assembly seats to Sheik Mujibar Rahman's Awami League in December. He is now jailed, the party is banned and no one has any idea what happens next.

President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, who went back to the West after talks with Mujib on restoring civilian rule collapsed in Dacca, maintains he wants politicians to take back the government.

But betting is heavy that Yahya won't last the year as President and the army won't find anyone who thinks their way and can still walk unescorted through the streets of East Pakistan.

Confidence is shattered among Bengalis, West Pakistanis and Indian migrants who settled here at partition in 1947.

Hindu Bengalis made up 12 per cent of the population. They chose to remain here though West Bengal in India is largely Hindu and East Bengal-East Pakistan- is mostly Moslem.

Radical Moslem students rejected the religion that bound them to West Pakistan, espousing instead Hinduism and "Calcutta culture." Hindus were widely blamed for fomenting the conditions leading to war.

As a result, the army singled out Hindus. Their shops and homes were smashed and burned.

The job of rebuilding what the army and rebels burned and battered down will take massive human and financial resources.

All over East Pakistan decimated families pick among the blackened remains of their homes and business, wondering where to start again. Local commerce was controlled largely by Hindus and West Pakistanis, and many are now gone for good.

"We will manage," said Lt. Gen. Tikka Khan, the military governor in charge of quelling the rebellion and rebuilding the province.

Nature has a way of putting things right and we are making good progress."

Administration Endorses Increase In Minimum Wage

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nixon administration Wednesday supported an increase in the minimum wage from $1.60 an hour to $1.80 next January, but urged a two-year delay before it is moved to $2.

Secretary of Labor James D. Hoggson, opposing a bill in Congress to make the minimum wage $2 on Jan. 1, 1973, said such a speedy setup would create inflationary pressures and risk higher unemployment.

Hodgson proposed also that a lower minimum wage be set for teenagers and agricultural employes to make it easier for them to find work. And he opposed a provision in the bill extending minimum-wage coverage to state and local employes.

The administration's endorsement of $1.80 minimum wage was received with approval by a House Labor subcommittee. But Democratic members criticized the proposed delay in giving to $2.

Chairman John H. Dent, D—Pa., said that with anything less than $2 an hour the head of a family would be better off under the administration's proposed welfare plan.

"If a man has any concern for his family he will go under the Family Assistance Plan rather than work because he will be able to provide his family with about a 20 per cent higher standard of living," said Dent.

Hodgson disputed Dent's figures but acknowledged there is a delicate balance to be reached in relating minimum-wage standards to welfare legislation.

Hodson said a jump to $2 on Jan. 1, 1973, would mean a 25 per cent increase in the present minimum wage in little more than a year. And he called this a too-substantial cost increase to impose in a twelve-month period.

Hodgson said some employment could be expected to lay off workers to absorb the wage increase, while others might be forced out of business completely.

In addition, he said, too rapid a rise to $2, would force all wages upward, leading to higher prices and another round of inflation.

House Votes SST Resurrection

WASHINGTON AP—The battle over developing an American supersonic transport plane was revived Wednesday when the House executed an about-face and voted $85 million to restart the project.

The Senate will take up the renewed fight next and Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana predicted the outcome there will be close.

With the leaders of both parties in the House behind them, backers of a drive to breathe new life into the 1,800-mile-an-hour passenger plane won an initial test by 201 to 195 and nailed it down by 201 to 197 on a second vote. Eight weeks ago they lost 215 to 204.

McGovern Addresses Legislature, Not Too Many There To Listen

BOSTON (AP)—After several weeks of debate over a proposed speech by Sen. George McGovern, D—S.D., before the Massachusetts Legislature, McGovern delivered the speech Wednesday to a House chamber virtually abandoned by the state's legislators.

Only about one third of the 240-member House attended.

Half of the 40 senators stayed away.

The galleries, however, were packed with visitors.

As McGovern, the only announced 1972 presidential candidate, entered the chamber, he was handed a note by Rep. William F. Hogan, D—Everett, which said the estimated cost of antiwar demonstrations in Boston last month was $63,000.

Hogan and Reps. William G. Robinson, R—Melrose, and Ralph E. Sirianni, D—Winthrop, walked out of the chamber after speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke, introduced McGovern.

Bartley, in his introductory remarks, apologized for "certain people who have chosen not to listen."

A spokesman for the House Minority Leadership said the Republican leaders would not attend.

In his speech, McGovern said he thought it was time for the "war power" to be restored to the Congress.

"That is the function of the McGovern-Hatfield amendment which can break the negotiating stalemate in Paris" and lead to the release of American prisoners in North Vietnam and safe and orderly disengagement of our forces, McGovern said. He said the amendment would pledge an end to all American military operations in southeast Asia before the end of this year.

The senator took issue with the administration's contention that a "silent majority" supports the war.

He cited a recent Gallup poll which, he said, indicated that 73 per cent of the people endorse the amendment.

"It is necessary from time to time to evaluate our national policies against those enduring principles that gave us birth," McGovern said. "I think we are now sorely in need of such a period of testing."

Postal Service Revamps, 3500 Face Early Retirement

WASHINGTON (AP)—Postmaster General Winton M. Blount disclosed Wednesday a sweeping reorganization of the U.S. Postal Service that congressional sources say may spell early retirement for as many as 3,500 of the services 750,000 employees.

The reorganization plan, the product of postal reform legislation that takes full effect July 1, eliminates 10 of 15 regional postal headquarters and realigns the chain of authority between Washington and the postman on his route.

A spokesman for the Postal Service said the number of management personnel who will be affected by the reorganization is impossible to tell at this time. He said none of the 640,000 postal employees represented by unions would be involved in cutbacks.

The new regional headquarters will be in New York City, Philadelphia, Memphis, Chicago and San Francisco. Eliminated by the plan will be regional headquarters in Boston, Washington, D.C., Atlanta, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Wichita, Minneapolis, Dallas, Denver and Seattle.

The spokesman said between 200 and 300 persons are employed in each regional headquarters. He acknowledged the Postal Service is working with the U.S. Civil Service Commission to establish incentives for early retirement by persons with long service.

Small Matter

On the agenda of today's Faculty Senate meeting is a small matter which might interest and affect a lot of us in our plans for next year. The calendar issue, if it might be called that, faces the Senate this afternoon and will probably be the subject of a great deal of debate.

Simply put, the question before that legislative body will be whether or not to implement the calendar designed for the 1972-73 academic year a year earlier. This certainly, if passed, would cause a few problems, especially for faculty members who would, at this late date, be forced to rearrange their schedules.

However, if it is agreed that the 1972-73 plan is the best one available, why put if off a year? Bureaucratic hassles and faculty scheduling should not stand in the way of academic progress which will bring this University more in line with the other institutions in the area.

Even if the Faculty Senate votes favorably on the proposal, though, the Board of Trustees as usual has final say on the matter. In one respect, it would probably appear unlikely that the Board would approve such a change at so late a date since it would break the cob-webbed customs which that body is accustomed to following.

Faculty Senate does carry a measure of weight, though, and its approval of the new calendar for the 1971-72 year might just be enough to get it through. Even if it isn't, at least a positive Faculty Senate approach would provide the campus population with a promising symbol of campus cooperation to end the year with.

Wasps In The Mess Halls

WASHINGTON--There was so much publicity attached to the announcement last week when the U.S. Navy promoted its first black officer to rear admiral that little attention was paid to another breakthrough in rigid Navy tradition. With no little pride the Navy announced that it had appointed its first white Anglo-Saxon Protestant waiter to serve in a U.S. Navy officers' mess.

The lucky seaman was John Paul Jones VII of Akron, Ohio.

Up until Seaman Jones' appointment as mess boy, only Filipino and black sailors were permitted to serve naval officers. But after a secret Defense Department race relations report, it was decided that if the Navy was going to have black admirals it would have to have white mess boys to even things out.

Although the U.S. Army, Air Force and Marine Corps all use WASP mess attendants, the Navy, according to the report, had been dragging its feet. The Navy kept saying that it couldn't find any qualified WASP seamen to wait on officers' tales. But the report found that mess boys in the Navy were not being selected according to qualifications, but according to race.

"There are many white sailors who are as good at serving officers as blacks and Filipinos," the report stated. "They have just not been given the opportunity to prove it. It is our opinion that if the U.S. Navy hopes to recruit more members of the Anglo-Saxon race, it had better open up its kitchen and pantries to Caucasian servicemen."

Stung by the report, the Navy denied that John Paul Jones VII had been appointed to serve in an officers' mess because he was white.

"Jones," a Navy spokesman said, "was selected because he was the most qualified waiter we could find."

The public information officer was questioned about the fact that Jones' apppointment came only one week after the Defense Department report was leaked to the press.

"I'll admit," he said, "it sounds like a coincidence, but the U.S. Navy, and you are going to have to take my word for this, has been looking for qualified WASP mess boys for the last 192 years."

"I would like to add, gentlemen, that John Paul Jones VII will not be the last WASP mess boy to make it in the Navy. It is our policy to see that our officers' galleys are staffed by the best men available, regardless of race, creed or color."

The public information officer then introduced Seaman Jones to the press. Jones read a statement: "I am very proud to be the first one of my race to be selected by the U.S. Navy to serve in an officers' mess. For many years WASP seamen were only allowed to work in gunnery, engines, aviation, navigation and radar. We were not permitted to work in the pantry. I believe this policy, which has now been changed, will benefit not only my brother WASPs, but the U.S. Navy as well."

Seaman Jones was asked if he expected to find any hostility among the other mess boys.

"Perhaps at first, but I'm going to prove that WASPs can do anything Filipinos can. I feel I represent every white Anglo-Saxon Protestant whose dream it has been for 192 years to serve in Navy officers' messes on land as well as on sea. This is a golden opportunity, and I plan to make the most of it."

After the press conference Seaman John Paul Jones VII was taken to the White House, where President Nixon presented him with a white mess jacket and an aluminum tray. Witnessing the scene was Jones' father, a retired U.S. Navy admiral, who at the end of the ceremony broke into tears.

The Revolution Betrayed: Ceylon

By SID FINEHIRSH

"It has not given us any pleasure to shoot down young people of our country. This has been done with a heavy heart and a sense of tragedy and great loss." So spoke with crocodile tears in his eyes the head of the Communist Party of Ceylon during a debate in the Ceylonese House of Representatives on "excesses" of troops and police used against the radical youth of the Popular Liberation Front. These excesses include thousands dead, shooting of prisoners, mass arrests, torture, and terror tactics.

The head of the Ceylonese Communist Party has not always been so kind in his feelings towards the youthful radicals. He has also been quoted as branding the Popular Liberation Front of Ceylon as "fascist terrorists." It would seem he has confused the victim with the criminal.

The Daily World, the organ of the American Communist Party, suffered from the same confusion when it stated "they (the rebel youth) were unemployed young people with ties to reactionary elements." Even if we accept this falsehood on its face value, that doesn't explain why unemployed youth didn't have ties to the "vanguard of the working class," the Communist Party, like they are supposed to have.

The truth is the Popular Liberation Front (called the JVP from its Sinhalese initials) is an organization enjoying the support of tens of thousands of radical Left youth who have been sold out by the Communist Party of Ceylon. The Communist Party together with an ex-Trotskyist party is part of the ruling coalition of the Ceylonese government which is ruthlessly suppressing the rebel youth in exactly the same manner as the United States is attempting to suppress the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam.

This Ceylonese government is receiving aid in its bloody repression from both the Soviet Union and the United States. So the strange situation exists in the world today where in Vietnam the Soviet Union and the United States are on opposite side of a national liberation struggle, in Ceylon both super-powers find it to their interest to help suppress a national liberation movement.

Ceylon is a country with grave social contradictions such as 700,000 unemployed workers, a large debt to Western interests, and an oppressed national minority in the form of the Tamil people. The ruling coalition elected one year ago promised to solve these problems by putting the country on the road to socialism. None of their promises were ever fulfilled, not even the main election issue: the nationalization of the banks.

Only recently did the government even prepare legislation for a public works program to employ 100,000 workers, one seventh of the total! Given this record of not so benign neglect, it is easy to understand why Ceylonese youth took to the road of insurgency. For the Communist Parties of the world to support the bloody repression of these youth adds one more crime to their list of betrayals of people struggling for liberation.

Erric, the haunts I run:
I swim an unmerry monstering.

Sure, you say, sure, sure,
and a tear's ocean is enough to one such creature coupling sun.

Quellfire slashes out from me.
Mind's angered, a giant ray in Thor's cup. Who'll quaff creation next?

Sure, you say, sure, sure,
in any flesh containment
there's depth-white play of milky Substance.

Here I flow into what's between us: Shadow, a countertide.
You think to hide from the All-Devourer, and so you are mantled by my gaze.

Sure, you say, sure, sure,
I know. You are ever near -- a dread nearness terrible to endure.

In converging despiteful tides,
I concentrate the rays of body that's blazed mighty here.
A moment is made clear.
But what a further moment decides
--worlds part tears--God knows.

All Hallows Ever

This folk-fomented night, when gold is Hailgod (he's flung Himself away before, you know and taken most inhuman foreign tongue),
I must probe dust. I stalk the dark communal tombs. I walk through a long star shower, following one who in frenzy young entered the pit.
In such a night I've lain
sunless and unwanted, young, next to pain.
Even now, wildfire glints as I thrust a finger in a hollow hieroglyphic eye.
It centers a harvest dust.
Manna, tasted, has not made tame
the Anarch tongue.
(Was it ever alien?)
I am caught up in an earth cry.
Earth recesses din back my cry.
Wall shadows here
dance with dust's men who dance before Reaperflame. Dust's men roar behind twelvemonth full masks: deer, bear, bull, serpent, boar,
bison, wolf--beasts without name.
A mask falls, and wildfire spores.
Embers from the floor
rise upward to the cave ceiling.
Hungers rush on each flesh I explore,
and is this man a hieroglyph awaiting erasure?
Ash on my tongue, I declare names of the All-Devourer. When dread and the lastmonth mask I wear can elaborate me no more,
night will coil in smoke,
blind power will merge with ruddy smoke,
and if the visonless enter a vision,
the elder stars will make bed
in opening wombs of worlds ahead.

Letters To The Editor

Action Is The Answer

To the Editor:

In the 1930's the C.I.O. used to tell workers "If you want higher wages...you've got to build a union." They realize then what is true today--if you want social change it means a long, hard, seven-day-a-week push. It means recruiting people to work, coordination of labor, massive dissemination of ideas. It means that the more people you've got the more you can accomplish.

It means organization, and it applies as much to the antiwar movement as to anything else. The majority of Americans now oppose the war, but that didn't come out of thin air. The consistent work of antiwar organizations brought that about, by countering Nixon's lies and gathering hundreds of thousands of people into the streets to show that more and more people, from all sectors of society, were not being fooled by the government.

But majority opposition to the war will not end the war. In order to bring that majority action to pass the antiwar movement must have a bigger organization, able to reach and involve more and more people in the day-to-day effort of countering Nixon's lies and inspiring respect for opposition to the war.

Unfortunately, the actions taken earlier this month by the May Day Tribe do not contribute to this end. When one goes outside the milieu of committed radicals--and the majority of Americans both off and on the campus are not committed radicals--one sees little respect for the May Fay actions. In some cases--and this is unfortunate--people who oppose the war are blaming the Tribespeople for the violence rather than the police, who are really to blame. The Tribe's avowed intent to "stop the government" obscured the guilt for the violence of May 3-4 in the eyes of the non-radical public.

Though opposition to the war is considerable one does not see, among those who are not yet radical, a rush of people to sign up for membership in the May Day Tribe. The action which they took earlier this month was the kind of action which people who must work for a living, take care of children, or keep their grades up simply could not take, especially since the effectiveness of the action was never really made clear. Though opponents of the war are a majority, those who see the necessity of "stopping the government" are not, and nearly all of them come from the student sector, whose power is more than anything else to draw more powerful sectors of society into action and organization.

May Day was not interested in involving the majority of Americans, which is not made up of committed radicals, in antiwar actions. Rather, they were interested in making a big splash in the capital, to scare the politicians into ending the war. In reality, this makes the May Day Tribe into simply a pressure group. The attempt to bend politicians rather than to rely on one's own independent strength is liberalism, and even in its liberal objective the May Day Tribe failed. No politician was positively affected. No one was scared. Nothing was really disrupted. No "social costs" were increased.

There is, however, an antiwar organization which does rely on its own independent strength and is attempting to draw all opponents of the war--the majority of Americans--into action and organization. It is the National Peace Action Coalition, which will be holding its national convention in New York on July 2-4. UMass SMC is a member organization of N.P.A.C. Its demonstrations, like the March on Washington and San Francisco on April 24, have provided a focus for its organization and visibility for its demand, "Out Now!" There are serious antiwar activists who may not be inspired by more marches, but their outlook is not entirely realistic. Only through more organizing can the antiwar movement gain the strength to end the war, and only through more demonstrations can the antiwar movement successfully organize. There are no shortcuts.

Think Again

To the Editor:

I am sitting here looking out my window, watching some stupid toad drive his polluting piece of steel (I believe the correct term for it is an automobile) around the Orchard, not on the Orchard road, but around the Orchard! He drove up into the Orchard about four hundred yards, and then, apparently tired from his long ordeal, he got out, laid down on the grass for about two minutes, and then, revived, continued his cruise leaving a trail of tire tracks on what was once an unmarked green field.

Here we are in a small metropolis surrounded by skyscrapers, cranes, and endless parking lots filled with cars. The one place where you can get away from it all is the Orchard. You can go out there with friends and rap, you can go out and read a book in the sun, or you can just go out there and screw around. But with the fences down, (for this you can thank the Administration,) people are riding their oh-so-unnoisy motorcycles in circles around people who are relaxing, they are parking their cars there, and are just generally contributing to the demise of our last campus refuge. Oh yeah, another biggie is to take your bike out there, and do a little hill-climbing. This, of course, is to demonstrate that you are as hot-shit as Little Fauss and Big Haulsey.

My fears are aroused further when I hear of plans to build a road through the Orchard, or put a dining commons right smack in the middle of it (with our luck, we will get the ol' Deluxe-Combo Plan).

Seriously, I feel this a major issue. If petitions come around that ask for the saving of the Orchard, please sign them, even if you live in Southwest. After all it's you Orchard too. And if you feel the urge to take a spin on your bike through the Orchard, think again. Think of the people you would bother, and look at your sacrifice of pleasure as a sacrifice for Nature.

All of the talk of world destruction through man's own follies of overpopulation, pollution, and rape of the land, which means we may not be here to see the year 2000, is enough to scare me. But we can all do our part by starting right here on campus.

It Was A Lark

To the Editor:

i have never very much into telling other people what they should do or how they ought to behave. Our function of a lawyer is to try to analyze the alternatives people have and to describe the ramifications of each course of action. My most salient reasons for adhering to this view are probably a) that I don't know how others should act and a) I don't follow such advice very well myself...never have.

I have never very been much into telling other people what they should do or how they ought to behave. Our function of a lawyer is to try to analyze the alternatives people have and to describe the ramifications of each course of action. My most salient reasons for adhering to this view are probably a) that I don't know how others should act and b) I don't follow such advice very well myself...never have.

It seems appropriate to call attention to predictable ramifications of seasonal law enforcement. In the Spring when final exams are in progress and particularly seniors see an end within their grasp, along comes that very tempting opportunity to see whether one can break the law a little, or even sometimes, quite a lot.

Such an excursion into the nether world of crime often begins as Lark usually titilated by the alchemy of booze and such, but all too suddenly dissolves into the reality of jail. When this occurs to seniors all kinds of complicated hassles may develop. There is the sudden diminution of the graduation present which is diverted to lawyer's fees. Mother gets extremely ticked off; Father unmanageable. Your prospective employer becomes alarmingly ambigious about his immediate need for your particular services. As a general proposition getting busted within three weeks of graduation is a bummer.

The scenario is not all that much improved for the European traveler or summer worker. Many plans get screwed because of a Spring bust.

Please do not get confused about who has control over this untidy event. If you are inclined to invest in springing yourself from confinement, the odds favor that you will take the risk that makes it all possible. The decision to break any law, no matter how silly it may be, is entirely up to the individual. Such a decision necessarily includes a determination to suffer the consequences or to employ others to get you out of it.

My concern is only that you keep in mind what it is that you are doing.

Blind Leading Blind

To the Editor:

Last Tuesday night, May 4, two women were outside the Campus center when they saw a man hassling and chasing another woman. They went to see if she was all right. Later the man claimed that he was a security guard and that the woman had been spray painting. An unknown man also went to find out what was the matter. The two women (Pat Dougherty and Debra Jacobson) are now being charged with 2 cases of assault and battery and one case of defacing a public building.

If anyone saw this incident would they please get in touch with the lawyer, Saul Gliserman, 5847271. These women need our help.

According to the new President of ASA, the Collegian is no longer being boycotted. I guess that means you can put away your chalk now.

If we believe one observer, the Collegian is being read all the way down in Dallas, Texas. Of course, no one believes it.

I Said Nothing

To the Editor:

There is a question asked and story told as to how the May Day People ever let the Washington Metropolitan Police Department strip them of their rights and dignity. The answer goes something like this : They Persecuted The Demonstrators. I was not a demonstrator, so I said nothing. They Persecuted the Citizens. I was not there, so I said nothing.

Someday we may be asked why we let our rights be stripped from us. The answer may start something like this: They stripped the Organized Citizens of their rights. I was not a organized citizen, so I said nothing. Eventually, all the silent majority will stand bared and exposed for the sin of silence.

How long can this travesty be allowed to continue?

Justice Brennam wrote, "It is certainly unusual in this country for a person to be legally disadvantaged on the basis of factors over which he never had any control. Distinctions between citizens solely because of their ancestry are by their very nature odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon the doctrine of Equality."

A few days later this same establishment stripped naturalized citizens of their constitutional rights.

The American public still said nothing.

Thank You, Thank You

To the Editor:

Since this is the last week of tutoring the N.E.S. Co-ordinating committee would like to thank those students who participated in the tutoring program this year. Due to the unselfish involvement of these students we feel the program has had a great deal of success. Next year through the traditional tutoring program and the new three credit course we hope to further attain our goals. At a time when there is much concern over apathy at the university we feel this program represents a true picture of student involvement.

How It Really Is

To the Editor:

I would like to address this editorial in answer to the article that appeared in the Collegian on Monday, May 10. It was an article on Cance House and pets in dorms. It is unfortunate that the info printed was very erroneous. I feel that I must chastise the Collegian for printing such errors and not consulting someone from Cance about the proposal. The repercussions from this mistake may well kill off any chance of the "no pets" rule being changed in at least some fashion. In addition, I would like to know who wrote the article and from where the information came. I strongly urge that in the future this info be kept out of print until it can be published in complete and accurate form.

As for the article. When the order came from Whitmore to begin enforcing the no pet rule; the students in Cance decided that it was time for action. They had a house meeting with Drs. Bromery and Gage, plus Mr. Gleason and Mr. Reed from Environmental Health and Safety. The main results of the meeting was that these professionals agreed the present policy might not be realistic and were willing to lend their professional guidance to a concerted effort to present alternatives to the University.

The proposal was written under these auspices, and the copy has gone through the Area Coordinator's office and is pending consideration by Dean Field, who has not seen it yet. However, the Environmental and Safety office, and Dr. Gage have not given final approval, and that must come before presentation to the Dean. The proposal has been on the docket of General Court, but nothing on it was decided there. Final approval of the plan will rest perhaps in Dean Field's hands, or possibly Dr Bromery's, or it may travel to a Trustees' meeting before final adjudication. And that is how it really is.

Who's Superior

To the Editor:

In yesterday's Daily Collegian, there was a quote by Doctor Ashley Montague. "The X chromosome of the female is seven times larger than that of the male. The male is nothing more than a crippled X chromosome." As of now, there has been no evidence to prove that the female X is seven times that of the male. As a matter of fact, the male X chromosome always comes from the female parent. Therefore by saying that the female X is larger is a contradiction.

On the other hand there is considerable evidence to say that one of the X chromosomes of the female is inactive (crippled?). This is the Lyon Hypothesis. Therefore males have an equal number of active X chromosomes. Females are not superior to males with chromosomes, at least.

I suggest that Dr. Montague check his facts before making conclusions.

Cyclebreaker

This evening on WMUA's "Cyclebreaker" beginning at 6:30 P.M., there is a variety of segments. Jack Deaver will talk about his film Either Way, which is currently being shown on this campus in the form of a preview release. Gay Liberation will also be on the program, plus an interview with Phil Ochs that was recorded on Sunday. Mark Silverman will give an essay about graduation, plus the music that means the most to those who might be graduating. Ed Roche will also reveal the place and time of a "party" scheduled for sometime this weekend.

Are You Forking Yourself?

Remember the silver you borrowed from the D.C. last semester?

Remember the great times you had sliding down Thatcher hill on trays?

All we remember is forking out money for tens of thousands of replacements a year. It's your money, but we'd just as soon have the dishes, because buying new ones just adds to the meal ticket price.

To make bringing them back easier than thowing them away, we've arranged with the Student Senate Food Service Committee to pick up dishes at the heads of residence. Just bring them to your head of residence, and we'll do the rest. We'll even wash them. If you are too lazy to do this, you are just forking yourself.

Bring dishes back to your head of residence before you leave

MDC Review

"Either Way" Goes Nowhere

(Editor's note: The following review of the film Either Way is another view of the film made by two UMass professors, Jack Deaver and Tom Clark. The review did not appear in yesterday's Collegian because of space limitations.

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Toward the center of Either Way John, the film's main character, and Jerry, his lover, stand before a ticket booth at a Provincetown movie house. Jerry turns as he buys tickets and asks John if he'd think him a pervert for expressing his love to him. John, smiles embarrassingly as Jerry does so, then, between low chuckles, blurts the word "pervert".

This short sequence is natural and stands out because it's the best which works in this perplexing, pretentious, and self-indulgent film.

Either Way, as the title suggests, attempts to tell the story of a young man's sexual identity struggle in a semi-documentary and educational style. After a film montage sequence which repeatedly establishes its hero, John Hudson's bisexual sequence which repeatedly establishes the soundtrack anguish felt about this duality.

The film is filled with characters adjusting to their sexual behavior. It's far more subtle in this area than say The Boys In The Band, but still falls short of capturing a reality beyond stereotypes.

Maybe because the film is permeated with "meaning" that just doesn't work. It's much like a local symphony orchestra attempting a performance of a massive Mahler symphony, the talent maybe there, but probably not the resources. In thi sense some have felt it reasonable to pass Either Way off as a noble attempt which failed because of monetary limitations (the budget was $100,000 and at that price even that the film was made is an accomplishment).

That's a cop-out. It could have been the first film showing the basic similarities and difference between heterosexual and homosexual relationships. It's not; the texture of the film is clogged by heavy-handed and obvious attempts at "meaning" which ruin any naturalistic telling of a story.

For instance there is a scene where John finds a note hidden in a novel of Marcel Proust which convinces him of his lovers promiscuity. If this scene was found in a novel, the author could have used devices making the symbolism seem valid. In the film though, the zoomed close-up of the Proust's novel on a bed table fails on two levels; it lacks subtlety to those who can understand and it becomes a meaningless film technique to those who haven't the vaguest idea of what the reference means.

There are moments in the film where the nuances of situation and character can effect the viewer. These are when the camera sits band and doesn't self-consciously obtrude on the situation. It is done especially well in building the characters of Jerry and Casey. John's fiancee. Jerry and John have one conversation in a nightclub which, through simple cutting and sharp dialogue, completely exposes the pathetic character of Jerry. Much of Casey's character is revealed quite unexpectedly through the banter at an academic cocktail party.

The direction and editing, understandably technically rough, showed touches of uniqueness and genuine cinematic talent. At times, though, it becomes condescending to points where it seems it completely doubted the audience's intelligence.

The same can be said of the most pedestrian and confusing script. It seemed reminiscent of the old confession-gangster pictures Warner Brothers used to grind out during the Thirties. These semi-documentaries would open with John Garfield (or someone) wandering down the railroad tracks while he spoke mawkishly on the soundtrack about how he was a victim of society.

This same logic of doubting audience sophistication occurs in this film. It's obvious by the subject matter that the film wasn't made to be shown at the Arcade Theater in Helena, Montana. Why, then, must the understanding of the leading character's social and psychological problems be reduced to the lowest level of audience understanding? If the film felt it necessary to be explicit, as the film hinted at but shyed away from showing, why didn't it? The director used discretion when he should have used foldness as his film assumes a false sort of honesty.

The performances are perhaps the film's weakest point. Clint Warner as John moves though the film with the same muddled expression, although the most accomplished performance. Jack Deaver as Jerry wears himself thin towards the end of the film. Casey, played by Catherine Shelbourne, only remains in the background for her character is only vaguely hinted at.

Low budget films when well-done are perhaps a most refreshing and reassuring phenomenas in American films. They prove to us, in a sense, that the myth of individual creativity not only still exists but can be commercially and artistically viable. David and Lisa comes to mind as does the recent delightful The Projectionist as truly outstanding low budget films. They both had most endearing characteristics which allowed for certain production aspects to be ignored.

Either Way, beyond the provincial appeal of being filmed in the area, completely lacks any of these endearing qualities. It is a flawed and ambitious film that should act as a catalyst of its most talented director; but if taken as a significant and important look at a most misunderstood contemporary problem, Either Way goes nowhere.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Pale green is generally associated with Aquarius; the number is 4. Aquarians have a strong, individual style of writing; the planet associated with this sign is Uranus. These persons often are considered eccentric but, in reality, they are inventive, progressive and willing to tear down in order to rebuild. Some famous persons born under Aquarius include Norman Mailer, Kim Novak and Charles Lindbergh.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis now on career, business activity. Be willing to state beliefs in original, forthright manner. You gain added authority. Promotion is due. Sight goal: aim for it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with travel, obtaining needed information. Trust hunch. Outline long range plans. Pay heed to one born under Sagittarius. You will be going places.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good news concerns financial arrangements. Backing, encouragement comes from unexpected source. One who saved for Amherst center. Live music nightly except Tues. and Wednesday. tf5-14

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on legal agreement. Be sure you understand terms. It behooves you to be thorough. One you trust may be overly optimistic. See persons, situations in realistic light.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What appears to be unfair assignment actually is for your own benefit. This soon will become apparent. Gemini individual will be in mood to become valuable ally.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent on home, property, basic requirements for security. Need for greater harmony at home is evident. Set sights on costs, budget. Stress practicality. Don't play games with assets.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Obtain hint from Virgo message. You may find that real estate propositions dominate. Be perceptive. Be aware of your own basic needs. You can clude important phase of activity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are drawn in two directions. One involves relatives and your own ego. The other is connected with responsibility and concerns future potential. Key is to heed voice of experience.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on money, personal possessions. You find out what is needed, what can be discarded. Key is to know what is finished, out moded. Includes personal relationships.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lunar cycle high, more persons are willing to heed your suggestions. You now are more likely to get your way. One who opposed you can become ally. Realize this and respond accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You instinctively know what to do. Do it. Rationalizing won't change fact. Clandestine activities are accented. Remember, however, that you do have to face yourself. Act accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some of your ideas concerning friendship may undergo revision. Those you thought did not care show otherwise. Others reveal they are of fair weather variety. Be analytical.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you usually stick to course of action until mission is completed. You are not easily sidetracked. This trait, however, can also turn into stubbornness. By August, you have chance to accept responsibility, to gain, to take turn which leads to greater security. Do not permit obstinate trait to ruin chance for success.

Pleasure Horse Offered

The first summer Pleasure Horse Institute to be offered by UMass will be held June 20 to August 6.

Applications are now open for the unique program of instruction encompassing all aspects of the pleasure horse, offered through the Division of Continuing Education at UMass. The Pleasure Horse Institute is sponsored by Stockbridge School and the department of veterinary and animal science.

The program includes instruction in nutrition, genetics, anatomy and physiology, reproduction and health as well as equitation instruction, horse training clinics and stable management practices. Staff will include faculty from the department of veterinary and animal science and nationally known trainers and horsemen. The program also includes outside field trips and horse shows for participants.

The institute is open to high school graduates interested in the pleasure horse, regardless of past experience. The fee for the six week institute is $550 and includes tuition, room and boad, insurance, equitation fees, course materials, and field trips. Four college credits may be received for a slight extra charge upon completion of the entire program.

Further information is available from; Dr. Anthony Borton, Department of Veterinary and Animal Science, Stockbridge Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Telephone 413-545-2371.

Brown Ruins Gorillas Playoff Hopes, 8-4

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I.-Brown was too much. It's as simple as that. The Bruins rolled past UMass 8-4 yesterday with a strong first half and a fourth quarter scoring flurry.

The Redmen were clearly lacking in spots but their loss had more to do with Brown's superiority than Gorilla mistakes. Brown's tenacious defense was the key, as they held the high flying Redmen to a season low of four goals.

It was a tight game throughout period one, but it was clear which team was number one in New England. The host club dominated most of the quarter, controlling the ball and working it around with a great deal of poise.

Less than five minutes in the action their efforts earned them the opening score as Bob Selise flung the ball over to Steve Russo, who winged it by goalie Crawford.

Paul Ritch gave UMass its only tie of the game as he spun off his man and beat the Brown netminder with four and a half left in the first 15.

With Crawford playing superlative goal, the Bruins ended the period with a score that might have meant the game. Crawford had made another of his many saves and held his stick above his head craddling the ball. Suddenly the ball fell backwards into the net on what was obviously an illegal play by the home team's attackman.

Crawford' stick was hit, an act that constitutes an infraction when the goalie is within the crease area. But the deferee ruled that Craw's stick was not touched and Brown's goal went up on the board.

Thus with 27 seconds left in the quarter, and a five minute pause in which Coach Garber argued to no end, UMass trailed in the crucial tie-breaker.

Minutes flew by as Brown never allowed the Redmen to get untracked. Their defensemen's stick-checking was outstanding and their continued excellence produced two more scores before the 10 minute break.

It was Glenn Peppy all alone on the left side who upped the lead to 3-1. Then Russo scored his second of the day, this time on an individual effort coming from in back of the net to score on a jumpshot going away.

The only thing the third stanza didn't see was a score, as penalties, an almost non-existent entity in the first 30 minutes, began to come in groves.

By round four Redmen rooters were looking for something to happen. Brown was containing the Gorillas magnificiently and without the stiff UMass defense it never would have been a contest.

Brown tallied first in the goal-filled fourth period and thoughts of being held to one goal danced in Redmen's minds. But a fast break 1 goal ended such nightmares.

Dwight Bloomquist hustled downfield finding Charley Hardy to his right. Hardy flipped the backhanded pass up in front of the goal where Ritch was waiting anxously. Ritch fired it by Doug Spiro on the prettiest goal of the day.

But as soon as UMass whispered comeback Brown nailed it down. Three scores within a matter of 68 seconds left the Gorilla's at a loss.

Kevin Cleary, one of Brown's three great front-liners, notched the first one, and twenty-two seconds later, with more than 7 1/2 minutes to go, Selise outmaneuvered three UMass middies and powered his way into the middle, making it 7-2.

A power play goal ended the home team's barrage, as the ball bounced trickily into the net.

Some of the sharpest Redman play was seen in the final five minutes as a tremendous passing exhibition was put on by UMass in a power play situation. It resulted in a Ritch assist and a Hardy goal.

Bloomquist was a main man again, drilling a spectacular shot from outside past the left side of goalie Spiro. Five minutes later Brown was secure of its number one ranking in New England, and UMass had lost its chance for a post-season bid. But the Northeastern crown is still to be won, and if MIT is put away on Saturday, Garber's Gorilla's can bring home the championship for the third year in a row.

Diamond Nine Hosts Chiefs

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

It could be called the "championship of Western Massachusetts." It could be called the "pride of the west game." But what ever its called it takes place this afternoon at Earle E. Lorden Field at 3:30 when the UMass and Springfield baseball teams square off at each other.

Since the age of dawn UMass and Springfield have had the kind of rivarly that can only exist between a major college giant and a small college giant that live within the confines of a small geographical area.

For this reason each athletic competition between teams of these two schools in any sport ends up to be a barn burner and if you need an example just think back to the basketball season.

Springfield comes into this game with an impressive record of 17-3 and is right now the top small college team in New England and probably one of the top five teams irregardless of small or major college status in the region.

The Chiefs are perennial representatives of this District in the Small College National Playoffs and are well on their way to repeating this honor again.

Springfield has been riding on the strength of a group of pitchers who are in the superb class. During the season the names of Willie Boynton, Jerry DePalma and Joe Kubeck have draped the Springfield sports pages with their feats on the mound.

These three have already pitched this week and with a big doubleheader with Coast Guard coming up on Saturday for Springfield they won't see action today. The starting hurler will probably be sophomore Ed Folli.

For the Redmen coach Bergquist is also resting his big starters for the Rhode Island series on Saturday and plans to start lefty Lou Colabello and come in with Tom Austin later in the game if needed. If you remember Colabello was the star of the District One Playoffs in 1969 pitching the Redmen into the World Series in a gutsy performance against Boston University. He needs some work and the Chiefs are a good squad to test his arm.

When it comes to statistics, fans always seem to like the dual between speed men on both squads. In todays game Charlie Manley who has 22 stolen bases and Joe Cervino of Springfield with 25 will most likely play a major part in the final outcome.

The Redman starting lineup will be the same as against B.C. with Tom McDermott behind the plate, Dan Esposito, Hosea Kelly, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau in the infield and Steve Newell, Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield.

The Redmen come into this game 18-5 and off a loss of B.C. a couple of days back and a win is needed to get them back in the right frame of mind for the Rhody series.

Wood Keynotes M Club Finale

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

The UMass Varsity M Club concluded its weekly luncheons for the spring season yesterday with a tribute to the UMass coaches highlighted by keynote speaker, UMass President Robert C. Wood.

Before the largest spring gathering of the luncheon series (125 plus) Wood said he felt the University "had come of age in athletics," and went on to speak about what UMass should expect in athletics in the next few years.

"An equitable relationship with friends in professional sports," he felt was one thing that UMass could expect in the near future. Wood said the University "can provide the resources for the most rapidly expanding industry today," professional sports.

President Wood then went on to say that with many people having a lot of leisure time and with four day work weeks, etc., more and more people are turning to sports.

Another thing Wood said the University could expect in the next few years is "help and guidance in teams from other campuses." He mentioned that athletic programs could be started at UMass in Worcester and in Boston.

Speaking about coaching, Wood praised the coaches saying that they are the teachers whose instruction must take place in the atmosphere of a crowd." He added that this condition does not exist in any other field of academics.

Collegian Sports Editor, Earle Barroll, also spoke and thanked the coaches for their cooperation and interest in working with the sports department.

He called the Collegian," an educational experience in itself outside of the vigors of the classroom.

In lookingback over the records of the sports teams since he took over as the sports editorhe said he thought himself as being a good luck charm in that the winter sports completed their season with the best percentage ever and the spring sports teams were well on their way to duplicating this fact.

In closing he gave a special thanks to assistant sports information director, Dick Bresciani who he said went unnoticed "like the center on the football team or the catcher on the baseball team."

Also present at the head table with President Wood were Chancellor Oswald Tippo and Dean Warren McGuirk, Head of the School of Physical Education and Athletic Director who also gave his praise to the coaches.

Those coaches who were honored were Bill MacConnell, Skiing; Jack Leaman, basketball; Peter Broaca, soccer; Dick MacPherson, football Dick Pahe, golf; Jack Canniff, hockey; Homer Barr, wrestling; Dick Bergquist, baseball; Ken O'Brien, track and cross country; Joe Rogers, swimming; Steve Kosakowski, tennis; Erik Kjeldsen, gymnastics and Dick Garber, Lacrosse who was not able to be present due to his team's game with Brown.

This was the last luncheon of the year with the Varsity M Club rounding out its activities for this year with the Hall of Fame Banquet later this month.

A special thanks should go to Jim Mulcahy the president of the Varsity M. who MC'd all the luncheons this year and did a fine job yesterday in his last outing of this semester at the Newman Center. He has been the guiding light of the Varsity M for many years and has also been a friend on the UMass sports and academic community. For this reason we salute Jim Mulcahy.

Trackmen Romp At Rhody

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Snapping out of a mild slump, the UMass track team overpowered Yankee Conference rival, Rhode Island by a 93-61 score on Tuesday. The Redmen competing in their last dual meet of the season, finished the year with a 7-3 record.

At one point it appeared that the meet would never get underway. The bus broke down on the Highway, and the track men were forced to thumb 15 miles to the meet. Once the meet got underway, the Redmen moved quickly and built up an early lead. This seemed to determine the final results as Rhode Island could not mount a serious threat to the UMass lead.

The meet proved to be an important tuneup for the Redmen who will be hosting the Yankee Conference Championships this Saturday. It appears that the Redmen will have the necessary momentum going into the Championships. UMass should be the favorite in the meet off their regular season record. The Redmen have now won decisive victories over UConn and Rhode Island who were considered along with UMass, the only teams capable of winning this Saturday.

The UMass runners dominated the meet as they won every running event, except the mile relay. The runners were sparked by the performances of Ron Harris and Ron Wayne who each won two events. Wayne celebrated his return from Israel with victories to the mile and two mile.

Harris continued to shine with victories in the 100 and the 220. He was followed to the tape by Tony Pendleton who placed second in the 100 and 220. Harris and Pendleton were also members of the winning 440 relay team.

Junior Arnie Morse won his first varsity race of his career in the 880. Dave Evans dropped down from the 880 to the 440, and responded with a first place finish.

Ed Shaughnessy turned in his best performance of the Spring with his first place finish in the high jump and his second place finish in the triple jump. Jim Graves again proved his superiority over opposing competition with his victory in the 120 high hurdles.

One of the main highlights in the meet was the record breaking performance of Gil Sylvia. Sylvia's performance broke the former javelin record of teammate Rocco Petitto who was the first Redmen to ever throw the javelin over 200 feet.

Eddie Arcaro once again proved to be the difference in the throwing events in the Redmen cause. Arcaro's work for the day included a victory in the shotput and a second place in the hammer.

Explains Building

Breuer Explains Creation

By ZEKE CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

The building of the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center was discussed last evening by world famous architect Marcel Breuer before a capacity crowd held in the building designed by him.

The first part of his hour long talk concerned what he called "the back stage of an architect's work." He explained to the audience that when he was selected as the architect for the project he was given a well prepared program and was told all the requirements of the proposed building. He told the group that he was not involved in the setting up of the program. His job involved building what he was told to by the building authority.

Whole City

He said that the design and size of the building was determined after an analysis was made of the needs of the proposed building. Breuer said that a building of this type is most complicated to design and build because it has almost everything in it. In his talk he called the Campus Center "a whole city by itself."

The buildings surrounding the Campus Center presented a problem that was overcome by the design Breuer selected. The different buildings in the area such as Hasbrouck laboratory and the Student Union presented an architectural and space problem which had to be overcome. The design of the Campus Center solved these problems by creating "distance" between it and the surrounding buildings.

Bottom Two Large

Breuer noted that the bottom two floors of the building contain about as much surface area as the rest of the upper portions of the building. This was designed with the students needs in mind. The height of the building was decided upon because it provided for good circular ventilation.

Continuing, Breuer went over a list of the various facilities that are contained in each floor of the building. He also noted that the entire building occupies 550,000 square feet. Breuer told the audience that the building was set up to facilitate an easy flow of large crowds through the building without any problem of congestion.

Speaking about the type of building material used, the Architect said that construction site poured concrete and prefabricated factory made concrete sections are the main type of building materials used. "The idea of using reinforced concrete in building construction originated about 80 years ago. But it wasn't until recently that it became widely used for building construction." Breuer said that the reason for using prefabricated concrete for a large part was that it was not susceptible to damage from the elements as is poured concrete. Using prefabricated concrete has another advantage which Breuer informed the group of. "With this type of material, a new perspective for architecture is opened up. This provides for depth, shape, and with this architecture can become 3 dimensional."

Not Any More Expensive

He stated that this technique doesn't make a building any more expensive. Breuer noted that even the walls have a purpose to serve. "The thick cement walls serve to receive the mechanical "guts" of the building."

The second half of Breuer's address consisted of a display of slides showing the architectural plans of the building. Also shown were color slides of various buildings, a museum and a home designed by Breuer. From looking at the various buildings designed by Breuer, it became evident that they all have many things in common with the design of the Campus Center.

Defends Work

A very interesting question and answer period followed Breuer's address with Breuer doing a very nice job of defending his architectural work. When questioned about the cost of using expensive granite tables in the building, he replied that the reason for this was that granite is the best and most durable material which would be the best in the long run. He told those in attendance that he doesn't think that a cheap building is the best. In continuing he said that he liked the idea of painting murals on the walls of the building.

In closing, Breuer said that when designing a building such as this, you can't consider the people who use the building as persons. "If this were the case, a building would never get built."

Hanoi Agrees To Accept North Vietnamese Prisoners

TOKYO (AP) — Hanoi agreed Friday to formally accept a group of North Vietnamese prisoners of war held in South Vietnam. It was the first such move by the Communist regime and it tied the release to a 24-hour cease-fire.

Hanoi's official Vietnam News Agency, in a broadcast monitored here, referred to a South Vietnamese announcement last month in which the Saigon government said it was willing to free 570 invalid North Vietnamese captives.

But the broadcast made no mention of a second offer by South Vietnam to send 1,200 other North Vietnamese prisoners held four years or more to a neutral country.

This offer was geared to the American proposal that prisoners of war on both sides be interned in a neutral country.

The Hanoi broadcast gave what it termed "concrete stipulations" for its acceptance of the North Vietnamese prisoners of June 4 in the Gulf of Tonkin by North Vietnamese civil ships from unarmed allied civil ships flying Red Cross flags.

The Saigon government has freed before scores of North Vietnamese prisoners, generally in ceremonies marking some national holiday, but Hanoi has never acknowledged such acts. North Vietnam has never formally admitted that it has troops operation in South Vietnam.

The Hanoi broadcast gave these terms:

"1. Those persons must be transported by unarmed U.S. puppet civil ships flying Red Cross flags to a spot three to five kilometers southeast of Cua Tung at the 17th parallel at...10:30 o'clock on June 4, 1971. Those persons will be transferred to unarmed civil ships of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam flying Red Cross flags.

"2. In an area with a 30 kilometer radius around the spot for release and reception, every military activity in the air, at sea, and on the mainland, must be ceased...on June 4, 1971.

"3. The U.S. and the Saigon administrations must announce in advance the number and characteristics of the ships transporting the patriots to be released this time.

"4. If the weather is bad, the release and reception will be postponed until a further time and will still follow the procedures of release and reception as mentioned in provisions 1, 2, and 3."

The agency said the U.S. and South Vietnamese governments "must bear full responsibility for all consequences if they act counter to the above-mentioned stipulations."

It's For Your Own Protection, Students

For some years the Student Handbook has carried a regulation prohibiting the keeping of live animals in University-owned residence halls. The basis of this rule comes from the concerns of such diverse groups as the University Health Council, Environmental Health, Maintenance Department, and more importantly, from the expressed concerns of student residents themselves.

During the past year the number of pets on campus, and more particularly in residence halls, has grown astronomically, requiring ever stricter implementation of this regulation. The Faculty Senate Health Council has recently reaffirmed the need for all members of the residential community to remove live animals due to the health hazard threatening other residents. Likewise, the Custodial Staff's Union has reemphasized the growing problem faced by its constituents working in residence halls and other on-campus buildings.

In order to comply with these concerns as well as the concerns of many other student residents, we are, at this time, asking all staff and students who will be returning to the residence halls next September to make adequate arrangements over the summer, to dispose of any live animals, particularly cats and dogs, that they may now have in their possession.

Further, all students are requested to refrain from bringing pets back to campus when they return in the fall. In consideration for the animals, themselves, a residence hall with a high density of human beings, is no adequate place for animals with their natural environmental needs. The regulation pertaining to pets must, by necessity, be strictly enforced in residence halls in the future. Your cooperation is essential.

Explosion Shakes Campus

An explosion of unknown origin caused tremors in the general area of the Campus Center at approximately 9:30 last night. Campus Police could not discover any damage, however, upon investigation.

According to several students who witnessed a flash of light and felt the shock of an explosion, "there was a loud noise, as from an explosion, followed by the sound of a secondary explosion."

Passers-by informed the MDC that the flash of light came from Morrill Science Center, but the police said it was probably from the construction area across the street.

The tremors were felt as far away as the Campus Center, according to witnesses in that area.

At press time no other information was available. Police said they would continue to investigate for evidence of an explosion. For further details see the September issue of the MDC.

Video Free America Presenting Program

This campus's introduction to alternative forms of video was the recently screened tapes of the Washington DC demonstrations. This is only a start. Tonight, Saturday and Sunday, Video Free Free America, and underground video collective from San Francisco will present a program demonstrating several other directions possible for alternate video.

NEW VRINDABAN 1970, by Jackie Cassen: A lyrical rendering of a week long celebration of Krishna's birthday at the Society for Krishna Consciousness' communal farm near Moundsville, West Virginia.

With its simultaneous video imagery, the piece captures the discipline and devotion of a totally self sufficient rural existence; the curiosity and conflicts generated by a visit from local citizens; the joy elicited by the small rituals and elaborate celebrations.

THE CONTINUING STORY OF CAROL AND FRED or (the medium was the marriage) by Arthur Ginsberg: A video verite piece about a couple escaping from their work in San Francisco's erotic film industry.

A reality trip into the issues of sex roles and the institution of marriage, and a study of the feasability of a public life style (existing in the presence of electronic media). Carol and Fred's story as told by themselves with a little help from their friends.

VIDEO FEEDBACK TAPES, by Skip Sweeney; video graphics, electronic mandalas, infinities in light and time. Many of the techniques utilized in these pieces are the same as those created by Video Free America for the recent controversial American premiere of AC/DC a play by Heathcote Williams, editor of the England's SUCK magazine.

Arthur Ginsberg of Video Free America will be on hand to talk informally about the works, producing on the half inch video tape equipment, the future of the technology or whatever, and will be videotaping reactions to the program. This spring VFA will present a five campuses across the country (UMASS, U.C.L.A., Stanford, Reed College, and University of Oregon) a multi screen double track video theater system--a format which provides a visual environment experience considerably more exciting than anything now available over broadcast television. The program is sponsored by WTOY the new campus video station. It will happen in the Campus Center lower level room 163. Tickets are $1 at the door. Hours are: Friday; 7:30 and 10:00; Saturday: 2:30, 7:30 and 10:00; Sunday: 4:00, 7:30 and 10:30.

Keep The Faith

VALATIE, N.Y. AP—Virginia O'Hanlon Douglas, the woman who as a child was told "Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus-died Thursday at the age of 81.

In ill health for several years, the lady who kept her faith in Santa passed away quietly.

Upon hearing the news, Ann Gurnett of the MDC queried: "My Goodness, What will Virginia think when she finds out there isn't a God?"

Restrictions Put On Lockheed Loan

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Nixon administration put seven restrictions Thursday on a proposed $250 million government-backed loan for Lockheed Aircraft Corp. but two of the conditions could be waived.

The restrictions were disclosed when Treasure Secretary John B. Connally sent the administration loan-guarantee bill to Congress along with a letter urging "prompt and favorable consideration."

The administration says Lockheed needs the loan guarantee to borrow money to stave off bankruptcy and to save its troubled jumbo jet program, the TriStar airbus of L1011.

The proposal is coming under increasing criticism in Congress, where loan guarantees traditionally have rough going.

The bill would authorize the government to extend loan guarantees to "major business enterprises" in danger of collapsing. While Lockheed isn't specifically mentioned in the bill, Connally said almost all the guarantee authority would be for that company.

A key restriction would require Lockheed to put first priority on all repayments to banks for the government-backed loan, even if the lenders held other Lockheed debts. That provision could be waived by the Treasury secretary.

The bill also would authorize the secretary to waive a restriction that would bar Lockheed from declaring stock dividends while the loan is outstanding.

The loan would be limited to five years, with an option to renew for another five years. The government could inspect Lockheed's books and could reject disposition of assets that might endanger repayment.

Repayments would have first priority on receipts in case Lockheed went into bankruptcy. In addition, repayments would be secured by a first lien on the firm's property.

Honorary Degrees Discussed

Fac-Sen Defeats Calendar

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

Amidst an atmosphere of lively debate and recount votes the Faculty Senate last night by a narrow 28-32 vote defeated a proposal calling for the adoption of the compromise calendar for the academic year 1971-72.

The meeting was also marked by an inquiry into the purpose of honorary degrees and into the possibility of revoking the degrees which have been designated for this year's Commencement. Other action included the approval of a motion which provided for equal representation of all three Senates on the newly formed campus governance committee.

Much of the discussion concerning the calendar proposal centered around what was supposed to have been an amendment sponsored by Lee Sandwen and Larry Ladd of the Student Senate calling for special exam scheduling for members of athletic teams. This "amendment" which was later voted upon as a part of the calendar proposal without prior ratification was introduced to eliminate the conflict which the exam period would pose for several athletic contests with such schools as Yale, Harvard, Hofstra and Columbia.

It was noted by Dean Richardson of the Athletic Council that cancellation of many of these events would seriously impair UMass' relations with these institutions. It was Richardson, Ladd and Sandwen's contention that athletes be exempted from the final exam period and that special provisions be made for the special scheduling of their exams of the approximately 100 student-athletes involved.

In the actual vote which was subject to recount because of uncertainty on the part of the clerks an original 27-28 vote was changed to 28-32 on the entire calendar proposal and amendment.

Sandwen later commented that his primary interest had been to protect as much as possible the interests of the 100 athletes. Despite the unfavorable vote towards the calendar itself, he did state that he "was pleased with the faculty's attitude towards students. The fact that they were willing to listen to student opinion during the discussion indicates that student opinion can be effectively voiced in the Senate."

An inquiry by Senator Grant Osborne concerning honorary degrees was made based on his contention that the persons named "with the exception of two unexperienced candidates" are relative unknowns. He continued by asking whether it might not be too late to revoke this year's degrees or to discontinue the entire concept of honorary degrees. He closed by stating that the matter would be brought up during the first semester next year." He was greeted by the statement by Chancellor Tippo that Sterling Brown, one of the recipients had been nominated by a Faculty Senate committee.

The motion to equalize representation of all three Senates on the campus governance committee was proposed by Howard Brogan and called for 5 members of each of the Senates on the Committee. A subsequent amendment lowered the number to three. The motion was designed to have full coordination between the Senates on a matter which is designed to provide for futher cooperation between the Senates. Lee Sandwen greeted the vote by commenting that "the fact that they were willing to consider all three senates as equal separate entities is a step towards increased communication."

The motion to recognize the Department of Exercise Science had been tabled last week to determine administrative technicalities and today was approved without discussion.

Jewish Defense League, Mafia Join Common Cause

NEW YORK (AP)—Indictments returned against Rabbi Meir Kahane and a dozen other members of the Jewish Defense League accused the Jewish militants with conspiring to move guns and bombs, the Justice Department said Thursday.

The charges, contained in two indictments returned Wednesday, did not specify where, when or how the weapons were to be used.

Following his arraignment, JDL head Kahane joined with Joseph Colombo Sr., listed by the justice Department as a Mafia boss, to announce that JDL would make common cause with Colombo to fight what they called government harassment.

Colombo, as a leading force of the Italian American Civil Rights League, lead a picketing campaign at FBI offices to put pressure on news organizations that resulted in curbs on the use of the expressions "Mafia" and "Costa Nostra" as synonyms for organized crime.

The Jewish Defense League has waged a campaign against alleged Soviet oppression of Jews. At first, the JDL concentrated on marches and demonstrations, but last winter they harassed Soviet diplomats here by following and taunting them for about a week.

They have also been suspected of a number of bombings. While denying any responsibility for bombings at Soviet facilities in the United States, the league has applauded the bombers' acts. Many of the bombings were announced by anonymous telephone callers using slogans connected with the league, usually concluding: "Never Again."

At an impromptu news conference, Colombo said "we feel the JDL's fight and cause is just. If they need our support, we will give it, if they ask for it, we will allow it."

Kahane said he would ask for support early next week. He said support from the Italian group could be considered "human brotherhood." If blacks had joined his cause, he added, it would have "drawn raves."

The twin indictments remained sealed Wednesday until after the arrest of the JDL leader and six others in raids on two league offices here.

One man was arrested in Philadelphia by federal Treasury agents.

Five others have yet to be apprehended.

Appearing before U.S. Commissioner Max Schiffman Thursday Kahane was freed in $25,000 bail. The six others had $10,000 bonds set.

Schiffman ordered Kahane to surrender his passport, pending the outcome of the case.

In The Nation And The World

Ford Expresses Doubt On Industry Future

DETROIT (AP)-Henry Ford II said Thursday that U.S.-built minicars have failed to stem the rising tide of imports and expressed doubt that the American industry can remain competitive in the world auto market.

"Minicars make miniprofits," said the 53-year-old board chairman of the nation's second largest automaker.

"I frankly don't see how we're going to meet the competition," Ford said at a news conference after the firm's annual meeting.

"We've tried to stem the tide unsuccessfully I might say-to some extent."

In the first four months of this year, imports captured 15.2 per cent of the U.S. new car market, compared with 13.7 per cent in the first four months of 1970, despite the fact that this year the importers had to compete with the Ford Pinto, the Chevrolet Vega and the American Motors Gremlin, which were not on the market last year.

Asked if he was disappointed in the performance of Pinto and other domestic minicars, Ford said, "If you look at the increase in imports, you'd find reason for disappointment. We'd hoped to hold the lid on."

Based on the experience of other countries, Ford said, it was possible that imports might capture up to 20 per cent of the U.S. market.

Despite the rising threat of imports, Ford said he and Ford Motors Co. continue to vigorously oppose any congressional moves to erect tariff barriers against cars or other products because of the possible consequences of an international trade war.

Ford placed the blame for the inability of the U.S. industry to cope with imports on labor unions and on increasingly stringent and costly government safety and pollution requirements.

He predicted that pollution control devices and safety requirements could increase the cost of a car $600 over present prices by 1975 and that the increase could go up to $1,000 if inflation is considered.

Upheaval In Egyptian Cabinet

(AP)-Six important Egyptian Cabinet ministers, among them the war minister, and three top political leaders turned their resignations in to President Answar Sadat in Cairo Thursday night.

The developments marked the widest split in Sadat's government since he succeeded Gamal Abdel Nasser in September. The view in the Middle East was that a power struggle was under way in Egypt.

Israelis and other Arab observers were taken by surprise, particularly the resignation of the war minister, Lt. Gen. Mohammed Fawzi, Egypt's chief military man.

Fawzi was not know to have any pronounced political leanings and apparently had been working smoothly with Sadat on strategy against Israel.

The flood of resignations hit Cairo soon after Sadat decreed an immediate end of all police surveillance in Egypt, including telephone taps. The first to quit was Egypt's top policeman, Interior Minister Sahwari Muhammed Gumah. The others followed hours later.

In Jerusalem, an informant said the announcements caught Israel's officials by surprise.

"It's still too early to tell whether these are resignations or dismissals," he said, "but it's certainly evident that the power struggle in Cairo is coming to a head.

"The most interesting resignation is that of war minister Lt. Gen. Mohammed Fawsi. It remains to be seen if Sadat has the backing of the military or not."

The Middle East News Agency said Fawzi was replaced by Maj. Gen. Mohammed Sadek, the army chief of staff. It added that Sadat replaced Gumah with Mahmoud Salem, former governor of Alexandria.

A Cairo broadcast said Sadat had accepted all resignations.

News of the resignations was carried by the official Middle East News Agency. No reason was given. The agency also carried the report on police surveillance.

Hoffman Indicted On Antiriot Charges

WASHINGTON AP—Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman was indicted Thursday on federal antiriot charges stemming from his alleged participation in the Mayday antiwar activities in the nation's capital last week.

A federal grand jury, considering charges against several of Mayday demonstration leaders, returned the indictment against Hoffman in U.S. District Court here. It was announced by Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell.

The first count of the indictment accuses Hoffman of crossing state lines to incite a riot. The indictment said the riot occurred in the fashionable Georgetown section of Washington on Monday, May 3.

That was the day that police arrested more than 7,000 persons during an attempt by antiwar demonstrators to block traffic coming in to the nation's capital.

Hoffman had been arrested by FBI agents at his Manhattan apartment last Wednesday on the basis of complaints that charged him with interstate travel to incite a riot and assaulting a Washington police officer.

He was released on $10,000 bond and the charges against him were submitted to the grand jury here.

A second count of the indictment charges Hoffman with interfering with Washington police officer Larry W. Sappington during a civil disorder, also a federal offense.

Hoffman and Connecticut pacifist Bradford Lyttle, are the first of several antiwar leaders accused of offenses in connection with the demonstrations to be charged by a grand jury. Lyttle was indicted by a District of Columbia Superior Court grand jury on assault charges earlier in the day.

Maine Kills Gun Legis.

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—On an 81-47 vote, the House Thursday killed a proposal to regulate the sale of handguns in Maine. Eight members of the Judiciary Committee had disapproved the original bill filed by Rep. George Vincent Jr., D—Portland. The other five legislators on the panel submitted a redraft.

During the debate, opponents claimed the measure was being used as a foot in the door for more stringent gun control bills in the future.

Abbie Hoffman being removed from Federal House of Detention in New York in FBI agent's custody for arraignment before a US commissioner. He was later released on bail for charges of interstate travel to incite a riot in DC and for assaulting a member of the Washington metropolitan police. Hoffman's wife said he suffered a broken nose and the split lip during last Monday's demonstrations. (AP Wirephoto)

Coast Guard Making Plans To Watch Lobster Boat

BOSTON (AP)-The Coast Guard was making plans Thursday to keep watch temporarily over the deep sea lobster boat Wiley Fox after three days of incidents in which Soviet fishing ships allegedly harassed the New Bedford vessel and destroyed some of its gear.

The cutter Vigilant, which was sent to the Wiley Fox, 85 miles south of Nantucket Island after the first incident Tuesday, was called away Wednesday night to aid another fishing boat in distress.

However, the Vigilant planned to return to the Wiley Fox, the Coast Guard said, after the latest incident Thursday morning, in which the lobster boat reported that a Soviet fishing trawler was again "causing trouble."

The Vigilant left the scene Wednesday night to aid the fishing boat Fleetwing, which reported it had run out of fuel and was taking water.

The Vigilant took the Fleetwing under tow about 73 miles south-southeast of Brenton Reef light tower and headed for Newport, R.I. It planned to meet the cutter Vigorous on the way, however.

The Vigilant was to return to the Wiley Fox after turning the Fleetwing over to the second cutter. A Coast Guard spokesman said the Vigilant would stay by the lobster boat as long as it was needed.

The incidents began Tuesday when the Wiley Fox reported that 15 to 20 Soviet vessels had destroyed an estimated $1,000 worth of its lobster fishing gear.

Repercussions reached as far as Washington, where the State Department said Thursday it had asked 11 embassies to instruct fishermen to exercise caution when fishing in areas where lobster pots and similar gear may be deployed.

The Department spokesman, press officer Robert J. McCloskey, said also that the Coast Guard has been asked to maintain patrols in the area with the incidents occurred.

He said the note on fishing precautions was signed by under Secretary of State John Irwin and was sent to the embassies of Bulgaria, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Italy, Japan, Norway, Poland, Romania, Spain and the U.S.S.R.

The Coast Guard dispatched the Vigilant and several aircraft to the area after the first report Tuesday night.

A spokesman said the New Bedford boat reported a Soviet vessel identified only as PN4570 cut through 19 of its lobster trawl lines. The captain of the Wiley Fox also told the Coast Guard that other Russian boats "appeared to be moving through the area."

The crew of the lobster boat reported seeing some of its gear aboard the PN4570 Tuesday night, but a Coast Guard helicopter that flew over Wednesday saw no sign of the missing fishing gear on the Soviet vessel.

The helicopter reported that nine Soviet ships were within 10 miles of the Wiley Fox, among them the PN4570.

When the Vigilant arrived Wednesday the Coast Guard warned the captain of the Soviet fishing fleet off the Massachusetts coast that "immediate steps must be taken to stop the damage" to American fishing equipment in the area.

On Thursday morning, the Coast Guard sent a helicopter out again after the Wiley Fox reported renewed harrasment. The American vessel said a trawler, the PE4305, sailed through newly set lobster traps despite efforts by the New Bedford crew to wave it off.

In Washington Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., pressed the Coast Guard to investigate the situation, asking "why adequate protection was not provided these boats which reportedly have been threatened by Russian vessels in the past."

"I have lodged a protest with the State Department and requested an immediate inquiry," Kennedy said.

"This is an obvious violation of international rules of the sea and I strongly protest this action. I cannot believe that less than 50 miles off the coast of Nantucket this country cannot assure the protection of our fishing boats."

The Wiley Fox had reported a similar incident last April 1, and Washington officials said there had been reports of other encounters with vessels of various nations.

Spokesmen for the government said the matter would be discussed at a meeting next week in Halifax, N.S., involving countries which fish off the Atlantic seaboard.

"Mississippi Night" At Mills House

This evening (Friday) at 7 P.M. the black culture center will present "Mississippi Night" in the Mills House Coffee Shop. This program will include films depicting the conditions of black life in Mississippi and the white resistance to the efforts of black people to liberate themselves from political oppression and economic exploitation.

Two black community leaders from Mississippi will also be present and will discuss the problems faced by black people in their communities. The two men are Mr. A. R. Franklin, a farmer and equipment operator who is a candidate for the office of Justice of the Peace in Quitman county. Quitman is a predominantly black county in which the white minority has monopolized the political apparatus through intimidation and fraud.

Mr. Franklin is accompanied by Rev. Colmer of Marks, Miss. Rev. Colmer is a community organizer who has been active in the struggle in Mississippi since the early 60's. He has been the victim of physical violence and repeated jailings for his activities.

The films which are to be shown are all documentary accounts of the struggle in the south. They are "We'll Never Turn Back" an account of bombings, shooting and economic reprisals against black people in Amite County, Miss; "The Streets of Greenwood" about the black struggle for political rights in the Mississippi Delta, and "Ivanhoe" a documentary about the political activities of a travelling Snick organizer called Ivanhoe Donaldson.

Three students from Amherst college who have just returned from Mississippi will also speak on their experiences in the state.

Wilson Wins History Prize

The Harold W. Cary Prize of the University of Massachusetts History Department was awarded on May 13, 1971, to Mrs. Altina Wilson of Northampton.

Mrs. Wilson is a History major who intends to go on for the Ph.D degree in History. Her career objective is teaching. Her main area of interest is Colonial American History. She has already, as an undergraduate, completed two courses on the graduate level related to her major interest.

Mrs. Wilson was accepted for graduate work at four universities. She has narrowed her choice to Brown University and the University of Massachusetts, but she has not yet finally decided which she will attend.

The Cary Prize is awarded annually to the graduating History major who has compiled the highest academic record in the undergraduate years. The prize was established in 1969 in honor of Professor Harold W. Cary who retired in that year after 36 years of service to the History Department and the University.

Primarily a scholar and teacher in the field of American Diplomatic History, Professor Cary is also the historian of the University. His study entitled The University of Massachusetts: History of One Hundred Years published in 1963, traced the growth of one of America's first land-grant institutions.

Muskie First, McGovern Second

A recent telephone poll of University of Massachusetts undergraduates indicates that a preponderance of students have not yet decided which candidate, if any, they will support in next year's Presidential election. The most important issue, a majority of undergraduates polled responded, is the Vietnam war.

The poll was conducted by a group of UMass students, all members of the recently formed Students for McGovern. During the last two weeks in March and the first two weeks in April, 150 randomly selected UMass undergraduates were asked the following three questions.

1. If the Presidential election were held today, whom would you vote for? 54 individuals, or approximately 36% of those polled responded to this question with some variation of, "I don't know," "I don't care," or "Nobody." Senator Edmund Muskie was the answer of 47 students, or approximately 31%. 19 students, about 14% noted that they would choose Senator George S. McGovern, the only announced Presidential candidate. 6% of those polled selected Richard Nixon.

Senator Edward Kennedy was the choice of 5%. Former Senator Eugene McCarthy received 4% of the responses. The remaining 4% were about equally divided among five potential candidates: Senator Harold Hughes of Iowa, Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, Mayor John Lindsay of New York, Governor Nelson Rockefeller of New York, and Governor George Wallace of Alabama.

2. In a few words, what is the major reason for your choice? Answers to this question were too varied to draw any clear conclusions. In the cases of the two most popular candidates in the poll, trends did occur. Nearly half of those choosing McGovern indicated that their choice was due to his sincerity and determination in ending the Vietnam War. Others said that they thought McGovern was an honest, decisive, qualified, independent individual with a good record, and that he was not a middle of the road candidate. Those who selected Senator Muskie gave considerably different reasons for their preference.

No single issue or quality was prevalent as a reason. Several students believed that Muskie had the best chance of winning, while a few reasoned that voting for Muskie would be voting against Nixon. Muskie's position on environmental issues was cited by only three students, while five respondents could not think of any explanation for their selection of Muskie. The majority of those preferring Muskie, however, responded in general, not specific, terms.

Typical answers given included: "I just like him," "I like how he talks," "He's down to earth, realistic," "He's done the most," "His calm attitude," "His reliability," "His personality," "He takes all sides into consideration," "His priorities are correct," "He's the only one I know," "He should be President," "I like what he stands for," "He is the most intelligent," "His activities in the 1968 campaign."

3. What, in your opinion, is the most important issue? A clear majority, 68% of those responding, felt that the Vietnam War was the paramount issue. 9% of those polled considered the economy the most significant issue, while 8% selected the environment. A number of issues, including population, poverty, welfare, race, domestic affairs, education, alienation, and apathy were indicated by 1% or less of the respondents.

Although the overwhelming sentiment that the Vietnam War is the major issue could have partially been a reflection of increased interest in the War during late March and early April, it is noteworthy that a majority of students still consider the War to be the issue of the Presidential campaign. Ironically, however, more than twice as many students preferred Senator Muskie, who supported the pro-war plank at the 1968 Democratic Convention and has only recently spoken out against the War, over Senator McGovern, who supported the anti-war plank at Chicago and has opposed the War for many years, and who introduced the McGovern-Hatfield "end the War" amendment last year and the Vietnam Disengagement Act this year.

The issue of the environment, foremost in the public's mind last year, was the paramount issue according to a scant 11 students polled, of which only three chose Senator Muskie for his environment positions. The draft, which may be an explosive campaign issue, was mentioned as a reason or a major issue by a mere three students. This may be an indication that students would prefer a continuation of the draft can be eliminated--the goal of only two potential candidates, Hughes and McGovern.

Most importantly, while students are apparently willing, not necessarily determined, to use their newly acquired voting power, they have not yet decided which candidate, if any, will benefit from their support.

Drought Hits South Hard

(AP)—Fresh vegetables, bread and cereals and even meat eventually may cost the housewife more because of the drought in the South and West. Farmers are feeling the pinch already.

An Associated Press survey showed Florida, Oklahoma and Texas were hardest hit.

Florida farmers and agriculture officials estimated Thursday that production of vegetables like tomatoes, cucumbers, celery, peppers and squash has been cut 50 per cent by the drought.

The shortage of supplies ultimately will lead to higher retail prices, officials said.

Farmers in some areas reported they were running out of grass feed for cattle and water holes in some places have dried up. The Agriculture Department announced Wednesday it has made $160,000 available to Florida cattlemen to help them drill new wells and move herds.

Frank Pope, director of the federal Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee in Gainesville said there had been isolated cases of farmers losing cattle because of the drought and said the financial strain on producers eventually will be reflected in consumer prices.

The U.S. Crop Reporting Service predicted the 1971 winter wheat crop since 1957 and a third less than last year.

The hardest hit areas were the Southwest with an estimated yield of 3.3 million bushels forecast compared to 19 million last year and the west central with less than 5 million bushels compared to 13 million in 1970.

"Many farmers down here will just have to pack up and move to the cities," said Denzil Schultz an agricultural expert at Altus, Okla.

He said the full effect of the drought on the region's economy would not be felt until fall and winter when the farmers normally would spend harvest profits on machinery and other needed equipment Shultz said the final effect will be "tremendous."

The latest forecast of Texas wheat crops is for a harvest of 27,756 million bushels Dec. 1, the forecast was 45,656 million bushels.

Don Burris, secretary treasurer of the Panhandle Grain and Feed Dealers Association said almost all of the dryland wheat crop that gram planted on land using no irrigation has been lost.

He also said drought conditions in southwest Kansas, southwest Oklahoma, the Panhandle, the southern Plains and eastern New Mexico have left few fields worth harvesting.

Irrigated wheat crops were reported "good to excellent," but not large enough to build up surpluses.

Agriculture officials and farmers said the failure of the dryland wheat crops would increase the price of bread and cereals in the stores.

Recent rains have improved soil moisture in most of Colorado, causing officials to revise estimates of the 1971 wheat crop from 53 million to 65 million bushels, still 2 million bushels short of the 1970 figure.

Clinton Jeffers, director of the Colorado Agriculture Department, said, however, "I suspect the drought might have some effect on beef prices, which are strong."

SPECTRUM Wins Printing Award

SPECTRUM, the undergraduate general interest magazine, recently received notification that their February 1971 issue had won a Printing Industry of America award for excellence in the one and four color category. Word of the award was given to D. J. Trageser, editor of the prize-winning issue by the president of Woodland Publishing Company, Arthur Kohler.

In competing for the PIA award, SPECTRUM was judged alongside many professional publications from across the country. It is uncommon for collegiate publications to receive this award and is particularly gratifying to the SPECTRUM staff because it was chosen by members of the printing industry in open competition with professional publications.

Formal presentation of the award is slated for the near future.

Next week, the second issue of SPECTRUM for 1971 is scheduled to appear. In this issue are highlighted a personal history of last year's student strike, written by Mark Silverman, and a most pertinent and thought-provoking critique of the Faculty Senate's School of Education Review Committee's Report.

Non-Existent Fish Caught

John Chmyzinski of Conway standing on the dam at the north end of Cranberry Pond last Tuesday cast in his line and came up with the strangest fish story so far this season.

John hooked a fighting game fish that isn't supposed to exist in Massachusetts. The fish grabbed his worm and took almost all the line off his reel before he finally brought it to shore after a fight that lasted three quarters of an hour.

It was a 42 1/4 inch muskie or maskellunge, the first documented muskie taken by hook and line in Massachusetts, according to Dr. James McCann, leader of the Massachusetts Cooperative Fishery Unit at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. Cranberry Pond is a 30-acre experimental pond associated with the fisheries program at the University.

The muskie is a member of the pike family native to the St. Lawrence River, the lower Great Lakes and some other areas of the Midwest. It has been introduced as far east as western New York and Pennsylvania. How did John Chmyzinski's muskie get into Cranberry Pond?

Cranberry Pond was reclaimed in September of 1967 and stocked with 22,000 largemouth bass fry three to four inches long," McCann explained. "They came from the Linesville Fish Hatchery of the Pennsylvania Fish and Game Department. The muskie was probably taken by mistake from Pymatuning Lake in Pennsylvania during the netting of the largemouth bass fry," he said.

Dr. McCann conducted an age-growth study on the fish by examining one of its scales. The study indicated the fish was four years old. "His growth rate in Cranberry Pond was comparable to the upper ranges of growth rates reported from Wisconsin, New York and Ontario," McCann said.

The weight, an estimated nine pounds before field dressing, is also about average, McCann said. He is checking out a report that when the muskie was cut open for field dressing, two good-sized rainbow trout were found inside.

"The muskie is known as a very heavy predator," McCann explained. "There would be serious problems with the existing fish population if it were introduced in Massachusetts waters."

Geese Re-visited

NEW YORK (AP) — Two Canada geese whose nest of eggs was saved from destruction by a Long Island construction worker are the proud parents of several goslings.

"It happened. They hatched," said Mrs. John Toto, North Bellmore, N.Y., Thursday. Mrs. Toto's husband was one of several construction workers making a periodic cleanup of a corner of a suburban shopping center, Roosevelt Field on Long Island.

He noted the geese and the nest on April 16 just as he was about to pile some dirt on top of a mound of earth where the birds were setting.

Toto, 37, refused to disturb the geese and his boss agreed to pull the construction men off the job to work on other projects until the geese had hatched and the goslings were able to take care of themselves.

"I'm just an animal lover, I guess," said Toto whose action brought him widespread publicity.

The eggs there were four, but one was broken began hatching Wednesday night Mrs. Toto said.

Flashbacks: Don't Worry

Because of the increased occurrence of flashbacks, the time has come to write something on the matter. Over the past few weeks, there has been a large number of calls by people claiming flashback and not being able to understand what was happening. A flashback may best be defined as the spontaneous occurrence of some aspect of a trip, usually long after the drug influence has worn off. Most often, the flashback occurs after a bad trip of some kind.

There are three degrees of flashbacks:

1) Spontaneous Visual Distortion - the perceptual changes that normally occur during trips recur. While in the normal state, the person suddenly experiences (or re-experiences) colors, geometric designs, after-images, auras around the objects he sees in front of him, or wavy movement of the objects in the environment. These are most common. They may last a split second or a complete trip and getting off again for nine hours.

2) Emotive Memory Image - These occur usually after a bummer and take the form of a frightening image intruding into the normal waking state. A giant scorpion, a horrible monster face, a tatooed object may appear with a distinct suddenness as if it "seizes" and haunts the person with an emotional charge.

3) Participatory Image - These are of rarer form. It is sometimes the case that a person will re-live a highly emotional scene of a trip in the same way that it happened so as to participate in the event again. Again, this occurs suddenly without warning.

The difficulty in working with flashbacks is one of attitude clarification. If you flashback — in no way does this represent that LSD is still mysteriously hiding and floating around inside of you just waiting to catch you off guard and then start you tripping again. Also, there is probably no reason to believe that flashing back is a sign of physiological damage or mental deterioration from too much LSD. Flashbacking can be explained psychologically and what needs to be stressed is not to panic at the suddenness of the flash — believe that it is a necessary and logical psychological event. Let go. Understand the message you are telling yourself.

Visual Distortion flashbacks could be explained as a type of state dependent learning. While tripping, you learn new ways to perceive the world, "to see the strange in the familiar and the familiar in the strange." The learning in this altered state is carried over to the normal waking state in the form of altered visual flashes, etc.

The flashbacks of the latter two classes require a different explanation. Often times while tripping we raise things from the unconscious that have an excessively high emotional charge — positive or negative. If it is released, we have a really peak trip or real bummer. But sometimes these unconscious emotional constellations get really close to the surface and encounter resistances. If they are real close, the organism may push for release; this takes the form of either a prolonged reaction (tripping for 24 hours to 3 days) or, if repressed, it may occur later as a flashback — like a monsterous lace, etc. If after the trip you find yourself in a situation which mimics the original situation when you tripped, it may serve as a trigger to raise the material again and a flashback occurs. There is no reason for surprise; we have found that this pattern can be detected in dreams and, moreso, in the hypnagogic state from the time of the trip to the time of the flash. I am hesitant to give examples simply because if you flashback I don't want you to understand your experience in light of my example which might be different. Rather, if you want to understand it, come in and see us.

The next question is what sort of things we do for flash backing people? If they are visual distortions, we may do nothing because they may be an enjoyably new way of perceiving the world. One student at another center came in complaining of the walls crumpling and moving in and out. After having the flashback removed and restoring normal perception, he came in complaining that the walls didn't move any more. The message: minor visual flashes or even very distinct ones are no source of worry — they can be an interesting new experience.

For flashing back of the second the third types, it entails trying to recreate the parts of the trip and working through the emotional experience that is being blocked by resistance. We have found that this release is best done using the following techniques: a) eidetic imagery of Leuner, b) Gestalt therapy, c) deep breathing techniques of Primal therapy.

If you have a flashback problem, I hope the above will help lessen the anxiety. If it is particularly bothersome — come in and we'll talk about it.

Radio Astronomers Observing Regularly

University of Massachusetts astronomers are now making regular observations of pulsars at the Five College Radio Astronomy Observatory near the Amherst campus.

Observations are being made with a single antenna on a regular basis, 12 hours a day, seven days a week, according to a progress report on the facility released today by William M. Irvine. He is chairman of the UMass astronomy program and the Five College Astronomy Department, a cooperative research and teaching program of UMass and Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges.

Dr. Irvine reports that construction is resuming on three more antennas. "It is hoped that these three will be completed by the fall of 1971," he said. He also reports that during 1970, a total of $239,400 in foundation and grant support had been obtained by the astronomy program to support the observatory.

The facility is 18 miles from the Amherst campus, in the northwest part of the 200-square mile Quabbin Reservoir area.

Dr. Irvine reports: "The first antenna of the observatory was completed last November. Following calibration and tests, the first detection of an astronomical source was made in early December, and the first observations of a pulsar on Dec. 15."

Each antenna has a bowl-shaped reflecting surface of heavy wire mesh 120 feet in diameter. Tracking is done by a feed support structure centered over the dish. Utility poles are the supporting members. Ultimately the observatory will consist of an array of 32 antennas.

"Although the collecting power of a single antenna is limited, certain observations of scientific interest are possible," Dr. Irvine notes in the report. "In particular, a search is underway for long-term variations in the intensity and average pulse shape in the radio emission from the brightest pulsars."

Radio astronomers have opened a door to new understanding of physical laws and processes through their observations of quasi-stellar radio sources, or quasars, and rapidly pulsing radio sources, or pulsars. The radio astronomy team that made the first American discovery of a pulsar is on the UMass faculty and now working at the Five College Observatory. They are G. Richard Huguenin, Observatory Director and J.H. Taylor. Other radio astronomers in the Five College Department are William Dent at UMass, and husband and wife team Kurtiss and Courtney Gordon at Hampshire College.

Out-Of-State Abortions Up In NYC

NEW YORK (AP)-The plump, pretty brunette in the miniskirt came into the apartment all smiles, trailed by two friends who had come with her on the flight from their college town that morning.

As they accepted glasses of wine from Dan Weiss, their long-haired, bearded youth host, they told him how well everything had worked out that afternoon.

"It was a little rushed-they told me they do 80 girls a day but the counsellors couldn't have been nicer," said the girl. "I feel great. We don't have too much time before we catch the plane home because I took a nap afterward. Not because I didn't feel good-just because I didn't get much sleep last night."

"No problem," said Dan. "We'll drive you to the airport."

The girl was one of hundreds of college students, housewives, or career women who come to New York every week from all over the United States, get quick abortions and fly home again.

A great many have had their abortions arranged by a commercial referral agency like "MEDREF," which Dan Weiss operates out of his home with the help of advertisements published in many states, particularly in campus newspapers.

An abortion by the vacuum process, used in early pregnancy, takes only about 10 minutes.

So the girl had been able to arrive at the airport about 9:30 a.m., drive to a clinic in Westchester County, take her lab tests listen to a counsellor describe birth control methods, receive a local anesthetic, have her abortion, take a two-hour nap, drive back to Weiss' apartment, chat and sip wine for an hour, and drive to the airport and catch a 5:30 plane.

The plump girl went home thinking she got a bargain, and buy the standards of the city's fast-expanding commercial abortion referral business she did.

Although MEDREF has a $200 "package", charging a flat $50 fee for its services testimony at a recent hearing conducted by State Atty. Gen. Louis Lefkowitz showed that many commercial agencies are charging from $75 to $160 fees for referrals, with the package cost of abortions ranging up to $300 for an early vacuum procedure and up to $710 for another procedure requiring hospitalization.

1.5 Billion Deseg. Bill Dead-Locked

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's proposal to provide $1.5 billion to help schools desegregate, offered as an emergency measure a year ago, is caught in a House-Senate deadlock.

As passed by the Senate last month the bill was a far more sweeping school integration measure than originally proposed, and the administration has been advised it has no chance in the House.

Prospects for a compromise appeared dim as the key Senate backers of the legislation regard the version favored by the House as totally unacceptable.

The gloomy outlook for a bill Nixon sent to Congress last May 21 with a plea that it act speedily to meet "immediate and acute" needs of desegregating schools, was given to Secretary Elliot Richardson of the Health, Education and Welfare Department Thursday by its chief House sponsors.

Richardson, who took part in delicate negotiations that led to a bipartisan agreement on the Senate bill, learned quickly that the effort was wasted as far as the House is concerned.

"There isn't a chance in the world of getting the House to accept the Senate bill," Rep. Roman C. Pucinski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Education subcommittee handling the bill told a reporter after the Capitol Hill meeting with Richardson.

"The Senate bill goes far beyond the original purpose of the administraton, which was to assist schools undergoing desegregation," he said. "It calls for a complete restructuring of our educational system."

Pucinski said the Senate bill would require massive busing and racial quotas for teachers and pupils, two concepts overwhelmingly opposed by the House.

Nixon's original bill would have limited aid to schools desegregating under court orders, HEW plans or voluntarily. The Senate bill makes every school district eligible but requires that it adopt a comprehensive plan for eliminating minority group isolation throughout the district and that it maintain at least one, stable, quality integrated school.

Nursing Home Sem. Open

Amherst, Mass--Applications are still being accepted for the final seminar in the University of Massachusetts Nursing Home Administrators series at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center in Amherst. Sessions will be Friday and Saturday, May 21 and 22.

Professor Victor Buell of the UMass School of Business Administration is coordinator for the final seminar. Titled "Effective Management for Nursing Home Administrators," it will identify key management and health care issues, review quality control methods and management techniques, and cover such other areas as financial operations, medicare reimbursement, construction financing and employee relations.

Featured lecturers will be Prof. Joseph Litterer on management, Associate Prof. M. King Deets on finances and Associate Prof. Taher Moustafa on medical aspects.

Applications and information may be obtained from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002.

Poetry Contest Held By Japanese

From earliest times, poets in Japan have written odes to the taste, appearance and effects of sake, the Japanese rice wine. Now that this beverage is readily available in the United States, Japan's sake industry is curious to see what inspiration American poets derive from it.

The Japanese sake industry will award cash and gifts for the best poem created about, or relating to sake. First prize will be a cash award of $200. Second prize will be a gold embossed laquerware sake serving set of the 17th Century. Third, fourth and fifth prizes will be decorative seramic sake casks.

Deadline for entries is June 30, 1971. No more than five entries may be submitted per person and no entries will be returned unless accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Entries should be addressed to:

Adjusting

The year really isn't over yet, but you are holding the Daily Collegian's last issue of Spring Semester, 1971. Don't get all choked up about it. It will be hard getting through the day without knowing your horoscope and doing the crossword puzzle; Peanuts will be going deeply into the baseball season without you knowing it (The Springfield Union will give you Peanuts if you don't mind blowing breakfast over the rest of it and the Boston Globe B.C.); but the ladies in the Dining Commons and Hatch won't have to bother getting rid of them any more.

The Collegian will be back next September though, unlike people like Jack Deaver who is leaving the University to pursue some other "tangents" in his life. Deaver, as he is affectionately called, teaches in the Comparative Literature department and this year he decided that there were other things for him to do. He's almost 30, so you can't blame him.

Some people will be coming back next year, like Seymour Shapiro former Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Dean Shapiro was always a very visible part of the campus. He has pretty much decided to come back as a Professor, rather than as the administrator many would like him to be.

You might say that this year has been one of adjusting and rethinking. The great political catharsis of a year ago is safely tucked under the blanket of experience, perhaps a few more people understand this world a little better because of it. Certainly, if all those who have suffered the experience of political activism could come to a more lucid understanding of it, the world would change more quickly.

We, as students, particularly those graduating Seniors, have the means, i.e. bodies, to construct our lives; Molding our desires and fears in this mother University, searching out our "tangents" and making decisions on where we want to go and what we want to be.

Perhaps this has been a year which allowed the University to function as only a University can; the hub of people moving in and out of the greater society, adding what they can, taking what they can. The great, and mostly un-realized, conscience and catalyst for society.

******

You won't have the Daily Collegian to carry around anymore, this year. We have tried hard to put it out everyday so that the University could have something to reflect itself upon. We are like the shadow in the cave, attempting to provide an image.

The Editors have exercised their judgment over the past year about what the paper would do. We stand in the public with our views tempered only by our experience and knowledge.

The year is, as it should be, without resolution. Next year will build from this one. New people will inhabit the University. New issues will be faced. We hope that the experience of the year has given us all the wisdom to stand through next year.

The Intergovernmental Ballistic Balloon

Don Glickstein

The Picket Fence

Around 4:25, near the end of his lecture, Deaver said that art reflects one of three things: what the artist is, what he thinks he is, or what he wants to be.

If a man's life is his art, if Washington and Dacca and Da Nang are the art of the world, then the casual observor must conclude that the odds are slim on our surviving the decade.

Regardless of these perceptions, there is much evidence that we will survive the decade, Nixon, and the war.

For the first time in history, the majority has the power to create change. This power is revolutionary power: it is the non-violent power of the vote.

Representative Bella Abzug said last month to a group of UMass students that a bill to limit the draft to one year was defeated by two votes, votes that could have been persuaded by a couple of hundred letters. However disappointed she was, her optimism was advanced by the elimination of student deferments. Put into a corner, college students, she hinted, can provide the swing vote needed to end the draft, get out of Viet Nam, and do anything the people wanted.

Most Americans straddle a picket fence, swaying to the predominant winds. Ronald Reagan and Max Rafferty are able to blow some of the time, but eventually their winds tire, and the John Tunneys and Wilson Riles are able to persuade the voters. The unique thing about Americans is that few winds are strong enough to hurl them off the fence.

An artist's emotions, if harnessed, Deaver said, can produce works of art with amazing power. The ages are 28 through 33. "That's when it happens", Deaver said. That's when men go through a crisis. But Deaver left his class of 19 and 20 year old students, many of them still enduring the proverbial identity quest, with these words:

"The years between this crisis and your next crisis can be brilliant, if you work it right."

College students are at the age to be brilliant. Working it right requires the revolutionary tactic of voting.

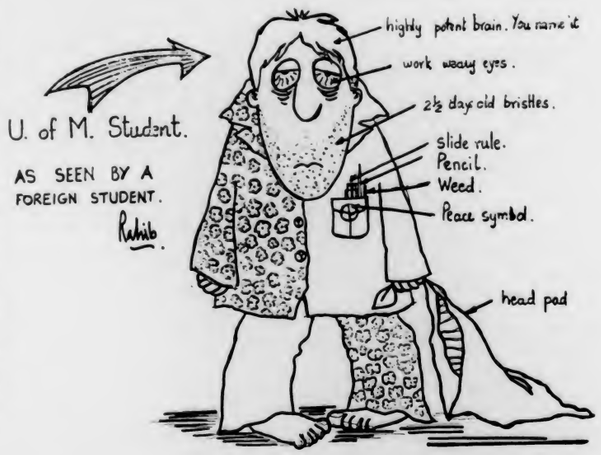
End of the Year Thoughts



—Anyone at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting who hasn't split his pants yet, ought to.

—Tonight, Howdy Doody is coming home. Get your seltzer bottles and peanuts out, folks. (Just be careful what you put in those seltzer bottles).

—The SST passed the House two days ago. Well, everything has its ups and downs. Don't lose faith in the system: we'll vote the rascals out in November.

—Erma Bombeck in the Globe describes her two year old son: "Between 8:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m., he put the cat in the dryer, got his arm caught in a rake, put his training pants in the oven, ate a guppy, pulled over the flour canister, sat on my geraniums, put his shoes in the bath tub, dropped the TV knob down the register, tore up my card for jury duty, and talked for fifteen minutes without operator assistance to a housewife in New Mexico."

And Oz Tippo thinks HE has problems?

Ode to the MDC

Every morn at nine-oh-five
I shake my tired frame alive
And to some quiet post I strive
I read each line with baited breath
Pleasantly awaiting death
Chewing on my crystal meth
As I read todays Collegian.
It isn't that I hate the news
Or disagree with others views
I shudder that I'd dare refuse
To read the days Collegian.
I save the last page to the end
You see, the crossword is my friend
My senses I will try to mend
After reading the Collegian.
You really do a "hang-up" job
I guess I'm just "an effete snob"
As I burst into a aching sob
From reading the Collegian.
There's but one thing that I could wish
To take the Dining Commons dish
Of rotten meat and smelly fish
And wrap it up in the Collegian.

Letters To The Editor

You're Welcome, Dr. Tippo

To the Students, University of Massachusetts/Amherst:

I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to you for your record of the past year. Your performance in several aspects of the life of the University — academic, extra-curricular, athletic and governmental — has been exemplary. Particular recognition should go to the Student Senate for a responsible and well-prepared budget; to the Collegian for its broad coverage and lively style; to the residents of the Central Area for their initiative in executing a successful work week during Spring vacation; to the University State Communications Council for its tireless efforts to improve relations with the legislature and the general public; to the numerous student committees which labored for hours to understand and protect the students' interests in connection with the recommended rent, board, and Student Union rate increases; and to the thousands of students who participated in dozens of community action programs. We may all take pride in these and many other accomplishments.

We would be less than honest if we did not recognize that much needs to be done to make this campus a pleasant, productive academic community. We shall all need to give further thought to our vexing problems with residence hall visiting, influx of outside squatters, drug abuse, excessive noise, and the growing menace of illegal pets on the campus.

And now as the academic year draws to a close, may I wish you all a pleasant and rewarding summer vacation.

Oswald Tippo
Chancellor

Index

To the Students:

It's been a year of tribulation for the Index, as it has for most of the campus organizations. We started out in the fall with a recruitment meeting which netted us about forty potential staffers. Something drastic must have happened, because we never saw ninety per cent of them again. Our current staff consists of a dozen or so yearbook veterans who have managed to turn out what I consider to be an excellent book.

A few weeks ago we found ourselves face-to-face with the august body which calls itself the Student Senate. Cries of "Irrelevant!" and "Unrepresentative!" spewed forth from the All-Relevant and All-Representative group of Nixon-figures. After the Budgets went through, we found ourselves with a small cut in our SATF income amounting to $33,000.

That's all over with. But now I find myself losing most of the quality staff members (through that inevitable process of Commencement.)

What, you ask, am I babbling on about. Well, I'm trying to organize a staff for next year's book, now and in the summer months. If you are even a little bit interested in working on the 1972 Index, please come to the office as soon as possible and leave your name and summer address. I will try to contact you over the summer. If you will be on campus during the summer, drop in and have a talk with us. (In all humility, we're a hell of a nice bunch of people. Ask any Senator.)

The 1972 Index will be as relevant as I can possibly make it, but it obviously can't be done without your help. If you have any ideas about changes in its format or content, please let me know, since I haven't yet crystallized about the book in general.

Even if we don't hear from you, have a nice summer.

Education?

To The Editor:

I received my bachelor's degree in Chemical Engineering. I feel that the education I received was an example of education at its worst. There was no deviation allowed. You had to know certain material and nothing else. Everything that was done was for the Professor and his expectations. When you took a test, not only did the answer have to be right, but you also had to guess the method the professor would use to solve it. Any other method was wrong.

Upon entering graduate school at the school of education, I thought all of that would be over with. Finally, I was free. Free to do what I loved to do and set my own expectations. For the first time in my life I was in what I considered a true learning experience. Never again would I allow myself to be conned under the guise of someone else's concept of education.

I enrolled in a course called Value Clarification. Supposedly, to show that I do have values, I must get a letter to the editor published. I would appreciate it if people would now recognize me as such due to this letter.

I have done it again. I have bought into a system so that I may pass a course. But, how do I live with the feeling that I have failed.

Howard Adler

Again?

To The Editor:

We are now approaching the end of the semester. For me this is special since I will soon be leaving the University. An obstacle between me and graduation however, is the publication of a letter to the editor. Ridiculous as it may seem, it is a requirement for one of my courses. It is my hope that this composition will aid in my departure from this institution.

I Like Chicken

To the Editor:

As graduating seniors of this University experiencing our final year, we find ourselves forced to voice our dissatisfaction concerning the "festivites of our finale". We understand, according to yesterday's Collegian, that the Senior Class is spending $10,000 on Senior Week. Are we to understand that this is our $10,000 (i.e. class of '71) or has the University most beneficently offered to pay this fee? If we are faced with the bill, where in hell is that money going to? You can't tell me that the well-known but hardly-special Pub and Mike's is getting $10,000 of our money for Harvey Walbangers and Peppermint Patties? This is ridiculous!!! One parting question - how is it that we are paying one or two dollars (plus some fraction of the $10,000), depending on our class status, for a chicken barbecue when Drummer Boy offers a chicken meal for only $7.9, irrespective of one's membership to the class of '71. And what about the poor slobs that don't show up for the festivities - do they forfeit their momento of a beer mug (after all, that $10,000 is partly theirs and they are entitled to demand something from it)???

We demand an itemized list of all monies to be charged to the class for this "exceptional" weekend. We also demand to know who, or whom, decided the schedule of events, and who chose them??? We demand an immediate reply as this is our money and we have a right to know.

Crime

To the Editor:

The easiest way to fight crime is not to let it happen in the first place. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." It's an old saying, but it's truer now than ever before.

And it's just as true here at UMass as anywhere else across the land. There's another saying that's been heard around a lot lately: "Don't trust anyone over 30." Sounds like good advice, but while you're at it, don't trust anyone under thirty, either.

If this all sounds pretty cynical--well, maybe it is, but I speak from experience. You see, last week I left my pocketbook on a desk in Goodell Library. I was only in the stacks for a few minutes, but when I got back to the desk, my pocketbook was gone.

It turned up again on the same level within half an hour, minus the money in my wallet, not to mention two pens and a roll of fifty pennies. Even though I saw the thief (he was bending over my desk and then walked by me with his jacket slung conveniently over his arm--just before I found that my pocketbook was gone), it doesn't help very much now.

Since I didn't tackle him at the time, there is no way for me to get my money back now. It won't happen again, not to me, anyway. And I hope that it won't ever happen to any of you who are reading this article right now.

So, take it from me, if you're as little or timid as me, please don't be as careless. Don't give a would-be thief the perfect chance. After all, the best way to fight crime is be on the defensive in the first place--and you might not have to fight it at all.

Happy Vacation

Points in Review

This past year, the Campus Center opened up, proving that the University could build expensive buildings and not compromise its principles of bad taste.

Construction of the Fine Arts Building began, reaffirming that UMies can not have their grass and smoke it too.

The Redmen won some and lost some, and even some cheerleaders showed up for some games.

All you Senior men are going to be the most draft eligible people in the whole country this summer, the way things look in Congress right now. That kind of makes Senior Week an end in itself.

TO ALL YOU ADMINISTRATORS:
"The honeymoon is over".-The Editors

Now that we've managed to solve the financial problems for this year, we can look forward to the real financial problems next year. You might say that money is to the University, what money is to the State Legislature.

Chancellor Tippo tells us that one of the "vexing problems" to be solved in order to make this a "productive academic community" is the presence of pets around campus. Judging from their performance near the Campus Pond, the animals around here seem to be about as "productive" as all us students.

We'd like to wish everybody a rotten summer.

Brooke Fiasco

To the Editor:

Through my lack of concern and the apathy of my fellow seniors commencement has resulted in the "Broke Fiasco." Those running the show for our glorious commencement have been fairly considerate of divergent views. I do feel however the affair will have little significance to those seniors politically aware and desirous of speedy, meaningful change in this mess; we call Amerika. The choice of Brooke is the key issue. The fact that the Board of Trustees (oink oink) selected him to speak is another example of in loco parentis. No matter what your political views are Brooke's appearance here manifests the subordinate role students have in this "liberal" school. The fact that Brooke is up for re-election next year and the political nature of the Board adds a regrettable stench to the matter. I am sure that there are many who would agree that Brooke hasn't fulfilled the job of U.S. Senator, anywhere close to the level progressive students hope for. The traditional iron fist which the Board has used to emasculate the student body must be removed. I feel a show of senior disapproval should be made against Brooke's appearance, through the form of a well worded petition given to him. If there is enough support, perhaps he may deter from speaking. Flag waving and nationalistic crap don't appeal to many students, an objection to this type of activity should be instituted. A truly student-run commencement would not have Ed Brooke. I would like to join with those willing to achieve some form of the points I have mentioned.

School of Ed.

To the Editor:

After hearing much comment and criticism about the School of Education here at UMass., I would just like to say that I feel very lucky to be able to be a part of it. Anyone who participated in the marathon, or who made the effort to find out about the new programs for next year could, I am almost sure, agree that it was well worth the little bit of confusion involved. And after all, in order for anything to change and progress as the School of Ed. is doing, a certain amount of confusion is inevitable.

I am looking forward to participating in one of the new programs next year, and I hope that all of those people who have become frustrated with the School will stop to look at what it is doing, and realize just what it has to offer.

Theater

A Midsummer Night's Dream
A production of the Shakesperean comedy which attempts to adhere to many of Shakespeare's traditions. At the Amphitheatre, Mt. Holyoke College. Friday, Saturday, and Sunday afternoons at 2 and Saturday evening at 7:30. ($)

In The Desperate Hours, Cindy (Peggy Egbert, MHC '73) cries to Hank (Peter Sosnow, AC '73) as a drunken Robish (William Barwick, (AC '71) attacks and Glenn (Bob Murphy, (AC '73) stands by. Don't miss the thriller that will pulverize your nerves. At Kirby Theater, Amherst College, this Friday, Saturday, and Monday at 8:30 with a Sunday matinee. Phone 542-2278 for reservations or visit the box office from 10 to 5.

The Blacks
A student production of Jean Genet's highly successful and off-Broadway production was one of the longest running plays in New York theater history. The play will run tonight through Sunday at the Black Cultural Center, Amherst College, 8:30 P.M.

The Desparate Hours
The final Amherst Masquers production of the season is a production of Joseph Hayes' Broadway thriller. It concerns the take-over of a middle-class household by a group of convicts. At the Kirby Theater, Amherst College, tonight through Monday night at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon at 3. ($)

Howdy Doody
He's back (with Buffalo Bob) and it's that time again. See related article elsewhere in today's issue.

Films

A New Leaf (starts Wednesday, Amherst Cinema)
Elaine May directed and starred in her first feature-length film comedy about a middle-aged bachelor who attempts to woo, marry, then murder a wealthy botanist. Walter Matthieau has the male lead in a film that's a sterile attempt at dry humour which in its own cute way falls flat.

Anna Karenina and Camille (through Saturday, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Greta Garbo stars in two heavily done studio adaptations of classic Nineteenth century heroines. The first, adapted from Tolstoi, is Garbo at her best as the lonely and victimized Russian heiress.

The latter, one of her final film roles, has the actress at her height of acting skill in overly-romantic version of Dumas' classic.

Butch Cassidy And The Sundance Kid (Tuesday, May 25, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
A most satisfying film western. Paul Newman and Robert Redford give two engaging performances as outlaws coming to the end of their road in the not too old West. It's funny in a likeable way with a excellent script, good direction, and some beautifully done photography.

The Caine Mutiny (Monday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
This mid fifties adaptation of Herman Wouk's best-seller is a long, occasionally dull film. The story about the mutiny on board a U.S. Navy ship and eventual courtmartial trial of its participants is long in unfolding. The film, though, is dramatically valid and contains some excellent performances including one of Bogart's finest.

Downhill Racer (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College 7:30 and 9:30)
A very well told story about a young man's attempt to become a skiing champion. Through exciting, excellently-photographed sequences, the grueling discipline of a championship skier is honestly presented.

Either Way (Friday, Campus Center Auditorium, 6, 9, 10, 12)
Written, directed, produced, and starring UMass professors Jack Deaver and Tom Clark, this low-budget film concerns a young man sexual identity crisis. The film presents its subject matter more honestly than any other to date, but is flawed because of an occasional pretentious quality.

Exodus (Tuesday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 10)
The massive Leon Uris novel was made into a massive, professional film by Otto Premnger. Certain sequences and performances are exciting and well-done, but overall the film would only please a limited audience.

Horror of Dracula (Tuesday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
A british-made version of the original novel that's both intelligent and frightening. Christopher Lee makes a cunning Dracula.

The Killing Of Sister George Friday, May 21, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
The play was a funny and brutal look at deceptive reality, as a film it is utterly grosse, completely lacking any of the play's subtlety. The film concerns Sister George who plays a goodie two-shoes on a television soap opera but in real life is bitchie lesbian. The performances aren't bad, nor is the script, what's unattractive about the film is it's exploitive direction.

Lawrence of Arabia (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
In its re-release, this is still one of the most beautiful films ever made. The character of elusive and enigmatic T.E. Lawrence is explored in an intelligent screenplay of Robert Bolt. The taut direction of David Lean and the magnificent photography make this epic, now in an edited version, well worth seeing.

Little Big Man (Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Academy of Music, Northampton)
The best film of last year. Dustin Hoffman and an outstanding class have created a brilliant, multi-imaged film about the sole survivor of Custer's Last Stand.

The Looking Glass War (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
John LeCarre's suspense novel was twisted a bit and made into an anti-war love story. Christopher Jones looks adorable and the female star of Elvira Madigan looks beautiful in a film that offers little else.

M*A*S*H (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
The best film comedy in years and probably the best service comedy ever made. The story's about three medics during the Korean War who act more like fraternity brothers than officers in the U.S. Army. Their antics make for some of the most unexpected and hilarious moments on screen in a long, long time.

Mata Hari and Ninotchka (Sunday through Tuesday) Campus Cinemas, Hadley
Two more of Greta Garbo's films. The first, from the early thirties, is a somewhat embarassing look at the WWI spy. The latter is one of the most brilliant sophisticated comedies ever made with Garbo's most accomplished performance.

Paper Lion (Monday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
A somewhat funny film about writer George Plimpton's attempt at playing pro-football. He joins the Detroit Lions in training and is a member of the team until an uneventful Cardinals game during the season. The film is nicely low-keyed even using real members of the Lions in its cast.

Patton (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
George C. Scott is nothing less than magnificent in this intelligent and well-done look at a controversial World War II general. The film won seven Oscars, including best screenplay, direction, actor, and picture.

The Priest's Wife (Amherst Cinema)
Sophia Loren and Marcello Mastrionni star in a sad, little film. It attempts to stretch a joke far more than it deserves.

Putney Swope (Wednesday, May 26, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
The best satire in years. Robert Downey's biting attack on both Madison Avenue takes the improbable situation of how a group of blacks take over an ad agency. It focuses in on its targets and makes some scathing, honest cuts.

The Sterile Cuckoo (Monday, May 24, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:20)
Liza Minelli gives one of the most touching performances in quite some time. She plays Pookie, an unconventional college freshman, who falls in love with a young man Wendell Burton and their affair is explored in a funny comedy-drama.

The Stewardesses (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A sex spectacular in three-dimensional vision. See review elsewhere in issue.

The Thomas Crown Affair (Thursday, May 20, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
A most pretentious film. Steve McQueen plays a millionaire who becomes a bank-robber, Faye Dunaway plays a sexy private eye, and they fall in love between heists. As well as being a boring mystery, the film gets hung up on rather absurd existential argument.

The Wild Angels (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7 and 10)
Peter Fonda, Michael J. Pollard, and Nancy Sinatra star in Roger Corman's exploitative film about bikies. It started the trend, despite the fact it's a most obnoxious film all the way around.

Music

Hampshire Choral Society and Pioneer Valley Symphony Orchestra
These combined groups will perform "King David" a symphonic psalm for orchestra, chorus, narattor, and soloists by Arthur Honegger. The performance will be 8:15 on Sunday at the Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College.

Juilliard String Quartet
The internationally acclaimed Juilliard String Quartet will offer the final concert of the Chamber Music Series Bowker Auditorium Wednesday, May 19, at 8 p.m., under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

The noted Quartet will perform "Quartet in A Minor, Opus 74, No. 1" (1826) by Louis Spohr; "Langsamer Satz" (1905) and "Five Movements for String Quartet, Opus 5" (1909) by Anton Webern; and the monumental "Quartet in D Minor, D.810," subtitled "Death and the Maiden," (1826) by Franz Schubert.

Reserved tickets may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, or by contacting the Council at 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert.

The University Chorale
The University Chorale, directed by Richard duBois, and the University Chorus, directed by Alan Harler, will present the annual Spring Choral Concert Sunday, May 16, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The Chorale, will perform works by Henry Purcell, John Redford, Tomas Luis de Victoria, Gabriel Faure, Kirke Mechem, and William Dawson.

Charles Pachelbel's "Magnificat" and Brahms' "Ich Aber B in Elend," two double chorus songs, will be presented by the Chorale and Chamber Singers.

The University Chorus will present three Baroque settings of the chorale, "Wachet Auf Ruft Uns Die Stimme." The first setting is by Franz Tunder. The second setting, by Dietrich Buxtehude, will be performed by the Chorus, Madrigal Singers, and Chamber Orchestra. The third setting is Bach's "Cantata No. 140" and will performed by the Chorus, Chamber Orchestra, and soloists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass-baritone. Leonard Moss of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Concertmaster of the Chamber Orchestra.

This concert is open to the public, free of charge, as one of the UMass music department's continuing series of concerts.

UMass professor Jack Deaver sets the scene in this production shot from the film EITHER WAY. Tom Clark (left), also a UMass professor, wrote the script and starred in the film. Clint Warner (center) plays the film's leading character. It will be shown four more times tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium prior to a national release this summer.

Moyers Discovers Middle America

By ELLIOT EISENBERG
MDC Staff

LISTENING TO AMERICA, A TRAVELER REDISCOVERS HIS COUNTRY, by Bill Moyers, Harpers Magazine Press, $7.95.

Recently there have been a number of people trying to explain the American predicament, a collection of social commentators, each with his own theory. Books such as SURVIVING THE SEVENTIES and THE GREENING OF AMERICA are important, but what Bill Moyers has done stands a better chance of reaching the people one thinks of as middle America.

LISTENING TO AMERICA takes ideas such as the toll of the draft, the struggle of blacks and chicanos for a better life, and the hideousness of the war, and tells them disarmingly through the voices of the young and old citizens Moyers encounters.

Each town is a story: Beaumont, Texas, of a family whose two sons have both chosen to serve in the penitentiary than in the armed forces; San Francisco, of a conflict between the money people and the neighborhood people in the administration of the art program, and the conflicts of one who leaves Chinatown but not her Chinese heritage; in Lawrence, Ka. of a bitter feud between blacks and whites, students and townies.

In East Gary, Indiana, Moyers searches for the tiny office of the Fraternal Association of Steel Haulers, a group which is bucking the might of the Teamsters union. The steel haulers are a different breed of trucker; they don't work for a salary but own their own rigs. "Doesn't the whole country idolize the driver?" one of the truckers asks.

"Doesn't everyone like to get his foot on the accelerator out on the highway? The dream of every red-blooded boy, right? You know you can master that rig...Our guys are like sailors. They sail away in that rig and they come back a week or two weeks later with a percentage of what the ship takes in, whale oil or spice, or in this case, money from the shipper."

In Pine Bluffs, Wyoming, Moyers meets a couple of old-time general practitioners. One of them and his family "do not often get away for an evening. If they leave for a weekend he places an ad in the newspaper announcing that he will not be available. They hope to go to the mountains at Christmas. 'Any time we plan something like that someone decides to have a baby,' Anne Stoetzel says. 'I am tempted to run an ad nine months ahead of time which will say, Dr. Stoetzel will be gone Dec. 21-28. Please take notice and precautions now.'"

What is LISTENING's greatest flaw is also its greatest asset: in the almost whimsical style in which events are put together there is no overriding theme, but the same style also makes Moyers liberal outlook appear palatable for the folks in Desmoines.

It is an optimist's book and it concludes in an optimistic though questioning manner. "I left Houston (the tail-end of the trip)," writes Moyers, "convinced that liberal and conservatives shared three basic apprehensions: they want the war to stop, they do not want to lose their children, and they want to be proud of their country." Which undoubtedly is true, but it's also true that he didn't talk very much to the radicals.

It's That Time Again

By PAT SUPRENANT
MDC Staff

Buffalo Bob Smith of Howdy Doody fame returns here tonight in the Student Union Ballroom with an updated and polished version of his captivating show of twenty years ago.

In the two-hour show, Bob Smith replays a film of his Tenth Anniversary show which features Clarabell the Clown, the Flub-a-Dub, Mr. Phineas T. Buster and Dilly Dally. He also tells behind the scene anecdotes, leads the audience in the old Howdy Doody songs and has a question and answer session afterwards.

In 1940, "Elmer", a character created by Bob Smith for a chatter-and-records show on a Buffalo radio station, was an instant smash and soon became just "Howdy Doody". It was a few years after that "Howdy Doody" ran for President of the kids of the United States on a platform of double-sized banana splits and two Christmasses in every year. When it was over he claimed more write-in votes than Henry Wallace, the former Vice President.

In 1960, the show that children gave up their play and sat on the floor in front of the television screen for came to an end, no longer to be transported to another world with the phrase "Kids what time is it?"

At 8:00 this evening all students will have the opportunity to be a make-shift "Peanut Gallery" and answer, "It's Howdy Doody Time?"

Look Out Ballow

By LLOYD ADALIST
MDC Staff

There's a movie in town at the Cinema 3 called The Stewardesses. The ad says it is taken from a novel that can't be published. I don't believe it.

The movie opens in Hawaii as stewardess #1 is going to her motel room where #2 is getting balled. What you see is typical of the rest of the movie. Some guy's ass going up and down, a chick panting and writhing...

The pilot on the Honolulu to L.A. flight turns things over to his copilot and asks the chief stewardess to send up the new girl for "indoctrination". We get to see this one's thighs and rear end before being cut to the door to the cockpit as she emerges red faced, pulling her little striped uniform down. A rich cat picks another stewardess up and takes her to his pad. It turns out he was a homosexual, as was his boss; that's why he moved up so fast in the firm. They ball...

Still another girl who lives at home finds a note from her parents saying they are away on a trip. She resolves to take a "trip" of her own. Downing the tab of acid with non-fat milk, she gets off at once, proceeds to have sexual fantasies with her lamp whose base is a copy of the head of some ancient Greek.

Another goes out with a soldier. "Oh, it's so terrible you have to go back to Viet Nam." They go to Disneyland and then to bed...

A stewardess who is a lesbian and one who isn't get together, we see a lot of skin...

A pilot picks up still another of our hostesses-of-the-sky at a "uniform party". He takes her out a back exit, they ball and get caught by another cat, there's a fight...

And on and on and on.

If there had been any big name actors, or even if there had been any good acting the movie might have been all right. But I'd never heard of any of these people, never seen any of them even on a TV commercial, and they were all terrible actors. Or if there had been a plot The Stewardesses might have been worth seeing. But the only plot was sex, carried out in every way, shape and form. Nor was there any decent skin. Sure, there was a lot, but mediocre at best.

Or if, the "Three D" process was good, the movie would have been good. But science hasn't perfected this process yet, especially for those who have to wear regular glasses in addition to the special ones the guy gives you as you enter the theatre.

In short, the movie has no redeeming value at all. It's revolting, disgusting, putrid, and just plain bad. Unless your great aunt just died and left you so damn much money you don't know what to do with it all, don't bother to spend the $2.50 it costs to see The Stewardesses.

Eating Out

"I'm Resigned"—Williams

By DAVID WILLIAMS
MDC Staff

Now if you ask Silverman he'll tell you that I stole it from Anthony Spinazzola, but don't believe him. In the first place, Silverman can't read so how would he know, and in the second place, there's no such thing as the Boston Globe.

The Globe-what in the name of the Great Whazoo is the Boston Globe? For God's sake, here I've been eating, drinking and sleeping Daily Collegian for the last three months and the last thing I need is to have anyone, let alone the Great Undecided Himself, stick a newspaper under my nose.

Newspapers, Christ. Do you know why Collegian people always have dirty hands? It's from picking up so many damn papers during the day and looking and weeping. You get ink all over your hands. You laugh and think he's joking, but he's not. Remember the heads? Boy, were we big time in those days. Four bells on the AP machine and Hanson and me rush out back and see that story about the GIs in Laos and go nuts. Later the next day, while I was still trying to recuperate from being such an ass-hole, Pascarelli tries to convince me to jump off a tower. But did we do it again? Of course we did. Remember that unfortunate picture of the black man? That was the clincher. We didn't do it again. We could have just totally blown it at any number of points after that, but we learned to joke around and think of what it might look like, and then not do it.

Ah, but you lean back now and think, who's he kidding? Think yourself. We weren't trying to fool anyone with anything.

It's been fun, these past 57 Collegians. Do you realize what's happened to me in a semester? Through no fault of my own I've become a Celebrity, a campus figure. You can laugh at my mistakes but you can't laugh at me because you made me what I am. You may think I'm kidding, but who read me every time I was in the paper? If you forgive me, I'll forgive you.

So now we all look forward to September. Ann will be wandering back from a bakery on the Cape, Silverman will be sweating in Worcester with a haircut, Bob will be looking for a job and probably moonlighting on the MDC, the other Anne will still be giggling, Barry will be pulling on his mustache still, and just about everyone else will just be there like they are now.

And me? I lost so much weight this semester that I've landed a job as a sewer pipe inspector in Bayonne, New Jersey. Not a very healthy occupation but the pay is good.

Seriously, I've decided to go on a strict fruit and nuts diet, with an occasional side-trip into yogurt, to try to whip myself into shape. My God, I've become so...almost abnormal, that I took Lee Sandwen and Excitable Richard Dinken up on a trip to the Himalayas. They've been so worried about my mental health over the last few months that I figured I owed it to them. My first toe dippings into the real world, so to speak.

The last Hurrah, the final Sheebang, it's almost over. Ed Fenwick Forever! Ed, that paragon of calmness, that quiet reservoir of lucidity. I went to the ASA to watch and ended up El Presidente, Latin American style. All power to the People!

I suppose you're wondering what this has to do with eating out. But that should be clear by now, that's what the whole semester has been.

So long, small fry, it's time to say good-by.

KENT, Ohio.--PULITZER WINNER NEAR THE SCENE--John P. Filo, who won the Pulitzer Prize for news photography, walks down a hill on the campus of Kent State University where he is a student. In the background is the pagoda where National Guardsmen stood when they shot and killed four students during disturbances last year. Filo's winning picture showed a girl bending over a dead student. Lost And Found Policies Establish CC Headquarters

The University Administration through Dr. Bromery, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, has designated the Campus Center the official lost and found headquarters of the University. During the academic year, the lost and found office will be located in the Campus Center check room, located at the bottom of the escalator. Hours of operation for the remainder of this semester will be noon to 5 p.m. daily.

To make the lost and found an effective program, each campus building custodian, each campus department secretary, and each University faculty member must take the responsibility to secure lost and found articles, and see that they are delivered to the Campus Center within 48 hours. Do not hold articles and send them over several weeks later, as we will not accept bulk accumulations.

Valuables such as jewelry, watches, wallets, glasses, and keys, can be mailed in a large manila envelope with a scotch tape and a masking tape seal to the Campus Center lost and found. Send a memo listing each article along with each mailing and keep a copy for yourself.

Library books can be sent through the Campus Mail in care of Goodell Library.

Boxes, bags and bulky packages are not allowed in the Campus Mail. You will have to arrange transportation to the Campus Center.

Student I.D.'s should be mailed to the I.D. office in Hampshire House.

Food Service I.D. cards should be mailed to Joel Stoneham, Worcester Dining Commons.

Lost keys with a University key among them can be sent to Nippy Bray, Physical Plant. He will check the University key serial number for identification and forward them to the owner. All other keys should be sent to the Campus Center lost and found.

Our deadline for holding articles for claim is mid-semester following the semester of loss. The remaining articles will be donated to selected charitable organizations.

Israelis Charged With Hijack Knowledge

MOSCOW—May 12-Tass, the Soviet press agency, said today that the Israeli authorities had been consulted by the group of Soviet Jews accused of plotting last year to hijack a Soviet plane to flee the country.

In a report on the second day of the trial of nine Jews in Leningrad, accused of organized anti-Soviet activity, Tass said that Valdimir O Mogilever, one of the defendants, "was empowered to maintain contacts between the criminal group and Government circles in Israel."

This was the most explicit effort by the Soviet authorities to link the Jews on trial--and the ones convicted last December and those still awaiting trial--with Israel or Zionism. Up to now, Soviet explanations of the trials have been limited to the plan to hijack a plane.

History Dept. Receives Papers, Grants

Latin America, Medieval Catalonia, Arab Nationalism, and the non-Chinese world were among topics of papers and talks presented recently by members of the history department at UMass.

Other department activities include receipt of a $5,000 grant by Mr. John Kazar, doctoral candidate with a specialization in U.S. diplomatic history. The grant, from the Smithsonian Institution, will sponsor Mr. Kazar for one year as visiting reserach associate at the Smithsonian. He will work on scientific discovery and invention as a factor in the nationalism of the Manifest Destiny period, the 1840s and 1850s.

Prof. Lewis Hanke, specialist in Latin American history, has travelled to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe to establish scholarly contacts with Latin American historians there. He has given an address on "Development of Latin American History" before the Institute on Latin American History of the Academy of Sciences in Moscow, and a similar address to the Latin American Institute of Karl Marx University, Leipsig, East Germany.

Prof. Archibald Lewis, department chairman, has delivered a paper titled "Land Tenure and Social Mobility in Medieval Catalonia," to the annual meeting of the Southwestern Social Science Association, at Dallas, Texas. Another talk by Prof. Lewis, to the Medieval Academy at Chapel Hill, N.C., was titled "England as an Atlantic Maritime Power, 1100 to 1330 A.D."

"Arab Nationalism and Israel, 1870 to 1970" is the topic of a talk Prof. George Kirk has given as Joel Smith Memorial Lecturer at Illinois College. Prof. Kirk is a specialist in Middle East history.

At the annual meeting of the New England Historical Association, in Amherst, Associate Prof. Joseph Hernon has delivered a paper titled "The Historian as Politician, M.G.O. Trevelyan as Irish Chief Secretary."

"Hsi Chi-yen's New View of the non-Chinese World" has been discussed by Assistant Prof. Frederick Drake at the annual meeting of the Association for Asian Studies, in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Robert White, at the annual session of the Society for Spanish and Portuguese Historical Studies, at Stony Brook, N.Y., has spoken on "The Roots of Brazilian Colonial Administration in Portugal."

School of Ed. Sponsoring Media Center Workshop

This coming July, the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts will again be organizing a series of workshops for educators. As a part of this summer program, the Media Center is sponsoring a workshop during the week of July 19-23 entitled, "Television and the New Technology: To Educate or Anesthetize." The broad objectives of this week-long session will be to explore the educational impact of current TV programming on children and adults alike, and to discuss strategies for change in view of such currently unfolding technological advances as cassette, cable, videotape, etc.

A group of talented and prominent people from the academic and broadcasting worlds have been invited to contribute to this event. These in-lude:

Nat Rutstein, Director of the Media Center at the UMass School of Education;

Dr. Ray Wyman, Director of the University Audiovisual Center;

Dr. Tim Meyer, Assistant Professor of Speech in Mass Communication at the University;

John Caldwell, Station Manager at WGBY—TV in Springfield;

Judith Challen, member of the Executive Committee of Action for Childrens' Television;

Michael Shamberg, a founder of Raindance Corporation, a New York based alternative TV group; and,

Russ Tornabene, General Manager at NBC News.

In addition, staff members and graduate students of the Media Center will spend considerable time helping workshop members with hands-on experience in half-inch video.

Of particular interest to citizens living in westernMassachusettswill be a panel discussion on Thursday evening, July 22, which will bring together Mrs. Challen and Mssrs. Rutstein, Tornabene and Shamberg who will discuss the strengths, weaknesses and possibilities of television from the points of view of the organizations they represent.

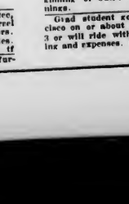
After 13 Years

SPRINGFIELD, MASS (AP)—A Springfield man who was forced to drop out of college 13 years ago when he suffered a near-fatal illness, has been named class valedictorian at American International College.

Joseph Siciliano will deliver the class of 1971 address on May 29.

While attending Columbia University in 1958 Siciliano suffered a massive pulmonary embolism, a lung ailment from which doctors said he probably would not recover.

His recovery took a year, including six months on his back. But in 1968, he returned to college as a full-time student, once again able to walk freely. He now enjoys hiking the Appalachian Trail in the Berkshires.



He plans graduate work with a goal of becoming a college professor. A history major, he is a recent recipient of a Woodrow Wilson fellowship.

First Judo Team Completing At N.E.

On Saturday May 15th the first New England Intercollegiate Judo Championship will be held at Northeastern University. The Univ of Mass will be sending a five man team to enter the competition. Black belt Bill Stevens will head the team as the coach, with Brown Belts Bob Tomolillo, Carl Berger and Al Speckin leading the team. Steve Jenkins and Charles Lingley will be fighting as 4th and 5th men. Jenkins and Lingley are both white belts but have good size and quickness.

This will be UMass's first year with a Judo Team. Schools that will be competing are Northeastern, Boston, Univ., Colby, MIT and several schools from Connecticut. The matches are conducted under single elimination and on the ladder basis.

Presently Judo on this campus has not been a sport highly regarded by the students. Possibly this competition plus the Phys Ed classes taught by Stevens, Berger and Tomolillo will raise the enthusiasm of this intriguing sport.

Envir. And Tech Conf. Results Being Compiled

Proceedings of a landmark conference on technology and environmental quality are being compiled and published by the Technical Guidance Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The conference, the first of its kind in this state, was held May 6 and 7 in Wakefield. It was jointly sponsored by the University of Massachusetts through Commonwealth Technical Resource Service (COMTECH) at the School of Engineering and the Technical Guidance Center, with the Massachusetts Audubon Society and the Massachusetts Society of Professional Engineers.

Requests for the published proceedings are now being received. Compilation and publishing is expected to take over a month.

Papers were delivered by three University faculty. Dr. John H. Foster, director of the Center for International Agricultural Studies, discussed the impact of economic motivation in a paper entitled "Economics and the Environment."

Dr. Howard D. Segool, director of COMTECH, examined the dominance of society's subsystems - economic, institutional, governmental, political, and individual human behavior - in encouraging technological innovations which affect our environment, in a paper entitled "Technology Assessment: Processes of Choice."

Amh. Recorder Society Sponsoring Workshop

The Amherst Recorder Society is sponsoring a Recorder Workshop to be conducted by LaNoue Davenport. The workshop will be held on Saturday, May 15 at the Amherst College Music Building from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. A registration fee of $5 per adult or $2.50 per student will be charged. Participants are asked to bring instruments but music will be available for purchase at the workshop. The varied program planned by Mr. Davenport will include lecture demonstrations on the elements of recorder playing, Music of the Renaissance, both polyphonic music and dance music, as well as modern music for recorders. Such a workshop has not been held recently in this area and should be of interest to many people. Attendance is open to anyone interested and those desiring more details may call Deborah Hendel at 253-5751.

La Noue Davenport is a well known scholar and performer in the field of Renaissance Music. He was an original member of the Pro Musica Antiqua of New York and has played and recorded considerably with it and the Manhattan Consort. He plays not only the recorder but many other Medieval instruments and is an expert on the instrumentation and ornamentation of that period. He currently teaches and performs in New York City and participates in numerous summer workshops on early music.

New Plan For Returning Dishes To Commons

The Student Senate Food Services Committee announces a plan to make it easier for students to return dishes and silverware which they have "borrowed" over the past year. There will be collection receptacles placed in all head of residence apartments, where members of the Food Service Committee will collect them and return them to the Dining Commons.

According to Food Service Director Joel Stoneham, the Dining Commons must spend some $80,000 a year on replacement dishes. Because the only source of revenue is students' meal tickets, this sum must be considered when determining the annual meal ticket rates. The missing utensils also create problems on a day-to-day basis, when it is common to have a shortage of silverware. It is unfortunate that those who take silverware do not consider the effects of their actions on others. The problems of missing silverware and dishes become compounded when they are not returned at the end of the year.

In considering ways to get the lost dishes back, the committee brought out that there is considerable embarrassment on the part of the person bringing back dishes which he has taken. Compounding this problem is the fact that in May, few people wear overcoats, so that slipping the dishes back in becomes a problem. The best solution, it was felt, would be to place receptacles in each head of residence apartment, allowing the dishes to be returned with a minimum of embarassment and inconvenience.

The Dishes Return plan was instituted by the Food Service Committee in an effort to enable students to do something about reducing the cost of meal tickets. The committee has been active all year, and has helped make many decisions of Food Service policy, including the 10-meal ticket, and the questionnaire which was distributed last November. It is hoped that students will make use of this opportunity to return their Dining Commons dishes and silverware, and that they will realize that failure to do so will only mean that they are "forking" themselves.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

A Scorpio without charm can be a worrisome thing, but Scorpio with charm can reach almost any goal. Scorpio harmonizes with Cancer, Pisces, Capricorn and Virgo. Those born under Pisces find Scorpio physically attractive, while Libra individuals find Scorpio lucky for them in financial affairs. Scorpio is aided in career matters by Leo persons.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Gain co operation of those in authority. If you proceed in arrogant manner, expect legal roadblocks. You now need to combine efforts with one you respect. No time to go it alone.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stress versatility. Accent now is on reaching a decision. But realize there are alternatives. Don't back yourself in corner. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ask questions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Children may act in manner which causes concern. Be fair but firm. Pull in reins when reasonable action is threatened. Money requests should be viewed with care. Take your time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low. Be willing to make changes. Mate or partner should be permitted to set pace. Refuse to permit false pride to stand in way of progress. Welcome suggestions. Be perceptive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Hold off on short journeys, if practical. Some relatives are argumentative. Seek harmony; steer clear of senseless disputes. Family member offers constructive advice. Follow it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be deceived in financial area. Key is to see situation in realistic light. May not be easy, but this is necessary. Romance is in picture. Give logic equal time with emotions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tension may exist in domestic area. You tend now to feel closed in, restricted. Avoid temptation to be extravagant. Member of opposite sex could have ulterior motive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel, visits are emphasized in connection with co workers, associates. Finish what you start. Unusual relationship may terminate. Look beyond the immediate. Consider potential.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): New approach could improve income possibilities. Stress independence, but conserve assets. Some may try to part you from money. Be alert. Do your own thinking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You tend now to brood. Realize that future rather than past should hold main consideration. Study. Cancer message. Emphasize your personality without appearing arrogant.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can get needed assistance by subtle methods. Keep confidential dealings private. Many now are drawn to intrigue. Satisfy that desire. Entertain in out of way places.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on how well you can work with tools at hand. Be self-sufficient. Friends who make promises may not have necessary bankroll. Know this and act accordingly. Be practical.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a warm, giving individual, but you prefer to make your own decisions. Means you rebel when others attempt to force their views. You have begun project which should bear fruit as early as July. Currently, you are undergoing minor domestic crisis. A bit of home redecorating, possible residence change may be in order.

A Salute To Warren McGuirk

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

This being the final issue for the 1970-71 edition of the MDC, right here's the proper place to pay tribute to the man who's been dynamite in revolutionizing university sports standards to where UMass ranks near the top of the poll with the opposition that it encounters. He's been a tophight administrator who has been instrumental in the installation of many athletic facilities in the later years. And his stress on physical education as an integral part of the student's academic life has led faculty members to commend his contributions to the campus culture.

The man, of course, is Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Educati n and Director of Athletics at the University of Massachusetts. He's the one who's used as a scape goat when Boyden unloads a blunder. He's the one who averts credit when he has it coming.

Now in his 23rd year as Boyden's senior citizen, McGuirk's retirement papers are due to be acknowledged on January 2, 1971 (his birthday). He plans to disembark from his office three days earlier.

Since his arrival in the fall of 1948, Massachusetts' sporting scene has taken on a completely different outlook in a variety of ways. Take a UMass alumnus from the class of 58', bring him back here, and he'd have no trouble in pointing out sizable advancements in athletic facilities as compared to when he attended the university.

The Women's Physical Education Building (1958), the Boyden Gymnasium (1963), the football stadium (1966), and the new track facility (1970) are but a few of the new additions which have marked the considerable construction, not to mention the new tennis courts and the relocation and the extension of the intramural fields.

With McGuirk's cooperation, the intramural program has come to be known as the best of its kind in New England, allowing more people than ever before to participate in the sports they like. For the first time next year a woman will be employed to assist Ted Schmitt and Peter Graham with the women's phase of the athletic intramural program.

If you think that's all that has changed, look at the great strides UMass has made in intercollegiate sports. They've come a long way, baby. And it's probably no accident that it all started to take place during the dean's tenure. Fine athletes and great coaches have flocked here in abundance. The teams from all sports have been steadily improving and the competition they face is getting better all the time.

People most often associate McGuirk with the honor of appointing coaches and the dirty job of firing them. True, he does have a major say in that matter, but not without due consultation with the athletic council, top administrators, and chancellor, etc...As he puts it: "I'm not an island within myself."

Dean McGuirk takes pride in the coaches who work within the Redman system. Afterall, with the exception of oldtime veterans Joe Rogers and Steve Kosakowski, he's handpicked everyone at the present time. McGuirk, by the way, is the third oldest active member of the University Sports Department right behind Rogers (40) and Kosakowski (26).

"I think we've got the best coaches in the Northeast, declared McGuirk. I think we're quite fortunate to have these type of men identified with the University of Massachusetts. They're wonderful practitioners in every way.

"What I particularly like about them is that they're concerned primarily with the normal academic progress of the student-athlete. They're interested and motivate the young men working under them to pursue that degree.

"Secondly and of importance, these men are concerned with fulfilling their commitments to projective scheduling. And that has become a real challenge because each program in the last decade has become more difficult in the quality of the teams that are structured into the athletic schedules. In other words, right now we are playing the best schools in New England and are extendingourselves into the Northeast."

McGuirk recalls that the Athletic Council and the subcommittee on the board of trustees got together in 1959 and reasoned that UMass's intercollegiate athletic future would include scheduling.

"So consistant with the recommendations of these two groups, we proceeded. We wanted to be in competition with the best schools in Massachusetts, the cream of the crop in the New England states, and selective schools in the Northeast. This has been a real responsibility. These coaches have accepted it and I'm not gonna bore you with their records. They've been outstanding.

"And the player personnel, don't forget our players. We've been very fortunate over the years in having some very fine athletes represent us in intercollegiate sports. And I'm not just talking about baseball, basketball, and football. I'm talking about all 17 sports."

McGuirk's athletic background dates back to his boyhood where at Dorchester High School he established a fine reputation as a three sports standout. A stay at St. Anselm's Preparatory School was sandwiched inbetween his Dorchester days and entrance to Boston College. At B.C. his asset to the Eagles as a tackle was valuable as the club compiled perfect records in 1926 and 1928. He captained the squad in the later campaign.

Upon graduation in 1929 McGuirk gave it a try in pro ball with Jimmy Conzelman's Providence Steamrollers of the old National League. When he decided to hang up the spikes he launched a nine year career as teacher-coach at Malden High School. He later took charge as Director of Physical Education and Athletics.

In the service it was where McGuirk received a sound foundation for his position to come at UMass. From 1942-46 he did his time in the Navy, serving as Athletic Director at Quonset Point Naval Air Station and at the Naval Air Station in Jacksonville, Fla. He was discharged with the rank of Commander.

Upon entering Boston University Graduate School, he earned his Master's Degree in 1948. He also did graduate work at Boston College and Harvard.

The many offices he has held on National committees and councils are countless and no doubt have attributed to his successful work at the university. Just to list a few: president of the Eastern College Athletic Conference (1958), member of the ECAC Executive Committee (1959-60), vice president in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (1959-62), NCAA Television Committee (1954-59), NCAA Elegibility Committee (1960), and the NCAA's NCAA Nominating, Committee (1960), and the NCAA's official representative to the U.S. Olympic Committee (1958). McGuirk is presently a member of the 10-man Honors Court of the National Foundation which selects collegiate Football players for the Hall of Fame.

There are certainly other organizations he has held membership with in the past. But space just doesn't allow to list them. As you can see Warren McGuirk has been a very busy man.

What does the dean want to do after retirement? "I want to do some traveling, maybe devote a little more time to developing my golf techniques. I've got 25 things that I haven't had the chance to do in the last 45 years, including plans that my wife Virginia has.

"I've been a lucky person to have had the opportunity of working at this fine university. It was the greatest possible break of my life to have been affiliated with UMass for so long, particularly during this period of growth. I've met some wonderful folks here."

Steve Kosakowski Goes On With What It Takes---- A Big Heart And Determination In His 26th Year

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

It's not uncommon for people who are born with all the physical capabilities and attributes and then some to throw all their potential talent against the wall. To these folks I suggest a chat with UMass tennis mentor Steve Kosakowski, a guy who when stressed by an enormous handicap which would put most of us on the sidelines, has battled it all the way down the line with an improvision of sheer determination and desire.

The handicap of which I speak is blindness. In Coach Kosakowski's case it's not quite total, not yet at least. For the past to years now, Glaucoma has gradually imperiled his eye sight. By the time the disease had been detected it was too late for Steve. And as a result his vision has dwindled down to just shadow proportions in one eye. Medical men hope to have at least stabilized this condition. How well they've succeeded is uncertain.

Kosakowski says he doesn't want to be looked upon as a martyr. But it would be very belittling to forget the visual limitations he's had to contend with. His record speaks for itself. In 23 years with the UMass netmen he has guided them to 10 Yankee Conference crowns and his squads carried a hefty 139-56 slate coming into this season.

He's had two unbeaten clubs, in 60 (7-0) and 60 (5-0). And in times of crisis when his sight failed him, UMass copped back-to-back YanCon titles ('68-'69). What more could you ask from any coach, regardless of sport.

In regard to his present condition Kosakowski remarked: "I don't find it so much as a problem for coaching or teaching. But it does present a problem when it comes down to enjoying the everyday pleasures of life. Mentally, you have to accept it. You can't stand around brooding over it or else you're done for. Playing the sport since childhood, it hasn't actually bothered me in that respect. I think if anything, I have to be more precise now than ever."

And if it boiled down to the unfortunate occurence where Steve would lose the little he has left: "I think I'd try, it would be a dam good challenge. But I think I'd give it a try before throwing in the towel.

"My mind is regarding circumstances with my health. I have no reasons to retire and I will continue on as long as I'm able. And I hope that I can reach the retirement age, whatever that is."

The life-long Amherst resident started his tennis playing while a nine-year-old youth at the Amherst College Courts. An all around athlete in his teens, Amherst High School didn't have a tennis team, so he played for all he was worth in other sports. A quarterback for the grid team, a catcher-third baseman in baseball, and the hoop squad's captain and guard-all rolled up in one.

A year at Kent Hill Prep School (Maine) and two more at UMass' Stockbridge School of Agriculture immediately followed his schoolboy days. Holding a forward post for the Torrington Red Wings during the 1941-42 season, he helped the Connecticut State Hockey titlists represent the Nutmeg State in the National AAU Tournament in New Haven.

In war time Kosakowski showed as much devotion to his country as he would toward any sport he ever participated in. Serving four and one-half years in the Anti-Aircraft Division of the United States Army, he eclipsed the longest length of time spent by any Amherst serviceman during World War II. After three years of active duty in New Guinea and six months in Australia, he was discharged at the rank of First Sergeant.

Appointed Athletic Director at Stockbridge in 1945, Kosakowski coached every sport the Aggies ever had. He likes to joke about the baseball team which he organized at the request of students, and it didn't quite get off the ground. Interest slacked off so much that by the third game, Kosakowski himself was called upon to handle the catching chores. Right there was the end of the road for the squad as they were forced to cancel the remainder of the schedule.

In 1949 Kosakowski's tennis tenure officially commenced at the university with a 5-5 record. Having been a professional tutor at the Stockbridge Country Club, his vast knowledge of tennis took effect the following spring as the Redmen posted a 6-3 ledger and landed their first Yankee Conference Crown. Then in a span of nine years, beginning with 1955, his clubs won seven Conference titles. Such success has never been seen in any other university sport. The record in that time was a dandy, 58-18.

Besides his invaluable efforts to the netmen program, Kosakowski was also a UMass coach with a different type of net, that being attached to the posts on a hockey rink, except UMass never had and still hasn't one. Having had previous experience at the game UMass asked him to take the task as a fill-in. For the first time since 1938 he got the puck rolling in 1947 as hockey once again became an established program. With a brief spell of inactivity in the early 50's Kosakowski was looked upon to get the program started again.

Putting in 13 seasons before his eye condition forced him to reluctantly resigned from the puck station, his "ice-less wonders" compiled a not too impressive 73-118-4 log. But the conditions they had to put up with were so sick that it was hilarious.

"We most often played on the campus pond, but when it wasn't available we were like gadabouts, he recalls. Hockey in those days was played by a bunch of kids who wanted to play. It was simply a holding company for the kids who wanted it bad enough."

Well, how about the future of UMass Tennis? "We'll expect much the same success in the days to come. We'll win our fair share of matches. I'm not being cocky but we should continue to have good years. I think my kids are coming better prepared than they used to. I think in these 23 years I've had only two losing clubs. Since 1954 we haven't finished lower than second in the Yankee Conference.

"The difference in our level of tennis compared to the Ivy League level is sizable. We can hold our own and give a good match with them, but it would be fictitious to say we're as good as they are. They just have the better background. Maybe once we can develope special programs for the young people in our own vicinity we can contend with them. The Ivy Leagues have it all the time and it makes a difference."

For a man as disabled as Steve Kosakowski, his accomplishments are really something to marvel at. And if deep down inside it's equal stature with the Ivy League that he desires, don't bet against it. For as long as Mr. Kosakowski remains his cool-headed self, it will be another decade before he's sitting in the grandstand with fellow rooters.

Jayvee Baseball Nine Completes Season Tomorrow

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

Having ironed out a host of unfavorable elements in the last few weeks, the UMass JV's, now 7-5 overall hope to finish their season on a 6 game win skein with a season ending twin bill at home with Springfield College tomorrow at 1 p.m.

At present the yearlings have ripped off four straight wins including a pair this week. On Tuesday Ken Brewer hammered a towering homerun over the left field fence to lift the hosts to a 7-6 ballgame with a pair in the ninth, but was only foiled by Larry Heron's run scoring single in the bottom of the frame.

In the Springfield affair, originally washed out as a Saturday twinbill, ace lefty Steve Merrill went all the way for his sixth start and third win against two losses. But the ace lefty needed the hot bats of Earl Manley, Ken Brewer, and Larry Heron to get over the hump.

Manley, sent down by coach Bergquist for more seasoning, rifled a two run single in the eighth to knot the count at 2-2. But the visitors went atop in the top of the tenth 3-2, but were only disheartened by Larry Heron's clutch two out run scoring single. Then in the thirteenth Brewer sent Springfield home a loser with a shot that dipped over the wall in left bringing victory No. 6 in grasp.

Iron man Merrill went all the way for the 5th time in six starts. In 13 frames Merrill scattered a dozen hits, fanned seven, and walked but one hitter in registering the win.

It looked like successive extra inning games in as many days as Quinsigamend CC rallied to tie the score at 7 with a pair in the ninth. But Larry Heron came through in the clutch again as he remedied the situation with a run scoring single to left center.

Pinchitter Tony Serino started the rally with

As the season crawls on its last leg, coach Ray Wilson is notably pleased with the overall performance of his squad. "Taking everything into consideration, we've had a very successful season. I'm just hoping we can end it all with six straight wins".

Tracksters Host YanCon Meet

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Given the nod as the pre-meet favorite UMass will play host to the 24th Annual Yankee Conference Track and Field Championships tomorrow. The Redmen, behind an impressive Spring season, are expected to regain the title that they lost last year to UConn at New Hampshire.

The Redmen will have additional initiative in this meet as they have finished second to UConn in three consecutive Yankee Conference Track Championships. The hammer will be the first event of the day, and will go off at 10:30. At 1:30 the dedication of the new track will take place, which will include brief ceremonies in memory of Llewelyn Derby, a former UMass track coach. The meet will resume at 2:00 with the running of the 440 yard relay.

UMass has been made the favorite because of the fact that it did establish its superiority over UConn and Rhode Island during the season. UConn and Rhode Island are considered the only two teams in the meet who could pose a threat to the UMass hopes. The Redmen swept the Huskies three weeks ago 85-69, and came back last Tuesday to crush the Rams 91-63.

UMass finished the dual meet season with a deceiving 7-3 record. Two of the UMass losses came in the last event, the mile relay. Also all three losses can be traced to the absence of key personnel.

The meet will feature eight champions who will defend their titles. If there is good weather, and with the key competition involved, all 18 conference records will be in jeopardy.

UConn and Rhode Island should control the throwing events. Eddie Arcaro is the favorite in the shotput. He recently set a new school record in the shot with a 55 foot toss which is the top mark in the conference this year. Arcaro should also be a prime contender in the hammer. The javelin team of Rocco Petitto, Gil Sylvia and Jim Queeny will provide a potent nucleus in the direction of scoring potential for the Redman cause.

Ed Shaughnessy is coming off his strongest performance of the Spring last Tuesday, and should prove a definite factor in the high jump and triple jump. Rip Dyer has shown consistent form in the long jump throughout the season, and should contend for a top spot in the competition.

Ron Harris has proven himself one of the top sprinters in New England. He will double in the 100 yard dash and 220, and will be the favorite in both events. Harris will probably receive his strongest competition from teammate Tony Pendleton. Pendleton recently broke the school record in the 100 with a 9.7 clocking. Pendleton's time is one of the fastest recorded this Spring in New England. The 440 relay team lost to URI in their only match to date, but UMass will be the favorite to prevail in a renewed battle.

Jim Graves has come on in the last part of the season to unseat Gerry Spellman as the team's number one hurdler. Graves and Spellman will be continuing their battle in the 120 high hurdles against arch-rival Peter Wilkens of Rhode Island. Graves, Spellman and Wilkens represent three of the finest hurdlers in New England.

Dave Evans is considered the premiere half miler in the Yankee Conference. He will receive his chief competition from UConn's Jim Verdon. Evans and Verdon have had some great battles in the past, and should be ready to unreel another one tomorrow.

The mile and two mile will feature a battle between the young and the old. Senior Ron Wayne will be the favorite in both events. Wayne will receive strong competition from teammate Doug O'Connell, a freshman. O'Connell took up the slack of the distance running during Wayne's sickness and short absence. O'Connell could challenge Wayne in either the mile or two mile.

Western-Mass War Today

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

If the weather forecast for today is correct then UMass and Springfield will be able to fight it out for the mythical "championship of Western Massachusetts" in a game that now has the purpose of preparing both squads for big weekend doubleheaders.

Yesterday's rain storm almost wiped the game completely from the Redman schedule which would have put to an end any chance that the baseball team had of bypassing the basketball team in number of seasonal wins.

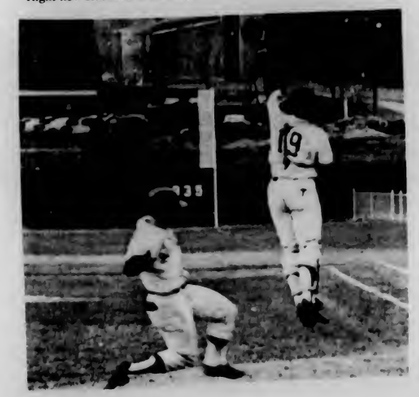
There has been this rivalry between coaches Bergquist and Leaman over the years as to whose team could win the most games. If the diamond nine can win their last six games it will give them 24 wins, one more than the hoopsters.

As for the remainder of the baseball regular season the Redmen have four conference games to play and one game against Harvard. These four league games will decide the extent of the UMass baseball season.

Tomorrow the Redmen host Rhode Island in a doubleheader beginning at 12:30 at Lorden Field. Earlier in the season the Rams were smoked by UMass at their home field at Kingston. This is a two game set as UConn has a three game series with Maine at Orono which could pose a number of problems for the Huskies. Winning all three in Black Bear country is a task for any team.

As far as the Monday game with Harvard is concerned it will be played like the Dartmouth game in that Bergquist will use it as preparation for the big doubleheader with UConn on Wednesday.

Right now Harvard is waiting to see if it will make the playoffs in the Eastern League. The Crimson have finished their league play at 9-5. Cornell stands at 7-4 and if the Big Red win all three games this weekend and then Harvard stays home. If they lose one then there's a playoff and so forth.



If Harvard does somehow make the playoff or outright wins the league then Monday's game will be a psyche nature as both teams could face each other in the District One playoffs. But if the Crimson fail to make the playoffs they'll be out to kill which will be coincidental to the Redmen.

Wednesday is the big day in New England College baseball as the Redmen travel to Storrs for the big doubleheader with UConn. There are all kinds of combinations that could result after this weekend series that both teams have. But as of now these two games boil down to deciding the winner of the Yankee Conference.

From here it remains whether the Redmen can advance to the District One Playoffs and then on to Omaha. There's a tough road ahead for coach Bergquist and his players. Many combinations remain to be unravelled as far as District One baseball is concerned.

The only thing that can be certain is that there will be a Yankee Conference Champion at Storrs on Wednesday, a New England champ a few days later and a trip to the College World series in the middle of the second week in June for the District Champ.

With the publication of the Collegian coming to an end today the only means to find out the final outcome in the Redman bid for another trip to Omaha would be to get out to the ball park and see UMass in action. So make the trip to Storrs on Wednesday. Game time is 1 p.m.

HIGH FLYING REDMAN: Billy Ryan (19) is emblematic (so to speak) of the high-flying UMass baseball team. Ryan has been sharing the catching duties with Tom McDermott and Kerry Daly. The Redmen play Springfield at home today and face Rhode Island in a crucial Yankee Conference doubleheader Saturday. If things go as they should, District I playoff hopes will rest solely on the crucial twinbill at UConn on Wednesday, May 19. (Ed Mangiaratti photo.)

Gorillas Face MIT In N-East Title Game

NE Rugby Tomorrow

Nearly 500 rugby players will assemble at UMass/Amherst on Saturday, May 15 to open the Second Annual New England Rugby Football Union Tournament. Hosted by the UMass RFC, the tourney will feature over 25 games to be played on Saturday and Sunday at UMass and Amherst College fields. Play begins at 9 a.m. Saturday morning and ends with the championship game slated to start at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday.

College and club teams from New England and New York are entered. The potent club teams, such as Boston Fusts, perennially a top club in U.S. rugby circles, Beacon Hill, last year's tourney victor, less experienced but equally capable college XV's feature UMass, Dartmouth, Tufts, Holy Cross, Boston College and Amherst among others. If a tourney favorite exists, it would be Boston. UMass has a particularly difficult draw. The Redmen ruggers will have to get by Providence to have a crack at the powerful Boston side. Beacon Hill, featuring All-American Bill Foy from Amherst is perhaps the next strongest side. Harvard Business School with many former collegiate athletes should field the strongest college side, although former college champions Amherst, on the crest of their decisive victory over UMass, should present a formidable obstacle to any club it faces.

The UMass club, whose performance has been mixed throughout the spring season, is expected to regain its early season form. Captain Frank Boksanske scored six tries in two games during the Harvard Seven-a-Sides tourney last week. Mark Obenoweth and Bill Kesgen are ready for their run at the N.E. title. UMass expects the return of several injured players, Craig Lovell, Steve McElroy, and Craig Schiff. The UMass tourney, the highlight of Redmen rugby, will see ten UMass players don their red and white barrel-hoop jerseys for the last time. John Long, a member of the first rugby contingent at UMass, having captained the UMass side last year, plays his last set of games before going to Medical School. Dale Toohey, player-coach, leaves for England next fall.

The tournament games are open to all spectators. There is no admission charge for the games to be played on the fields west of Boyden.

Hinson Leads

HOUSTON AP—Ben Hogan ballooned to 11-over-par before he withdrew while Kermit Zarley and Larry Hinson tied for the first-round lead in the $125,000 Houston Champions Invitational Golf Tournament Thursday.

Zarley, a hometown hero who was assessed a two-stroke penalty, and the slim, blond Hinson each had a 67, four under par on the tough, 7,166-yard Champions Golf Club course.

The 58-year-old Hogan, legendary winner of four U.S. Open titles, was making his first competitive start of the season, and was trailed by a large enthusiastic gallery.

He had trouble on both the first two holes, then shot himself out on the fourth, a long par three.

His gallery groaned as he pumped one, then another, then a third shot into a ravine and finished with a nine on the hole.

Dave Hill had a 69 for fourth place and the large group at 70 included defending champion Gibby Gilbert, Chi Chi Rodriguez, Homero Blancas and a former Masters champion Bob Goalby and several others.

Arnold Palmer had a 71, Masters champion Charles Coody a 72 and Lee Trevino shot a 76.

The 25-year-old Hinson had a string of four birds in a row, beginning on the seventh. He rolled in a seven-foot putt there, made it from 20 feet on the next, had a two-foot bird on a par five ninth and holed an eight-footer on the 10th.
